Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back the bill (H. R. 339) for the relief of J. E. Pilcher; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. 1251) to amend section 714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was ordered to be laid on the table and the accompanying report printed.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS.

Mr. SENEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1709) to regulate the practice in causes removed from State courts; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS FROM COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. DIBBLE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, submitted a report concerning the consideration of business reported by that committee; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of committees for reports is completed. The Chair will now call committees for the consideration of bills for one hour, which begins at twenty minutes past 12 o'clock.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT MELBOURNE.

Mr. BELMONT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution which was under consideration yesterday.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the joint resolution the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 72) relating to the invitation of the British Government to the Government of the United States to participate in the international exhibition at Melbourne to celebrate the founding of New South Wales.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment is pending, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, in line 5, section 1, by striking out the word "fifty" and inserting the word "five;" so that if amended as proposed it will read "five thousand dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. When the hour for consideration of bills expired yesterday the committee was dividing on this amendment.

Mr. MCADOO. If I may be permitted, I will say to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs that I withdraw my demand of yesterday for tellers, and I ask him if he will allow me three minutes to explain further the amendment I have offered.

Mr. BELMONT. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the demand for tellers is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. MCADOO. I am aware that this measure is not of sufficient importance to take up the time of the House by mere dilatory motions, and I have therefore withdrawn my call for a quorum. I desire, however, in support of the amendment which I have offered, to say one or two words somewhat by way of criticism on the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that there is now before that committee an invitation from the Republic of France that the United States join them in celebrating one of the most important events in the annals of history—in the record of the struggles of mankind toward universal democracy—the fall of the Bastile, and I am surprised, after reading an interview in the newspapers purporting to have been held with the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which, if true, does him infinite credit, that a resolution preceding this one relating to the invitation of the British Government should not have been offered to this House that this nation join heartily with our former allies and friends of the French Republic in that, I trust, magnificent celebration of so great an event in the history of the human race in its struggles for liberty against class, caste, and feudalism.

Mr. BELMONT. Will the gentleman from New Jersey permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. MCADOO. Certainly.

Mr. BELMONT. I desire to say that the invitation of the French Government did not precede the invitation now under consideration. I will also say to my friend from New Jersey that I did hold such an interview as he has referred to, and my personal sympathy and feeling in regard to accepting the invitation of the French Government is very great, and I trust that at an early day the House will have a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs recommending the acceptance of that invitation. I have on my desk at present a bill to present to the House, asking the House to accept it.

Mr. MCADOO. I am very glad to know that—and for this reason: It is a fact known to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and to all intelligent newspaper readers in this country that there has been and there is a premeditated effort on the part of the jealous monarchical governments of Europe whose thrones are menaced by her teachings and example to bring about a sort of international boycott of this French celebration; and if the greatest Republic in Europe, which has successfully maintained itself against internal conspiracies, dissensions, and intrigues, as well as external force and malice, our ancient friend and gallant ally, who supported us in our memorable struggle for liberty with an unselfishness and generosity I think unequaled in history—if she is to be left to struggle because of her republican convictions against this interdict, this attempt to suppress her celebration without the generous support of this great Republic, it would be highly discreditable to us as a free and liberty-loving people. I am therefore very glad to hear this morning the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

My only criticism was, Mr. Chairman, that I thought, without regard to the time at which these invitations had been received by our Government, that the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives of the American Republic should have cheerfully given precedence in this House to a resolution to join in the celebration of that glorious event in the history of France, in preference to the acceptance of an invitation from the British Government and spending $50,000 to assist in adding to the attractiveness and pleasure of a British colonial exhibition.

Mr. BELMONT. Will the gentleman permit me to say that the French exhibition is to be held in 1889, and the exhibition which is contemplated in this resolution is to be held this year, in the month of August, and therefore it was necessary we should take up the matter without delay?

Mr. MCADOO. Preparations will have to be made in advance for the French centennial exhibition; but I accept the statement of the gentleman from New York, and withdraw the demand for a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment submitted by the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Chairman, this joint resolution is a proposition that the United States Government shall participate in an international exposition to be held in Australia in honor of the centenary of the settlement of one of the Australasian provinces. It proposes that for the expenses of this participation the United States shall appropriate $50,000. The United States may or may not participate in this exposition. It may not participate, and may refuse to do so without prejudice, in my opinion, to the relations which now subsist between the two countries; but if it does participate, then I think we are bound by every principle of prudence and of self-respect to participate in a creditable manner. It is the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, it is the opinion of the State Department, that $50,000 is the smallest appropriation which would enable the United States to act in a manner which would not reflect discredit upon our participation in the enterprise. When a man or a nation steps outside of the line of business and undertakes to do something in the domain of friendship or of display, if it is done at all, it should be done well. Of such a nature is this enterprise; and I urge it upon the committee that, if it decides that we take part in this exposition at all, it shall vote at least $50,000. If we are not willing to expend $50,000, then let us make no appropriation, and let the whole matter die an easy and natural death.

In favor of participation is the fact that these expositions have generally been thought and generally been found to encourage and develop social and business relations. Business relations are what we want to promote and strengthen with the colonies of Australasia. The friendly feeling already existing is marked. The business relations which we wish to strengthen are already begun. The friendship is manifested by the act which was cited yesterday—an act of extraordinary generosity on the part of that government; I wish we could imitate it—the fact that the Australian provinces are now paying $150,000 a year to American steamships for carrying the mail between their country and ours; and as for the birth and growth of business, we have only to note that when in 1880 there was an exhibition at Melbourne in which we participated, the trade between this country and Australasia was less than $5,000,000. Five years afterwards the amount was $12,000,000. This, certainly, is good ground to cultivate, and these are the circumstances under which the House is to determine whether they wish to continue to cultivate or to withhold their hands. Participation in an exposition is not the best or the most efficient method of cultivating these relations, but it is one of them, and better than none. A method which many of us think is better and more direct is to follow the example of the Australasian provinces, and to send American steamships, fairly paid, to seize the markets which offer an opening over there for our surplus products.

But if we can not use that method, let us do this. In any case I repeat my appeal to the gentlemen of the committee, if you undertake to participate in this exposition at all, vote $50,000. Vote either that or nothing. With $50,000 we can make a creditable appearance. I do not claim we can do more, and my friend from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] was correct when he said yesterday that $250,000 could be well and profitably expended in this way. If we expended that sum we could avail ourselves fully of this fine opening for the cultivation of business and social relations; but it was the opinion of the committee, it was the opinion of the Department of State, that this House would not be willing to do more in the premises, if it did anything, than to vote just the sum which would save our appearance from being discreditable. We can do that with $50,000. Remember, it ought to be $50,000 or nothing.

Mr. MCADOO. My colleague did not state quite correctly what I said yesterday. What I did say was that $50,000 was too much for nothing and too little for anything, and that in my opinion it would take $250,000 to represent us properly at that exposition; but I did not say that I thought the $250,000 could be expended with great profit there.

Mr. PHELPS. I did not mean to represent my colleague as stating more than what he has again stated for himself. The only difference, then, in judgment between my colleague and myself seems to be this: He does not think $50,000 would be sufficient to enable this Government to make a creditable appearance in this exposition. That opinion is not shared by the Department of State or by the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and as they have given investigation and consideration to the subject, it seems to me that this Committee of the Whole House had better rely upon them.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask a question for information. Can the gentleman in charge of this bill tell us what use is proposed to be made of this $50,000; whether it is to be used to make a Government exhibit, or to assist citizens in making an American exhibit?

Mr. BELMONT. To assist citizens in making their exhibits and to pay the salaries of the commissioners. It is, of course, impossible to say in advance just how the expenditure will be made in detail, but I have here a statement from the Department, which shows how the appropriation for the previous exposition at Melbourne was expended, and gives a general idea of the manner in which this one will be used. This statement comes from Mr. Rives, and is as follows:

Previous appropriation for exhibition at Melbourne, $28,000; expended for salaries of commissioners, $5,749.99; for traveling expenses, $4,036.97; for clerk-hire and salary of secretary, $3,336.55; for contingent expenses, $13,746.85; unexpended balance of $1,129.64 covered into the Treasury.

Mr. RAYNER was recognized.

Mr. MCADOO. Will my colleague [Mr. PHELPS] inform the committee——

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally, when a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 81) for the relief of H. B. Wilson, administrator of the estate of William Tinder, deceased;

A bill (S. 1027) to fix the charge for passports at $1; and

A bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861.

The message also requested that the House return to the Senate the bill (S. 928) in relation to marriage between white men and Indian women.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION AT MELBOURNE.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MCADOO. I thought I had been recognized, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland had addressed the Chair. Debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted, but the gentleman from Maryland may move a formal amendment.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. Chairman, I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last word. I desire to occupy only two or three minutes in calling the attention of the House to some points connected with this bill. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN], who spoke yesterday, seemed to regard this bill as contemplating a "junketing expedition" to some unexplored and uninhabited colonial dependency of Great Britain, in the Pacific Ocean. If this were a fact I, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, would have opposed this measure. But I want to impress upon the attention of the Committee of the Whole this fact, that to-day the five provinces of New South Wales, Queensland, North and West Australia, New Zealand, and Victoria, form parts and parcels of a great continent, containing three millions of human beings, to whom this country is annually remitting $10,000,000 worth of its manufactured products.

I wish to call attention further to the fact that Australia is sending to this country $5,000,000 worth of its own agricultural products, leaving a clear balance of trade in our favor to the amount of $5,000,000. I wish to add, if the committee will permit me, that in 1880 we appropriated $20,000 for a purpose similar to this, and since that time our commerce with Australia has increased as a result of that exhibition from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000. I will state also that one of the few American steam-ship lines leaving any port of this Republic sails to-day between the harbor of San Francisco and the harbors of New Zealand; and the government of New Zealand pays a registered American steam-ship line $150,000 per annum.

I will only add, because it is pertinent in this connection, that a few years ago we controlled the carrying trade of the world. The colors of our Republic could be seen floating from the mastheads in every port of entry in every civilized country of the globe; and the American sailor was the recognized monarch of the sea. To-day our flag has virtually disappeared from the ocean. Great Britain owns 63 per cent. of the steam marine of the world, while France and Germany, and even Austria, with but a single seaport, are bidding for the commerce of mankind. I do not believe that ships create commerce; but I do believe that commerce creates ships, and I do believe that the exhibition and public display of our goods in the markets of the world by means of enterprises of this sort create commerce.

If I looked upon this exhibition as a sort of "junketing expedition," or as a circus or menagerie, as the gentleman from Texas seems to regard it, or as affording the citizens of the California coast an opportunity in which the constituents of the honorable gentleman can not indulge to go upon an immense "drunk" in that unexplored region, I should vote against it. But I do not so regard it. I think it will do what every other similar exhibition has done; that it will bring us in closer ties of amity, and upon a firmer footing of friendly trade and commercial relationship with one of the growing continents of this earth. I trust that for this reason the House will ratify the recommendations of the State Department and the well-considered action of this committee.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, in view of the remarks of my colleague from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS], I think it would be only justice to the House if either he or the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs would state how, in what manner, and for what purpose this $50,000 is to be expended. I stated to the House yesterday that the distance between the seaboard States and the city of Melbourne was very great, and that if the Government of the United States intends to pay the freightage on the goods of its citizens, $50,000 will be totally inadequate for the purpose. Therefore, I think it proper that before the members of this House vote $50,000 out of the public Treasury to carry out the purposes of this measure there should be a statement from the Committee on Foreign Affairs as to the manner and purpose of this expenditure, with at least a skeleton of particulars.

There is another point. If I am correctly informed, New South Wales, although a colonial dependency of Great Britain, happily enjoys the inestimable boon of "home rule." This is not the universal rule, strange as it may seem, under the British constitution. Now, I find from the long preamble of this resolution that we are to accept this invitation from the British Government. I wish to know, Mr. Chairman, before voting on this question, if New South Wales has a parliament of her own, as I trust she has, why the representatives of New South Wales, not officials located in Downing street, London, but the free representatives of the free people of New South Wales have not, through the constituted and elected home authorities, asked the United States to participate in this exhibition. For my own part I should be loath to have the United States of America accept a second-hand and may be unauthorized invitation from the officials of the British Government in Downing street, London, instead of from the government erected, maintained, and perpetuated by the free electors of New South Wales itself. If no invitation has been extended to the people of the United States from the people of New South Wales, then it may be that those people themselves do not wish us to participate in the exhibition. A guest of the British Government is not always sure of a hearty welcome from the people of a country under British rule. This is sometimes embarrassing to the guest. What evidence have we at this distance that the British Government may not misrepresent the people of New South Wales? I know from history and observation that no government is so generous as the British in representing other people without their consent and often against their will. What authority has the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this House to attach a preamble to this resolution telling us, the representatives of the free American people, that the British Government knows what the people of New South Wales, located nearly 10,000 miles or more, as I suppose, distant, want in the way of our participation in the exhibition at Melbourne? Who told the British Government that the people of New South Wales, a good people, no doubt, would welcome our exhibit?

I have no objection to this resolution so far as it looks to extending American commerce; and I have no objection to legitimate participation by the United States in exhibitions of this kind. I am desirous that whatever of surplus products we may have from our imperial and magnificent home market may find their way to the inhabitants of New South Wales, if those people think it to their advantage to buy them, and in the mean time I wish the good, honest, enterprising people of New South Wales freedom and prosperity and the right to attend to their own business.

Mr. RAYNER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I renew it for the purpose of saying just a few words in regard to the scope of this resolution. The preamble of course forms no part of the resolution, and yet all the information we get of the scope of the resolution is contained in the preamble. The preamble recites:

Whereas the British Government has extended to the Government of the United States an invitation to participate in the international exhibition which is to be held at Melbourne, etc.:

Resolved, etc., That said invitation is accepted, and that there be, and there hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to effect the purpose of this resolution, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of State for the purpose of such representation at said exhibition.

Now, the purpose of this resolution, as gathered from the preamble—and we can gather it nowhere else—is to enable the Government of the United States to participate in this exhibition. I asked the chairman of the committee [Mr. BELMONT] a moment ago, or the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO], whether the purpose of the resolution was to enable the Government of the United States to make a Government exhibit or whether it was to enable the Government of the United States to assist citizens of the United States to make an exhibit from this country. The chairman assured me it was the latter; that is, to enable citizens to make an exhibit. The purpose of the resolution, as defined by the preamble itself, is to enable the Government itself to make an exhibit, that is, to participate in this exhibition, and if that be the true purpose of the preamble and resolution, as it seems to me it is, I desire to know from the chairman how the Government of the United States is going to use the $50,000.

Mr. BELMONT. In order to carry out the object of the resolution it will be necessary, of course, to appoint commissioners who will superintend the exhibit by citizens of the United States of American products at this international exhibition to be held in Melbourne.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Is it intended to use this $50,000, or any part of it, to enable citizens to collect exhibits, say in San Francisco, and transport them to New South Wales for this exhibition at Melbourne?

Mr. BELMONT. It is true that, whatever is to be done with this sum, as the gentleman will observe, the second section of the bill provides it shall be the duty of the Secretary of State to report to Congress a detailed statement of the expenses incurred. It is almost impossible to state at present what the expenses will be, and therefore it becomes necessary to provide as has been done in this joint resolution.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That would be a sort of post-facto explanation; but what I ask the gentleman to state now is what use will be made of this $50,000 if we vote it.

Mr. BELMONT. Past experience in regard to these matters would answer that question for the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I do not wish to yield my time any further. I wish to say in the remainder of my five minutes that I believe in the utility of these exhibitions. I thought yesterday that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] endeavored to pull the wool over the eyes of this House on this subject.

A MEMBER. Australian wool. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, Australian wool; a cheap kind of wool. But I believe, Mr. Chairman, great good has come out of these international exhibitions. Last year I voted for a measure which, in my opinion, tended to extend our commerce with the isles of the sea and with South American countries by what was called a subsidy for ocean mail service. I believed that promised good. It may be this $50,000 may also result in some good, but before I vote for it—and I would be glad to vote for it if its purpose can be well defined—I would like to know from some one competent to speak what use will be made of it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CRAIN. I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. There is one already pending.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. CRAIN. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause. I would like to have the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs explain to the House in what portion of the organic law of the land he finds authority given to Congress to make an appropriation of this character. It is certainly not embraced in that provision which authorizes Congress to regulate foreign commerce, because this proposition is simply to make an exhibit of manufactures at Melbourne, in the province of Victoria. No such power is granted by the Constitution, either directly or by implication, to the Congress of the United States.

It will not do for gentlemen to say precedents have been established for the passage of this resolution. Gentlemen ought not in support of this resolution to point to the appropriations made by Congress for the expositions at Vienna and Paris, because in doing this they simply act as a man charged with larceny would act were he to justify himself upon the ground that other men had gone unwhipped of justice who had been guilty of the same crime.

I ask the friends of the Constitution and the strict constructionists of that instrument on this side who are supporting this measure to point out to us where the grant of power can be found in the Constitution, which they profess to revere and venerate, by which this resolution can be justified.

This whole question was most ably discussed in the House of Representatives on a similar occasion by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the last Congress, Hon. Randolph Tucker, and also by my brilliant and accomplished friend from New York [Mr. COX], who is now temporarily occupying the place of our distinguished Speaker, whose early restoration to health is earnestly hoped for by every member of this House without regard to political affiliations or sentiments.

The latter gentleman opposed a proposition to grant money in aid of the centennial celebration at Philadelphia in 1876, and upon what ground? Because, Mr. Chairman, he said there was no authority for such a grant in the Constitution of the United States.

The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House in the Forty-ninth Congress spoke in opposition to a grant of money to the Paris exposition upon the same ground; and I ask, therefore, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to show, as a member of the Democratic party, as a strict constructionist of the Constitution, where he finds the authority for recommending such a grant as this.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] tells us that this appropriation will result in building up the merchant marine of this country. I ask him, in response to that statement, to show how this result will be accomplished. There is no connection between the exhibition of our manufactures in a town thousands of miles away and the building up of our merchant marine.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS], for whose opinion upon this and kindred subjects I entertain the most profound respect, has told us that during the year 1880, when the Melbourne exposition was held, the exports and imports between Australia and the United States amounted to but $5,000,000, and that several years afterwards they had increased to $12,000,000, which result was brought about by the exposition. The facts are, however, that the year following the exposition at Melbourne these exports and imports had decreased; and that to-day, according to the report I find embodied in a speech of the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], the exports and imports between the United States and Australia are less than they were two years ago.

This shows a decrease and not an extension of the commerce between the two countries, as has been claimed; and if it be true that Australia is paying $150,000 annually to an American steam-ship company for carrying the mails to this country, why is it necessary to make an exhibition of our manufactured goods for the benefit of a few favored manufacturers, merely to show the people of Australia that this is a great and growing country?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAIN. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed just one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAIN. I admit, Mr. Chairman, that the passage of this resolution will be attended with some beneficial results, and I do not propose to obstruct its passage if the majority of the House are in favor of it. I know that the gentlemen who go there to represent this country will, after the fashion of travelers, ordinary travelers, I mean, and not such distinguished travelers as my friend from New York [Mr. COX], come back and describe to admiring constituents the kind of plumage the birds wear in that far-off country. They will be able to inform us, from personal examination and inspection, of the truth or falsity of that story which we have all heard from our earliest childhood, that the monkeys of that region, with their prehensile tails, make bridges by which they cross rivers. But, sir, I fear that they may bring back the microbes of cholera, which might inoculate the Republican party and kill it, many of whose members I respect and esteem and am proud to regard as my friends.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in response to the inquiry which comes from several gentlemen here as to what was the origin of the resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. That resolution had its origin in a message sent by the President to the Congress of the United States, and to which message a decent regard was paid by this House in referring its subject-matter, pertaining exclusively as it did to a representation of America in this Australian centennial, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. When that message, accompanied as it was by a letter from the Secretary of State, was referred to the committee, we deemed it our duty to give the subject that consideration which we thought a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of State, was entitled to receive. Hence the resolution was reported by the committee.

This, Mr. Chairman, is not the first time in the history of this country that we have been asked to make an appropriation to celebrate centennials. It was said by my distinguished friend from New Jersey that he would consent that a commission should be sent to participate in the Paris Exposition because of the response which came when we extended our invitation to the whole world in 1876 to participate with us in the celebration of the centennial of our national existence and of the declaration of our national independence from Great Britain. But it should be remembered that no nation responded more cordially to that invitation than did Great Britain herself.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman permit me for a moment? I desire to say right there that this Government refused to contribute a cent towards the expenses of that exposition, to which it had invited the people of the civilized world, and Philadelphia and Pennsylvania bore them.

Mr. HOOKER. Allow me to say I think the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania is slightly mistaken. The Government of the United States did make an appropriation for the purpose of constructing a building there for its exhibits.

Mr. KELLEY. They made a loan, and recovered every dollar of it.

Mr. HOOKER. I am familiar with the whole subject. It is here recorded in the American Almanac for 1878, showing precisely what the Government did.

They did loan a million and a half of dollars, but in addition to that we appropriated over half a million dollars for the construction of the building to which I referred; and every gentleman who was here in Congress when those appropriations were made is fully cognizant of the fact.

But I was about to say to my distinguished friend from New Jersey that no nation of the earth responded to our invitation to participate in that celebration more cordially than England—England, whose colonies had been wrested from her by the Revolution; England, who had suffered all the losses of the war of the Revolution which established this grand galaxy of States and Territories. Not only did England come with her public exhibits, but her private citizens sent to the gallery of art in Philadelphia numerous exhibits as evidence of the good-will of the British nation, from whom, by the Revolution whose centenary we were celebrating, was wrested this vast continent. I say, then, the declaration that England should not be treated with courtesy and respect when an invitation comes from her minister, indorsed by our Secretary of State and recommended to us by the President of the United States—I say that declaration is not worthy of us. England, with whose people we desire friendly relations, of all countries, deserves from us as friendly respect as any people we know.

I beg to embody, as part of the remarks I am now making, the report, in which the letter of the Secretary of State, addressed to the President of the United States, is published, as well as the recommendation made by the Secretary himself on that subject. It is as follows:

The importance of the proposed exhibition and the claim it has for our aid in the liberal display of American industries are indicated in the following note of the Secretary of State, referred to in the message of the President:

"To the PRESIDENT:

"I submit herewith a copy of a note to this Department from Sir Lionel West, Her Britannic Majesty's minister at this capital, extending an invitation to this Government to participate in the international exhibition which is to be held at Melbourne, 1888, to celebrate the centenary of the founding of New South Wales, the first Australian colony.

"As our social and commercial relations are daily becoming more intimate with the kindred people inhabiting Australia, it would seem to be very appropriate that this country should officially take part in an exhibition which is intended to commemorate such an important event as the founding of the first of those Australian commonwealths which are now so great and prosperous. Moreover, as Australia was extensively represented in our Centennial Exhibition held at Philadelphia in 1876, it is very proper that we should reciprocate by accepting the invitation to take part in the similar exhibition to be held at Melbourne. I therefore respectfully recommend that the accompanying papers be communicated to Congress, with the suggestion that the invitation be accepted and that the sum of $50,000 be appropriated to defray the expenses of a commission to represent the United States at the exhibition.

"This Department is advised that many American manufacturers have already made application for space in the Melbourne exhibition in expectation of the appointment of a commission to represent this country there. As it appears from Sir Lionel West's note of the 21st ultimo that the time for making applications for space for exhibitors will expire on the last day of the present month, it will be necessary for Congress to take very prompt action in order to prevent serious injury to American interests in the premises.

"Respectfully submitted.

"T. F. BAYARD.

"DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
"Washington, December 19, 1887."

Concurring in the views expressed by the Secretary of State, and believing that it is highly important that the growing commercial and social relations between this country and Australia should be encouraged in every proper way, the committee recommend the acceptance of the invitation so kindly tendered; and for the purpose of participating in the exhibition in an appropriate and effective manner, the committee recommend an appropriation of $50,000 to defray the expenses attending a proper official representation.

For this purpose the joint resolution herewith reported is recommended for passage.

Let me say one word further in response to the observation which fell from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN]. We did make appropriations for the celebration in Philadelphia, and we have made appropriations to exhibitions in America and in other countries. We made an appropriation, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of having this country represented at the Vienna Exposition of $200,000. We made an appropriation for the purpose of having our exhibits at the Paris Exposition of $95,000; and so we have done at various other times. And when I am asked for the authority to do so, and when I am referred by the gentleman from Texas to the action of former Congresses in denunciatory terms of the men who constituted those Congresses, having been part and parcel of one of them that made appropriations for the Philadelphia Centennial, I desire to say that we had the sanction of the whole legislative department, the House as well as the Senate, in making these appropriations for the purpose of representing our country at these various exhibitions.

This invitation comes in respectful terms from Great Britain. It is transmitted to us by the President of the United States, and the amount appropriated is a bagatelle in proportion to the benefits which will accrue from the acceptance of the invitation. I appeal to gentlemen on both sides of the House, for there is nothing of party politics in this—I appeal to the good sense and fair judgment of the committee whether or not, in responding to this invitation, we shall not intrust the Secretary of State with the expenditure of such an amount as may be necessary to make our exhibition in that foreign country creditable to the commerce and the manufactures of our country.

I will say just one word more. This resolution, reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, proposes an expenditure of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and, in addition to that, couples the appropriation with the restriction on the Secretary of State that he shall account and report to Congress the mode and manner of the expenditure of every dollar that is used for this purpose.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, when I interrupted the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] it was not with the purpose of opposing this appropriation. I wanted only to vindicate the truth of history by correcting an error into which he had fallen. The Congress of the United States refused to appropriate one dollar in aid of the American International Centennial Exhibition otherwise than as a loan the payment of which should be abundantly secured. The loan was abundantly secured, as the repayment of every dollar of the principal proves.

Mr. HOOKER. With the permission of the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania I will read two lines from the American Almanac for 1878.

Mr. KELLEY. Proceed for two lines.

Mr. HOOKER (reading):

Besides the advance of $1,500,000 the United States Congress appropriated $505,000 for the erection of the United States Government building and for organizing and defraying the expenses of the highly creditable display by the various departments and bureaus of the Government and by the Smithsonian Institution. The amounts invested by Pennsylvania and Philadelphia were permanent. That invested by the United States was a loan to be repaid out of the profits of the exhibition, if any. At the winding up of the entire business of the exhibition there was found to be a surplus on hand after paying all expenses of administration. The centennial board of finance took the ground that this belonged to the stockholders, who were entitled to share it pro rata. As no actual profits had been derived from the exhibition they viewed the subscriptions of the stockholders as a lien upon the surplus funds. The United States authorities, on the other hand, maintained that it was the clear intent of Congress in the act of February 16, 1876, advancing the $1,500,000, that the United States should be fully repaid before any dividends were made. To decide the question an amicable suit was brought in the United States court and decided in the spring of 1877 in favor of the Government. The $1,500,000 was accordingly returned to the United States, the stockholders receiving about 25 per cent. on their investments. The financial result of the exhibition was more favorable than that of any other international exhibition except one.

Mr. KELLEY. If the gentleman had not interrupted me I should have stated these facts, for I am vindicating the truth of history. I say that Philadelphia and Pennsylvania, New Jersey contributing, gave $100,000, the State of Delaware, I think, $10,000, and Massachusetts making a contribution the amount of which I forget, but would be glad to have stated, and out of the fund thus created Congress required the commissioners of the United States from the several States and Territories to be fed. Many of these United States commissioners brought their families with them, and took quarters at the best and most expensive hotels in Philadelphia, and incurred bills to be paid out of these and individual contributions.

But in spite of the absence of a Government contribution the thing became so grand a fact in prospective that the Government of the United States felt it would be disgraced if it did not make an exhibition in the Centennial grounds to the assembled people of the world, and it proposed to exhibit the methods of the United States Government, so far as they were or might be embodied in physical facts that could be exhibited, and at its instance Congress made an appropriation of $550,000 for use by the Government. The amount did not go into the fund of the Centennial commissioners, but the Government expended it, and when it had made its independent national exhibition it gathered up its exhibits and its buildings and hustled them all off.

Mr. Chairman, the people of Philadelphia and Pennsylvania, of New Jersey, and Massachusetts, and Delaware, and the individual subscribers to the stock, were not a little surprised when they found that there was a member of the Congress that appropriated the $1,500,000—who, by the way, is a member of this Congress also—who claimed a fee of $10,000 after having astutely inserted the clause in the bill making that loan on which he could go into court and enforce its repayment. When the United States Government brought its suit, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and their coadjutors submitted the question quietly to the circuit court, which rejected the Government's claim, from which decision, however, an appeal was taken, and on an intimation from the Supreme Court that the language of the law justified the Government in demanding repayment, judgment was entered and the money was immediately paid.

And yet, sir, the representatives of Philadelphia voted $100,000 more than the whole of that loan, $1,600,000, towards rejuvenating the South, by establishing and maintaining an exhibition at New Orleans, and they have stood by all these movements. I remember the alacrity with which I hastened to the other side of this House to induce a Pennsylvania member, who is now an officer of this Government, residing in Washington, to withdraw his objection, which at that stage of the session would have defeated the appropriation of $20,000 to enable us to exhibit our fishery apparatus at the German exposition. He was a strict-construction Democrat, but I implored him to withdraw his objection, and not to disgrace his native State, which was also mine.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania had his five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. KELLEY. I am glad to have had the floor so long, and to have been able to say what I have said.

Mr. BELMONT. I ask a vote on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] proposes to amend by striking out a portion of the joint resolution and inserting the words which have been read. Pending that motion, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] moves to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause. The Chair will treat that as an amendment to the amendment. The question, therefore, is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. CRAIN, and it was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] to strike out and insert——

Several MEMBERS. Let it be read

The amendment of Mr. MCADOO was again read.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. MCADOO, and it was rejected.

Mr. BELMONT. I now move that the committee rise and report the joint resolution to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the joint resolution relating to the invitation of the British Government to the Government of the United States to participate in the international exposition at Melbourne to celebrate the founding of New South Wales, and had instructed him to report the same to the House and recommend its passage.

Mr. BELMONT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the joint resolution as reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. MCADOO. On that I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 183, noes 27; so the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Has the hour expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour has not yet expired.

Mr. BELMONT. I ask for a vote.

Mr. OATES. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the joint resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is a motion to recommit in order now?

Several MEMBERS. "Regular order!"

Mr. DUNHAM. Is a motion to recommit in order at this time?

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and I submit that nothing is in order now except to proceed with the roll-call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] rises to make a motion to recommit.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask the Chair whether that is in order now?

Mr. BELMONT. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is inclined to hold that, the yeas and nays having been ordered, the only question now is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. DUNHAM. I make the point of order that the hour is up, and this business can not be proceeded with further to-day.

Mr. BELMONT. The hour is not up yet.

Several MEMBERS. Call the roll.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question will now be taken by yeas and nays on the passage of the joint resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, at what time is the morning hour up?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Half a minute of the hour yet remains. [Laughter.]

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 157, nays 89, not voting 77; as follows:

YEAS—157.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. MANSUR. I am authorized by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE] to say that he has been unexpectedly called from the House, and is paired with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOMPSON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pairs will now be read.

The following-named gentlemen were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. BYNUM with Mr. WEBER.

Mr. BACON with Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR.

Mr. CATCHINGS with Mr. HOUK.

The following-named members were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. FELTON.

Mr. DIBBLE with Mr. GUENTHER.

Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. LAWLER with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.

Mr. RUSK with Mr. FITCH.

Mr. STOCKDALE with Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio.

Mr. LYNCH with Mr. WILLIAMS.

Mr. MILLS with Mr. MCCOMAS.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. BELMONT moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CIVIL JURISDICTION, INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. ROGERS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1204) conferring civil jurisdiction in certain cases arising in the Indian Territory on the United States courts which now or may hereafter exercise criminal jurisdiction over said Territory; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PARIS EXPOSITION.

Mr. BELMONT, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 83) accepting the invitation of the French Republic to take part in the international exposition to be held in Paris in 1889; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORAN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 5445) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CASES FROM THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. TAULBEE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House be authorized to refer to the proper committees of the House the bills now on the House Private Calendar, reported by the Court of Claims in the Forty-ninth Congress and brought forward.

NATIONAL-BANK CIRCULATION.

Mr. WILKINS. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order of business is the unfinished business of yesterday, and the Clerk will read the title of the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1733) to provide for the issue of circulating notes to national-bank associations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The existing condition of the question is this: The yeas and nays have been ordered on the engrossment and third reading of the bill. The pending question is on the demand for the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. WILKINS. I desire to make a proposition to the House, and will send it to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. WEAVER. There is no objection to its being read.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No; we do not object if it does not deprive us of any of our rights.

Mr. WEAVER. Of course we give up none of our rights.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The understanding is, of course, that the proposition is read for the information of the House.

Mr. WILKINS. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS] will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

I ask unanimous consent that the vote ordering the yeas and nays on ordering the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the pending bill be vacated and the motion withdrawn, and that debate be allowed and amendments in order be offered, and the previous question on the bill and such then pending amendments be considered as ordered at 5 o'clock on the —— [the date being left blank].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask for the reading of the proposition again.

The proposition was again read.

Mr. WILKINS. I wish to submit to the gentlemen who oppose this measure that they supply the blank.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. How long does the gentleman propose to give?

Mr. WILKINS. I propose that the debate shall close within a reasonable time.

Mr. WEAVER. There is no use taking up the time of the House. We will exercise our rights, and want no intimation from the gentleman from Ohio as to what we ought to do. I object.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask to present this proposition. I ask unanimous consent that the vote ordering the yeas and nays on ordering the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the pending bill be vacated and the motion withdrawn.

Mr. RANDALL and Mr. WEAVER asked that the proposition be again read.

The proposition of Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, was read from the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this proposition?

Mr. WILKINS. I can not consent, unless some time in the future is fixed when this debate shall end.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. How long does the gentleman propose to give?

Mr. WILKINS. Within a week or ten days. I will say ten days.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I accept that proposition.

Mr. WEAVER. I do not agree to that. I will not agree if the gentleman says thirty days.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Let us declare, by unanimous consent, that the minority can always delay the legislation of this House.

Mr. WEAVER. Those who are in favor of this bill, and are pressing it here, are the obstructionists. Here is a bill in favor of the national banks that you are trying to rush in to the exclusion of everything else which the people require. If gentlemen choose to place themselves in that position, they can do it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A question of consideration is pending.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Let that proposition be read again.

Several members demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I hope gentlemen will withdraw that demand, as we can probably arrange this matter.

Mr. WEAVER. I understood the gentleman from Ohio to propose this: that he would consent to ten days' extension for debate and amendment, provided at the expiration of that time there should be a vote on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WILKINS. The gentleman is correct in that.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That is not my request.

Mr. WILKINS. I am perfectly willing to accord that time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That is not included in my motion.

Mr. WILKINS. I accept that.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. It was not my proposition. I proposed that the debate should continue for ten days—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is out of order except by unanimous consent.

The first question is, Will the House now proceed to consider this bill?

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 107, noes 57.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Let us have tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. WILKINS. It will save time to have the yeas and nays at once. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 99, not voting 99; as follows:

YEAS—125.

Mr. WEAVER. I object.

The Clerk then recapitulated the names of those voting.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. GRANGER with Mr. BUTTERWORTH, for the rest of the day.

Mr. BARRY with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. SPRINGER with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.

Mr. BURNES with Mr. STONE, of Missouri, on this bill.

Mr. LAWLER with Mr. STAHLNECKER, on the bank bill.

Mr. FORD with Mr. CUTCHEON, on this bill for to-day.

Mr. PERKINS with Mr. WILBER, on the bank bill. If present, Mr. WILBER would vote for the bill, Mr. PERKINS against it.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say that if I was not paired I would vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs——

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the House take a recess until 3 o'clock, when the special assignment comes up.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 17, noes 36.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. WEAVER and Mr. WILKINS were appointed tellers.

The House again proceeded to divide.

Mr. WILKINS (one of the tellers). I ask unanimous consent that this matter go over until to-morrow, and that the hour for the special order may be considered as having now arrived.

Mr. WEAVER. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman ask unanimous consent that a recess be taken until 3 o'clock?

Mr. RANDALL. Can not the special order fixed for 3 o'clock be proceeded with now by consent?

Mr. WILKINS. That was my proposition.

Mr. DUNHAM. I understand the Massachusetts delegation do not desire to commence the proceedings until 3 o'clock.

Mr. WEAVER. Then let us take the recess until 3 o'clock by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit that request to the House.

Is there objection?

There being no objection, the House (at 2 o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) took a recess until 3 o'clock.

PORTRAITS OF EX-SPEAKERS.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 3 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 3 having arrived, the special order will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday, January 19, at 3 o'clock p. m., be set apart for the presentation to the House of Representatives of portraits of ex-Speakers Sedgwick, Varnum, and Banks by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and that upon that occasion the committee of the executive council of that State be admitted to the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, several years ago, when I was in official position in Massachusetts, Hon. George B. Loring, then a member of this body from that State, wrote me urging the propriety of its furnishing suitable oil paintings of the Speakers it had given to this House. No action was taken in the matter at that time. But the consummation was not far off. When my colleague, Mr. ROCKWELL, entered the Forty-eighth Congress he sought, at first in vain, among the pictures of the ex-Speakers of the House for one bearing the name of Theodore Sedgwick, who was Speaker in the Sixth Congress, and whose home was in that part of Massachusetts which Mr. ROCKWELL now represents. After persistent inquiry he ascertained that one of the then unnamed pictures hanging in the adjoining lobby was the object of his search. He was aided in his investigation by Mr. Clark, the Architect of the Capitol, who two years later, as a result of a conversation between them, addressed to him the following letter:

ARCHITECT'S OFFICE, U. S. CAPITOL,
Washington, D. C., February 16, 1886.

DEAR SIR: As relates to the portraits of the Massachusetts Speakers of the United States House of Representatives, I have the honor to state that the portrait of Speaker Winthrop, recently presented by certain citizens of Massachusetts, is a work of art worthy of the place it holds and the person it represents. That of Speaker Banks, though an oil painting, is on paper, and in a decaying condition. Those of Sedgwick and Varnum are crayon drawings, quite beneath criticism.

I can not but entertain the hope that your great State will follow the example of the State of Connecticut, and have painted by artists of repute portraits of its Speakers, Sedgwick, Varnum, and Banks, to grace this national collection.

Very respectfully, yours,

EDWARD CLARK,
Architect United States Capitol.

Hon. F. W. ROCKWELL,
House of Representatives.

The following memorial to the authorities of Massachusetts was the next step:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 16, 1886.

The undersigned, Representatives from the State of Massachusetts in the Forty-ninth Congress, respectfully represent that in the collection of the portraits of the Speakers of the House of Representatives of the United States, those of Speakers Sedgwick, Varnum, and Banks are unworthy of the place they hold, one being in a perishing condition, and the others crayon drawings indifferently executed. They therefore earnestly pray that measures will be taken by the authorities of the State which they have the honor to represent in Congress to have furnished for this national collection at the Capitol portraits of Speakers Sedgwick, Varnum, and Banks, to be painted by artists of repute, as in the case of Speaker Winthrop.

R. T. DAVIS.
JOHN D. LONG.
A. A. RANNEY.
PATRICK A. COLLINS.
E. D. HAYDEN.
H. B. LOVERING.
E. F. STONE.
CHAS. H. ALLEN.
FREDERICK D. ELY.
W. W. RICE.
WM. WHITING.
FRANCIS W. ROCKWELL.

We have had no recent opportunity of examining the portraits of the distinguished gentlemen referred to. Fully confiding, however, in the judgment of the delegation in the House of Representatives as to the pictures referred to, we concur in their desire.

H. L. DAWES.
GEO. F. HOAR.

This letter and memorial were presented to the governor of Massachusetts, who transmitted both to the senate and house of representatives of that Commonwealth, recommending the subject to their favorable consideration and action. The Massachusetts Legislature promptly responded by passing the following resolve, which was approved April 1, 1886:

Resolved, That the governor and council be, and they are hereby, authorized and requested to have furnished for the national Capitol at Washington, D. C., worthy portraits of Speakers Sedgwick, Varnum, and Banks, the same to be painted by some artist or artists of skill and repute, and to correspond in merit with that of Speaker Winthrop, already in the collection.

Under the authority of this resolve the governor and council employed Edgar Parker, of Boston, to paint a portrait of Theodore Sedgwick, from an original by Stuart, in the possession of the Sedgwick family, in Stockbridge, Mass.

They purchased of a great grandson of the Speaker of the Tenth and Eleventh Congresses a portrait of Joseph Bradley Varnum. It is a copy painted by Charles Loring Eliot more than thirty years ago. The original was done by an artist whose name is not ascertained. The copy was intended, when made, for the national Capitol, but the original intention seems to have been abandoned.

They employed R. W. Vonnoh, of Boston, to paint a portrait of the Speaker of the Thirty-fourth Congress, Nathaniel Prentiss Banks, from life, representing him, however, as of the age at which he was Speaker.

The artists have finished their work. The portraits are here, having been brought to Washington under the charge of Messrs. Bourne, Johnson, and Locke, a committee of the executive council of Massachusetts, appointed by Governor Ames to present them to the National Government, and now, by the courtesy of the House, present on its floor. Speaking for them and for the ancient Commonwealth whose gift they bring, I present to the national House of Representatives these "worthy portraits" of Speakers Sedgwick, Varnum, and Banks. With the painting of Winthrop, already here, they are speakers still for the State and for the Union, to which the men whose faces they picture rendered high and honorable service. I trust that other States, following the example of this day, will array beside these portraits worthy portraits of their own distinguished sons who have held the same office, and who deserve, as Massachusetts thought hers deserved, more permanent and artistic memorials than those which have hitherto hung upon the adjoining walls.

It is fitting, Mr. Speaker, that I leave to my colleagues who represent the several districts in which lived the Speakers whom Massachusetts has given to the chair you occupy the appreciative words which this occasion demands in their behalf; but I can not forbear to add in a single sentence that their fame and service are limited to no district in that historic Commonwealth, but are hers, associated with her common glory; hers, not as she stands alone, but as she stands and has stood and will stand, as a part of that Union which, under her construction of its Constitution, has been tried and not found wanting in power to preserve its own integrity, to establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty for ourselves and our posterity; hers, too, proud mother as she has been of so many other statesmen, soldiers, scholars, orators, poets, and patriots who have loved, honored, and served their country.

Could you, sir, like Virgil's man, cross the stream and walk the Elysian fields, as at some time you will—may it be late alike with you and with him whose place by reason of his illness you occupy this day—you would see them there—Sam Adams and John; Otis and Quincy and Hancock; Warren, his patriot blood spouting hot from his gaping wound; the swart, mighty brow of Webster, bent over the open pages of the Constitution; the nervous figure of Choate; the graceful pose of Everett; Longfellow, dreaming of the banks of the Charles; Emerson and Sumner; and Phillips, calm in his merciless scorn of injustice, walking arm and arm with the fiery Andrew, no Greek or Trojan helmets on their heads, but in their hands the broken shackles of a slave and the olive branches of the restored peace and union of their country. Only shadows. Only pictures, such as these we bring to-day—mute, but forever eloquent. [Applause.]

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, in the Fiftieth Congress we recall the eminent public service of a gentleman who was in the First Congress.

Theodore Sedgwick won a high position in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in the councils of the Federal party, and in Congress. A man of integrity, fidelity, and capacity, he leads a line of well-equipped Western Massachusetts men who have been honored, not alone by merited promotion at home, but who have been intrusted in the Congress of the United States with the high duty of framing, shaping, defending, maintaining the dignity, power, and humanity of a beloved country. When he entered the First Congress he brought talent and experience. Educated at Yale, entering the Massachusetts bar (April, 1766) when scarce twenty, we find him at thirty an aide to General Thomas in the expedition to Canada (1776), and afterward procuring supplies for the Continental Army. He represented the old town of Sheffield in the Massachusetts general court, both before and after the Revolution. His votes are recorded as a delegate in the Congress of the Confederation in 1786 (June 1 to August 22) and in 1788 (April 4 to September 3). In the winter of 1787 at home he aided in suppressing the Shays insurrection. In 1788 he was also a representative from Stockbridge to the Massachusetts State convention that adopted the Federal Constitution, a course he strongly advocated in the convention. The same year he was speaker of the Massachusetts house of representatives.

He served in the First, Second, Third, and Fourth Congresses in the House until he was appointed from the Fourth Congress as an United States Senator to succeed Caleb Strong, presenting his credentials on December 21, 1796. On June 27, 1798, he was elected President pro tempore of the Senate, serving until July 19. Returned to the House in the Sixth Congress (1799), he was elected Speaker, serving till March 3, 1801.

In 1802, Massachusetts, who appreciates faithful public service, placed him in her supreme court, where he remained until his death, in his sixty-sixth year. Thus a life beginning in 1746 and ending in 1813 was filled with usefulness and crowned with honor. Thus it appears that he served in two Congresses under the Confederation and in the first six Congresses after the adoption of the Constitution, under our present representative Republic. He served during the two administrations of Washington and under that of John Adams.

He took his seat in the First Congress, held in the city of New York, on June 15, 1789. He served in the Congresses held at Philadelphia, and was there Speaker in the first session of the Sixth. When the second session of the Sixth Congress opened its sitting in the new Federal city of Washington he was the presiding officer (November 17, 1800).

He lived and was deeply interested in the stirring times preceding and during the Revolution and throughout the formative period of the Republic. He was in the midst of affairs when the Articles of Confederation were agreed upon (1777); when the ninth State adopted the Constitution (1788).

Mr. Sedgwick believed in a firm government. His speeches indicate it. He believed in the Republic. His distrust of the capacity of the people for self-government as intimated by his distinguished daughter, Miss Catherine, I believe, on careful comparison with his public utterances, to be overdrawn. Logical and lucid, elegant in expression, and with the dignity of a gentleman of the old school, he proved by his speeches that Congress is a house of work for intellectual men. The speeches of that day indeed disclose a grand grasp of ideas, a philosophical reasoning second only to the good judgment, discretion, and forethought of the framers of the Constitution itself. In those discussions Mr. Sedgwick bore a conspicuous part. He was a well-grounded and ready debater. The day after taking his seat in the First Congress he joined in the debate upon the question of allowing the head of the proposed department of foreign affairs to be removable by the President, urging his position by illustration, logic, and marked ability. This position of a sound reasoner, an eloquent debater, he steadily maintained. His speeches disclose a familiarity with subjects then before Congress that mark him as a man of intellect, of great research, comprehension, and able to meet, grapple with, and conquer difficulties in a practical way.

With constitutional ardor he became a leader of his party. His relations with the leading men of his day were intimate and confidential. In the works of Alexander Hamilton appear a few of his letters and the replies received to them. Indeed, the last political letter written by Hamilton, the day before his death, was directed to Judge Sedgwick. His was the Federalism of the Hamiltonian era—"an honest faith, a patriotic, true-hearted, and high-minded one."

His learning, integrity, impartiality, and courtly bearing made him as a judge honored and respected, worthy the high position Massachusetts had conferred upon him.

Judge Sedgwick's private life was passed amid the picturesque hills of Berkshire. Here he lived in republican simplicity, yet dispensing a generous hospitality. The tributes of his children while he lived and after his death disclose the loving relations that mark the true home. His care and guidance impressed his character and attainments on his children's children.

The town of Stockbridge, the county of Berkshire, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, will ever cherish the memory of his life and eminent public service. Standing here to-day, representing the district in which he lived, the bar at which he practiced, a family of the neighborhood that has witnessed and known his career, I admit a peculiar personal delight in the occasion of the presentation of this portrait. His was a masterful personality. His life was one of high and successful endeavor; it presents a charm and an inspiration. With "the old Massachusetts paper," "we leave it to the skill of the exquisite artist to complete a picture which, if a faithful resemblance of the original, can not fail to engage the attention and produce the delight of posterity." [Applause.]

GENERAL JOSEPH BRADLEY VARNUM.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, almost a century in the busy growth and active life of this nation has passed since General Joseph Bradley Varnum, of Massachusetts, presided as Speaker over the deliberations of this body, and on this day the old Commonwealth once more calls attention to the early days of our national life, as she hangs upon the walls of the nation's Capitol this truthful representation of one who characterized a type, in our early struggles, that the thousands of American citizens coming to this place, as to a shrine, shall here find, in honored places, the likenesses of those men whose heroic traits of character added so much to our national greatness, as if woven into the web of our national life in its first weaving, forming beautiful tapestry, to educate and delight.

So far removed in time, from the subject of these remarks, an epitome of his life will serve the purpose of the occasion, if from it we may draw a lesson, applicable to modern times.

On January 29, 1750, General Varnum was born in the town of Dracut, Mass., where his ancestors had settled in 1664, and where his descendants still dwell.

A delightful village on the banks of the charming Merrimac, which, having its source among the White Mountains of New Hampshire, flows between beautifully wooded banks, with varying interest, down to the sea; pausing in its busy way to turn millions of cotton-spindles, and blending the music of its own easy-flowing rhythm with the hum of the looms on which are being woven, day by day, the garments of the Oriental. Amid pastoral scenes the most delightful, this rugged man had his early life, and among such associations were formed those habits of thought, that simplicity of character, that ardent patriotism, that intense zeal, which characterized the youth of that historic section and made possible that sudden arming and gathering, which found the men of Middlesex County, on that historic April morning, at the bridge at Concord, to inaugurate the great struggle of the Revolution, out of which this nation was to arise. He was the younger of two brothers, both of whom became conspicuous in the history of their country.

At the age of eighteen he was commissioned captain by the committee of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, and in 1787 colonel by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. In 1802 he was made brigadier, and in 1805 major general of the State militia, holding the latter office at his death in 1821. His love of military affairs commenced early, and continued through a long and useful life.

From 1780 to 1795 he was a member of the house of representatives and senate of Massachusetts, and in 1787 and 1795 served as a member of the governor's council. From 1795 to 1811 he was a member of the national House of Representatives, during which time he was chosen Speaker two terms—from 1807 to 1811—having been the immediate predecessor of Henry Clay. From 1811 to 1817 he was United States Senator from Massachusetts, having been elected in opposition to Timothy Pickering, and he was President pro tempore of the Senate, and Acting Vice-President of the United States, from December 6, 1813, to April 17, 1814. He was a member of the State convention to ratify the Federal Constitution in 1787, and that of 1820 to revise the constitution of Massachusetts, and was the presiding officer in the absence of Presidents John Adams and Chief-Justice Parker. He was an authority in that convention on parliamentary rules and military affairs. In 1813 he ran as candidate for Governor of Massachusetts against Caleb Strong, the incumbent of that office, but was defeated—the only political defeat of his life.

General Varnum was among the earliest patriots of the Revolution, having raised and commanded, as captain, a company of minute-men from his native town, which participated in engagements in Rhode Island and New York. He was with General Sullivan in Rhode Island, and was present with his company at the surrender of Burgoyne at Saratoga, in October, 1777, and convoyed the German prisoners of war to Boston. For his assistance in putting down Shays's rebellion, in 1787, he received a personal letter of thanks from General Benjamin Lincoln, commanding the State forces. In politics (unlike his brother, General James M. Varnum, of Rhode Island, who was a Federalist) he was a Democrat, and a strong and consistent supporter of the administration of Jefferson, and was the latter's personal adviser and friend. After his retirement, in 1817, from the National Congress, he was again chosen to represent his district in the State Legislature; and when he died, September 21, 1821, he was the senior member of the senate of Massachusetts—thus having for over thirty years been in continuous public service, twenty-two of which were spent at the national capital.

He left a valuable correspondence with Jefferson, Madison, the elder Adams, Elbridge Gerry, and the eminent men of his day. The simplicity of his life and character nowhere appear to greater advantage than in his direction for his funeral—that there should be no military or civic display, but that he should be buried from his farm-house and attended by his friends and neighbors. I am indebted for many of the above data respecting his life to the courtesy of his grandson, Mr. John M. Varnum, now residing in Cambridge, Mass.

But any mere picture, however famous the artist or excellent the production, falls short of its purpose in this connection, unless from it, as Americans, we can draw some lessons useful to us in our national life.

In these hurly-burly days of great activity in political matters, we are apt to lose sight of the paramount interest of the state in the pressing demands of personal politics, and it does us good to turn aside from the beaten path, and climb the elevation at hand, where we can overlook the small matters of immediate detail, and take a broad and comprehensive view of our great affairs. The days of General Varnum were, in their way, the crucial period in the history of our country. They marked the separation from the mother country, the setting up of the new nation, the daily meeting of new propositions to be decided with sound sense, prudence, and caution, and they exacted from those who had to deal with them wide experience and information, simplicity of purpose, a profound love of country, and an entire faith in its great future. And it seemed as if Providence, in the rearing of our early patriots, prepared a people for the new life and new conditions. In other lands the theory of government had been based upon the divine right, and liberty-yearning people everywhere, were casting about for some spot, where the experiment of a government based upon human rights and human equality, could be attempted. Toward our shores the tide of emigration had settled. Sturdy, resolute men and women had come hither. The bleak and dreary snow-covered hills and plains, the fog-enveloped, rock-bound coasts of New England seemed in their almost forbidding harshness to invite men who had the fire of liberty burning in their hearts, and among surroundings the most disheartening, upon these shores, determined men mapped out the future of this country.

In the hill towns of New England the very air was freighted with the purposes of the people, and the greater the obstacles to be surmounted, the more enduring and useful the lesson taught.

Behind these people was the great story of the English-speaking race, with its excellences to imitate, its vices to shun; and the greater the difficulties, the grander the character developed.

Just as on some bleak and barren waste, where the blasts of winter sweep and rage with relentless fury, now and then one sees standing fair and stately, some massive tree, stronger of trunk, broader of limb than is wont to be, developed the more by the very elements with which it contends, so in New England were developed those strong characteristics of a freedom-loving people, broad enough to embrace all who loved their country, and strong and elastic enough, though they bend and swing beneath tremendous pressure, to rise again to the same stately and commanding dignity of spirit.

Inviting the fullest and widest discussion, the broadest liberty, yet with a quiet dignity, and a superb conservatism, placing the limit—the dead-line of discussion—where personal liberty is threatened, or the sacredness of person or property menaced. That was the spirit of New England, always aggressive, and that, in my judgment, is the active underlying principle of our Government, which must ever move and control. No limit to theories or "isms" until they approach, in their tendencies, the overthrow of Government, the rights of property, or the lives of persons. Of such a people was General Varnum, and his life is but the working out, in one man, the essence of this principle. From him down, the same spirit animates our citizens, whether they make their path through Northern climes, or whether the warm sun of the Southern latitudes finds them toiling still. It is the love of country. The nation first, then the individual, but the aggregate of the individual weal, the highest honor of the nation. This is the spirit which has controlled our countrymen, whether in Faneuil Hall, or Independence Hall, or wherever patriots have gathered; it has been this banner of human right and perfect equality of all before the law which has been lifted up in the sight of all men—that golden symbol—that whosoever looketh upon, liveth.

And here is the lesson, and here I leave it. As this painting shall hang upon yonder wall in the years to come, so may its presence recall the heroic struggles through which we have passed as a nation, the difficulties and dangers still menacing us, and may the contemplation of these earlier patriots, in their earnestness of purpose and simplicity of character be a lesson and an inspiration to all, drawing men continually together as members of the same country, and teaching us all to take a higher and more ennobling view of our duties as citizens of this great Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, it has been deemed by the representatives from Massachusetts in this House not only fitting, but, indeed, essential to the completeness of this day's ceremony, that at least a reference should be made to the eminent citizen of that Commonwealth who graced the Speaker's chair some forty years ago.

During the session of the Forty-seventh Congress his portrait was presented and received here in words so true and appropriate, so clearly estimating his character and weighing his work, that, though the gracious task is allotted to me, I refrain from an extended analysis of either. Yet I can not, as a citizen of that great State, a State proud of the achievements of all her sons and sensitive as a mother of praise and blame, let the hour pass without asking you again to recognize and appreciate the space that Robert C. Winthrop so superbly filled.

If Virginia is the mother of Presidents, Massachusetts is the cradle of Speakers. Of the thirty-six who have presided over the House of Representatives four have come from that Commonwealth. My colleagues have portrayed the characters of the other three distinguished gentlemen, and the qualities of head and heart that won and justified the favor of their associates. They served their State and the Republic with ability, honor, and patriotism. To whatever parties we are attached and whatever traditions guide, bind, or affect us, we men of Massachusetts are as one in our respect for our stainless fellow-citizens who have filled that chair.

Worthy among the best, or best among the worthy, was Speaker Winthrop. He came equipped for service as few men come to the House. He was carefully and thoroughly educated; free from the cares that oppress the struggling beginner, with six years' experience as a legislator and parliamentarian, he arrived in time to match his mind in debate with the ablest men the Republic has honored with its suffrages. In a recent publication due credit is given to his great capacity as an orator, but his power as a debater is more than questioned. Men yet live who served with him, not only here, but in other deliberative bodies, and their testimony is that he not only excelled all others in grace and force of diction in what may be termed "set speeches," but he stood level with the great debaters of the time. We need not seek, however, evidence from outside. The printed record which from day to day expresses the hot extemporaneous thought of our legislators does full justice to him. He was a great debater as well as an accomplished rhetorician. Called to the Speaker's chair in a stormy epoch, he served with rare grace, felicity, and firmness. It is worth remarking that he had the privilege of placing Abraham Lincoln, in the only Congress in which he ever served, upon a committee which helped to extend the postal system into the then far West. In the chair he guided the House, as a Speaker can, with prudence, firmness, and great wisdom. He left our active legislative life at an age when most men aspire to enter it, only to contribute in other ways to the common weal and to the enrichment of our literature. In serene and graceful old age he still remains to remind us of all that is just and honorable, true and intellectual, of that group of statesmen that clearly saw the forming of the great cloud and knew its fearful portent. The cloud has come and gone, and in another way the air is free; but we owe our acknowledgments to men like him who sought to dissipate it in peace.

His masterly oration at Yorktown and his more recent utterances in this Hall will live as models of eloquence and fortunate analysis of character as long as our institutions that he did so much to conserve shall endure. [Applause.]

I ask to supplement my remarks by having read a letter written to me by Hon. Julius Rockwell, the father of a member on this floor.

The Clerk read as follows:

LENOX, MASS., January 16, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: I learn from the newspapers that you are expected to make some remarks at an early day in the House of Representatives in relation to Mr. Winthrop, a former Speaker of the House.

In the first volume of Mr. Blaine's "Twenty Years of Congress," at the seventy-third page, in what purports to be a summary of the character of Mr. Winthrop as a public man, this sentence occurs: "As an orator he was always graceful and effective, but never took high rank in the House as a debater."

I think this sentence, unintentionally of course, fails essentially in justice to Mr. Winthrop. I served with Mr. Winthrop in the Twenty-eighth, Twenty-ninth, and Thirtieth Congresses, in the House of Representatives. I had been with him previously in the house of representatives of Massachusetts, in the years of 1835, 1836, and 1837, and have heard his speeches on many public occasions. The value of such books as that of Mr. Blaine, and of the opinions therein expressed upon such a subject, must depend greatly upon the opportunity which the author has had to observe the continual conduct and character of debates. I think Mr. Blaine has never been associated with Mr. Winthrop in any deliberative assembly. I feel justified, therefore, and deem it a duty, on any proper occasion, to express a different opinion. Mr. Winthrop, while a member of the House, spoke upon many, I think most, of the important questions then discussed. He not only made what may be called set speeches, in which he was always graceful and effective, as Mr. Blaine says, but I think his utterances, as well in these as in general debate, placed him in a very high rank as a parliamentary debater, and that such was the general opinion of his associates. During the Congress in which he was Speaker of the House his duties were performed to the universal satisfaction of all parties. So far as I can I wish to give my testimony especially to his high rank as a debater, and to assure you that the passage I have quoted from Mr. Blaine is not just to Mr. Winthrop.

I am sure you will pardon me for these suggestions, as I am one of the few living who had these opportunities of observation.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

JULIUS ROCKWELL.

Hon. P. A. COLLINS.

[Applause.]

Mr. HAYDEN. The Thirty-fourth Congress met on the 3d of December, 1855. The House consisted of 234 members and 7 Territorial delegates, two new Territories having lately been formed, namely, Kansas and Nebraska. The Clerk of the House announced that a quorum had answered to their names, and a motion was made to proceed to the election of a Speaker. Then began one of the most memorable contests to elect a presiding officer of the House of Representatives known since the formation of the Government. The balloting continued day after day without an election, no candidate receiving a majority of the ballots. The debates which sprang up between the times of voting plainly expressed the temper of the public mind on the great question which agitated the country. It was a time of transition. The old parties were disintegrating; new ones were being formed; the question of slavery and freedom was uppermost in all minds, and this burning subject was forced to the front by the repeal of the compromises and the acts relating to slavery in the Territories. The passage of the Kansas-Nebraska bill had divided the party in power and had driven from it many sincere and earnest men opposed at heart to the institution of slavery; but love for the Constitution and reverence for the memory and acts of the fathers who framed that instrument had restrained them from the honest expression of hostility to that institution. Now, the barriers having been removed by the passage of these acts, the old struggle was renewed which from the earliest days had produced the fiercest and harshest debates and which shook the very foundation of this Government. Theretofore men with this veneration for the Constitution had spoken of slavery reluctantly, with bated breath and with euphemistic phrase; but now men spoke boldly and with no uncertain sound on this dominant subject, and it was apparent that the country was dividing as never before. The issue was being made and parties were forming which would bring this question to a final settlement, though then and later earnest efforts for conciliation and compromise were being made. The people of the country watched this contest of two months for Speaker with intense interest.

On the 2d of February, 1856, and on the one hundred and thirty-third ballot, the House elected, by the plurality rule, Nathaniel Prentiss Banks, of Massachusetts, Speaker. Mr. Banks was born in Waltham, in that State, January 30, 1816. The cotton-mills of this town were about the first in the country to take raw material and make it into a fabric under one roof. His parents were in humble circumstances and connected with the factory population. He attended the village school, and in early life entered the mills as an operative. Eager to learn, he was a great reader of the books in the library of the corporation, and he studied hard and continuously, being his own teacher. A bright lad, he was apt, and ready in discussion, and evinced much skill and information in the village debating society. The training got here made him later a prominent figure in the town meetings, where his dignity and grace of manner, oratorical power, quickness and facility in debate, won him many a victory on questions of local government. These steps in training advanced him to the public platform, and he took part in the Presidential campaign of 1840, advocating the election of Martin Van Buren. He was a candidate for the general court, but was defeated seven times before he gained a seat in the Massachusetts house of representatives. He was twice elected its speaker. He was president of the convention to revise the constitution, and was elected to the Thirty-third Congress as a Democrat. Elected to the Thirty-fourth Congress, "clothed," in his own words, "with a majority of 7,000, the largest majority, with a single exception, any man ever received in the political contests of Massachusetts. I may say, perhaps, that I represent the strongest anti-slavery district in the United States."

This was the elected Speaker of the Thirty-fourth Congress. During the contest, replying to a member, he said, "In my brief period of public life, not altogether a quiet one, I have relied upon myself alone. I have done that, under all circumstances, which my conviction taught me to be right." One member spoke of him "as the very bone and sinew of Free-soilism."

On January 9, 1856, Mr. Dunn, of Indiana, appealed to Massachusetts in these terms:

I put it to you, men of Massachusetts, if the lesson of the past does not say, concede a little? What is the teaching of your own great and glorious history, whenever it has been manifest that your personal wishes stood in the way of the attainment of a great end which we were all struggling for? Look at the burning page that is before you, and read its teachings. Let me ask in kindness, I beg of you, what is written in the history of your own eventful and brilliant past? Eight years, almost one-eighth of the existence of our Government—your children have sat in the chair of the Speakership of this House. There was your Sedgwick, your Varnum, your Winthrop. And in the other end of the Capitol twelve years of Presidency have been yours. Your great Adams and your Gerry have been there. The seat of highest honor—the Chief Magistracy—the great father and the great son, the elder and the younger Adams, have occupied. In the national Cabinet, from the first, your voice has almost always been heard. In our diplomatic relations, your name has been registered in nearly every court upon earth. You have earned these honors, and have worn them well. They were yours by the highest title—merit.

Mr. Knowlton, replying to this appeal:

The place has seemed to seek the man, and not the man the place. It is not Massachusetts that comes here and asks the election of the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts as Speaker. She, as a State, does not press it, although she may well be proud of the honorable gentleman for whom we are all proud to cast our votes. She does not press it. The great spirit of freedom aroused throughout the length and breadth of the free States of the Union has laid her hand upon that honorable gentleman, and is asking that he may go up to occupy that chair. And, so far as the West is concerned, so far as the pioneer spirit that dwells in the West is concerned—that spirit of energy which has led these men out into that land—where in all the Union can that spirit of inherent energy find a more fit representative than in the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, for whom we vote? Sir, if I may be pardoned the expression, he is a man whose native energy has broken through all the barriers that surrounded him, and he has raised himself to a position in the estimation of the free men of this nation of which any man on earth might well be proud.

As the presiding officer of the greatest legislative body, the experience acquired as moderator of the town meeting and as speaker of the Massachusetts house of representatives, fitted him admirably, and he gained a deserved reputation amongst all parties in the land. Of an erect figure, much dignity of manner; with a sonorous and attractive voice, untiring courtesy, fairness to all sides, he won the respect of the members, and ranks among the most successful of Speakers.

Elected to the Thirty-fifth Congress, he resigned, and was three times elected governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. During his administration the great institutions of learning and philanthropy, which that Commonwealth so zealously fosters and encourages, received his earnest attention.

Her militia, under his direction, became efficient, and had no superior in any State. All classes of citizens joined in doing him honor. He won the applause of scholars, when he represented the State at the annual commencement of its oldest university, by his eloquent words and elegant diction, and he retained to the end of his term the confidence and affection of his people.

During the civil war he commanded armies and great departments. The training of the soldier had not been his, but he was placed in high position, served faithfully and courageously, and was a prominent figure.

After the close of the war he was elected to the Thirty-ninth, Fortieth, Forty-second, Forty-fourth, and Forty-fifth Congresses. Since then he has served the country in other places, and always honestly and with ability.

This man of simple origin and scant education fitted himself by his own inherent strength and untiring industry to fill with credit any place within the gift of the people, and Massachusetts honors herself when she honors him whose steadfast integrity has always been conspicuous and whose public services command the praise of all her people.

It would not be becoming in me to indulge too much in eulogistic speech. He would so counsel me. I have pointed out in a brief way to the Representatives of the Fiftieth Congress the public services of Massachusetts' fourth contribution to the Speaker's chair. My honorable colleague has in eloquent words borne witness to the distinguished merits of Mr. Winthrop. These two men are a striking illustration of our free institutions; the one the descendant of the first governor of Massachusetts Bay, the recipient of all she could give in education and culture; the other of limited education, of simple surroundings, self-taught, have both occupied with equal ability the Speaker's chair and shared in that great prize of a great people.

Massachusetts to-day presents to the House of Representatives the portrait of Nathaniel Prentiss Banks, one of her honored sons, sprung from the plain people, from whose loins come the strength and prosperity of the land. [Applause.]

Mr. LODGE. It would be idle for me to attempt to add to what has been so eloquently said as to the Massachusetts Representatives who have filled the high place of Speaker in this House. Yet I can not forbear to say a few words as to one of the distinguished men whose portraits Massachusetts to-day presents to the nation. I am led to do this by a strong feeling of personal regard and by an equally strong sense of many kindnesses. I have, however, still another motive. In that famous declaration of literary independence which Dr. Johnson addressed to Lord Chesterfield he said, "The notice which you have been pleased to take of my labors, had it been early had been kind; but it has been delayed till I am indifferent, and can not enjoy it; till I am solitary and can not impart it; till I am known and do not want it."

The sentiment, with slight variation of phrase, is susceptible of wide application. We are too apt to give only criticism to the living man and reserve all our praise until he is dead. I do not mean by this the common praise that "crooks the pregnant hinges of the knee, that thrift may follow fawning," nor that which is poured out at the shrine where the fancy or the folly of the hour makes it fashionable to worship. I mean the praise of those who have nothing to expect and which is offered to those who have nothing to give. It is this which we are too ready to keep for the frigid lines of the epitaph or the obituary, when the heart which in life it might have stirred with pleasure is still and cold in death. We can certainly afford to praise a friend, when, as in the case of Mr. Winthrop, to whom I refer, his career as a public man has passed into history. It would seem, perhaps, too soon to say this, but it is not the lapse of time that has made historical the events of forty years ago. There is the gulf of a civil war between that time and this, and the mighty conflict which divided States and altered constitutions, which obliterated parties and swept social systems into ruin, has pushed into the domain of history men and events which by a mere counting of years would still belong to the present.

Turn to the pages of the Congressional Globe, which record the doings of the Thirtieth Congress, and run your eye down the list of committees appointed by Mr. Winthrop. It is a somewhat sobering exercise, for the names are for the most part mere names and nothing more. Some few are famous; some are remembered, and most forgotten. There are "some with lives that came to nothing, some with deeds as well undone." But if you scan the list closely you will find, as one of the gentlemen who preceded me said, last but one, on the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, the name of Abraham Lincoln. Try to realize what that name meant then, and think what it means to this country and to mankind to-day, and then comes a very sharp perception of how far the Thirtieth Congress has passed into history.

Mr. Winthrop filled the office of Speaker with ability and impartiality, as well as with the grace and courtesy for which he has ever been conspicuous. It is not my purpose, nor is it necessary, after what has been said to-day and on a previous occasion, to trace his public career either before or after that period. I desire simply to speak of him since his retirement from public life. Whatever his feelings may have been at the ending of a political career of unusual promise and success, he never swerved from that honorable service of the public which for two hundred and fifty years has been the habit and tradition of his race. As president of the Massachusetts Historical Society for more than a quarter of a century he has done a great work for the preservation and publication of our early historical records. By his writings he has largely contributed to American history. As president of the Provident Association, of Boston, and of the Peabody Trustees he has labored long and earnestly for the relief of poverty and suffering at his door, and for the spread of education throughout the country. His eloquence has graced many of our most memorable celebrations, and his orations at Yorktown and at the completion of the Washington Monument are still fresh in every one's memory.

With these simple allusions I must be content. I only desire to place upon the record this slight personal tribute, not so much to the Speaker of the Thirtieth Congress as to the scholar and historian, to the orator and the philanthropist; above all, to the good citizen and the kindly gentleman. Massachusetts is proud to be represented in these latter days on the honorable roll of the Speakers of this House by one who has added fresh luster to the name which she reveres as that of the founder of the Commonwealth, and also by the gray-haired soldier who has served both State and nation in the field and in civil life with so much patriotism and distinction. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I speak under the impulse which the occasion immediately prompts. The State of Massachusetts presents the portraits of ex-Speakers Theodore Sedgwick, who presided over the Sixth Congress; Joseph Bradley Varnum, who presided over the Tenth and Eleventh Congresses, and Nathaniel P. Banks, who presided over the Thirty-fourth Congress, to be placed alongside the portrait of Robert C. Winthrop, who presided over the Thirtieth Congress. I rise to offer a resolution accepting these portraits with the assurance, not only of this House but of others yet to sit here, they will be safely kept and treasured.

Massachusetts is affluent in her list of illustrious men who have added to her renown and that of our country. Theodore Sedgwick presided, as I have said, during the Sixth Congress. It was the Congress that sat during the last two years of Mr. John Adams's administration. He was a Federalist. Joseph Bradley Varnum presided during the Tenth and Eleventh Congresses, and was, as has been said here to-day, a disciple of Thomas Jefferson. His occupancy of that chair was during the stormy period preceding the second war of independence with Great Britain, from 1812 to 1815. Nathaniel P. Banks presided during the Thirty-fourth Congress, and it was the privilege of some of us to be here with him, not, perhaps, during his term as Speaker, but subsequently, and therefore we know better of him and are able to speak with more certainty.

Mr. Banks, to my mind, was a typical American. He came from the mill to preside over the deliberations of a body of men representing a country that to-day is without a superior. Mr. Banks in the discharge of that duty, and in his whole career, has given to us an example which teaches us the strength of our institutions, and their justice and impartiality, and demonstrates to American youth the truth that by industry, by perseverance, by energy and will power, the field is open for them to occupy almost any station to which those qualities of character can advance them. And it is because we have such a Government, affording such opportunities, we have been blessed with results commanding the admiration of the leading intellectual statesmen of civilization.

Soon after I entered this House, now more than a quarter of a century ago, I came to consider that that office which you, sir, now temporarily hold was the highest office within the reach of an American citizen; that it was a grand official station, great in the honors which it conferred and still greater in the ability it gave to impress upon our history and legislation the stamp of truth, fairness, justice, and right.

And, sir, there is a peculiar reason why these early Speakers who have occupied that chair are entitled to have what they did ever to be remembered, and their history never to be forgotten. They gave to the nation in its early years, after its organization, and when it came to be practically tested, a direction, force, strength, and success rarely equaled, and certainly not surpassed, by any government of the past or present time.

When it fell to my fortune to occupy the Speaker's chair, I realized how true was my idea of the position and its possibilities; and I do not believe there is any one worthy of being mentioned in connection with it, who, the very instant he takes it, will not become so broad and generous in the scope of his political vision as to act regardless of individual and personal consequences, and only for the best interests of the American people as his judgment shall dictate.

Public men in the United States, I am sorry to say, have few rewards or emoluments in return for the strain, the exacting labor, and the worry of public service; and yet the fact should be always kept in sight that the people do not always forget the good which their Representatives take part in doing; and I am sure I express the sentiment of all of us here when I say that it is a great incentive to exertion in the discharge of our duties to know our labors and services are not ignored or cast into oblivion. In the case of these eminent public servants they have been held in veneration for what they did in the past; and for the future, by the gift of the State of Massachusetts, their portraits will adorn our walls to carry down to posterity their well-earned and well-deserved fame. [Great applause.]

I now send up a resolution of acceptance, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this House has received with great satisfaction the portraits of Hon. Theodore Sedgwick, Speaker of the Sixth Congress, Hon. Joseph B. Varnum, Speaker of the Tenth and Eleventh Congresses, and Hon. Nathaniel P. Banks, Speaker of the Thirty-fourth Congress, presented by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and will cause them to be placed and preserved among those of the other distinguished men who in times past have presided over the House of Representatives.

[Applause.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to second the motion just submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania; and it is perhaps not altogether improper that the person selected to second this resolution should be a Representative from the State of Kentucky. Without any purpose to say one word in honor of that beloved State, whose people know that I love her with a passionate idolatry, it is not unbecoming to say that in her history there is no more glorious page than that on which are written the names and the deeds of her sons who have filled the Speaker's chair, and I to-day take advantage of the absence of one of those sons to say that in impartiality and intellectuality the son who fills it to-day never had a superior. [Applause.]

It is rather a peculiar fact, sir, that one of the gentlemen whose portrait we accept on this occasion was succeeded as Speaker by Henry Clay, of Kentucky, and another gentleman whose portrait we accept, Mr. Banks, himself succeeded Hon. Linn Boyd, of Kentucky; and if I may refer to so small a matter as a personal fact, my eldest son bears the name of a Kentucky delegate who voted twice to elect General Varnum Speaker of this House.

Mr. Speaker, as I meditated about what it might be proper to say this afternoon, the one great thought that continually arose in my mind was the contrast between to-day, when this representative body legislates for sixty millions of free men and for a country stretching from ocean to ocean, this day whose past is but the precursor of an ampler and nobler and more beloved future, and that day on which Theodore Sedgwick was born, a hundred and forty-two years ago. If any one standing by the side of his humble cradle on that May day in New England could have looked down the corridors of time and beheld the radiant effulgence of this glorious period, and, with prophetic ken and poetic power, have given utterance to it, he would have been held an insane dreamer of wild and impossible dreams.

The reality that has come to our ancestors and to ourselves outstrips all possible prophetic inspiration. And if we could widen the contrast and take in the whole English-speaking people, if we could measure the feebleness of that race of which we are a part, on that spring day those years ago, and see how to-day the uplifted cross, which has been carried in the hands of those who speak this marvelous tongue, has been permanently planted in every part of the globe, how the hot justice that marks our people and our civilization is melting away the barbarism in every part of the heathen earth, and how, under the benign rays of our Christianity, the fruits of nobler enterprises and higher hopes are daily growing into magnificence—if we could do this, we would realize somewhat of the duties which are committed by the very fact of inheritance to our hands, and the glory of the triumphs which await our children in the future.

This contrast continually pressed itself upon me as I meditated upon the scene that was to be presented here this afternoon. In a narrower sense each one of the periods marked by the terms of these three gentlemen is a historic period in our development. When John Adams gave way to Thomas Jefferson it was not merely the sequence of names in the dull chronology of office; it was something more than that. Without undertaking to defend or to attack the principles or the policies of either of the two parties that had contended for mastery, I may be permitted to suggest that underneath the transient and comparatively trivial contests and difficulties between those parties there were deeper causes of difference. The Jeffersonian party represented the spirit of annexation. It had turned its face towards the West. It had fixed its eyes upon the setting sun. It felt the throbbing pulsations of a new country, and, conscious of the pervasive power of free institutions, it felt that the arena upon which the future was to be worked out was the entire continent. Modes of government, constructions of constitutions, the mere crystallizations of legislation, were not the true causes of difference. That policy which had at its head Mr. Jefferson looked to the accomplishment of a world-wide republic. It aimed to found a form of government so flexible that two States could be harmonious under it, or a hundred States could be united and happy in its progressive power. Realizing that that growth could only be attained by setting aside the trammels that were sought to be put upon the majestic limbs of this new mistress of the West, the followers of Jefferson changed not only the personnel of the Government, but the policies of the Government also, and when Theodore Sedgwick went out of the Speaker's chair a Jeffersonian Democrat went into the Speaker's chair.

Fifty years passed away. The annexation had been accomplished. The Mississippi no longer divided us. Our fathers had gone across the continent. The muniments of our title were blood-stained by the victories of Buena Vista, and from Vera Cruz to the city of Mexico. Grave questions arose as to what should be the future of this ocean-bound Republic, and in the midst of the throes of the dying Whig party, in the midst of the changes that this very annexation produced, in the beginning of the consolidations that were to follow that disintegration, Massachusetts, who had lost leadership in 1801, stepped ready armed with all the culture that Harvard had given her, with all the heroic blood that poured through the veins coming from the Adamses and Quincys, with a generation equal to the generation of the Revolution—ay, superior in all the elements of true manhood and of lofty culture to that Revolutionary generation—Massachusetts stepped to the front; and as the beginning of the leadership in that tremendous struggle, Nathaniel Prentiss Banks became Speaker of the House of Representatives; and though Orr followed him, and though a Democrat was elected once more, yet practically from 1855 until 1875 the House of Representatives registered the decrees of Massachusetts and the Republic of America followed the lead of the old Bay Commonwealth. I do not exaggerate, Mr. Speaker, I think, when I say that from 1855 to 1875—whether it was for weal or for woe, whether it was wisely or unwisely done, men may differ and historians may dispute—but as a matter of fact Massachusetts led America and led her with an audacity and an aggressiveness, with a skill and an eloquence, with a power and force that have never been surpassed in all the tide of time in the leadership of a great people. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, is this all of it? Is this the end of the chapter? Is this ceremonial about the past all that is to be said and all that is to enter our hearts on this early day of a new year? In some other hall, when the assembled representatives of many more millions are met together to accept the picture of some other Speaker, some Speaker as earnest, as dutiful, as resolute as these, some Speaker such as the eminent gentleman who has just preceded me [Mr. RANDALL], whose name honors the list of Speakers [general applause]—when some one, standing as I stand to-day, seconds the motion then to be made as I do the motion submitted to-day, may he not with more eloquent tongue felicitate himself and his country upon the added triumphs that he and his enjoy, that will have come down from this evening to that day?

As we go away to-day from this scene the thought which in my heart is uppermost has a tinge of envy in it. I envy the little boy who, careless to-day of this transaction, may live to see the development of the next seventy years. I feel toward him a certain degree of jealousy that he will see so much more than we have seen. I am glad, Mr. Speaker, I did not live when Washington lived; I am glad I lived not when Warren fell at Bunker Hill; I am glad that I have lived in a later day, amid other generations, that thereby I became the inheritor of all the accumulated glory, all the aggregated heroism, all the nameless and indescribable sacrifices that man has put forth from that day to this; and as I project myself into the future I do not accept the olive branch that my friend from Massachusetts has held out to me, but, lovingly waving it aside, I take with outstretched hand his outstretched hand, and I challenge Massachusetts to a nobler rivalry for higher purposes in that glorious future which I pray God to give those we love. [Loud and long-continued applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on the adoption of the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

The resolution was adopted unanimously.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 20, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS IN MINNESOTA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates from the Secretary of the Interior of appropriations to fulfill agreements with Chippewa Indians in Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY OF MOUTH OF BRAZOS RIVER, TEXAS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, a report of the survey at the mouth of the Brazos River, in Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF MUSKINGUM RIVER, OHIO.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Chief of Engineers in regard to the improvement of Muskingum River, Ohio; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following bills of the Senate; which were severally read twice, and referred as indicated:

The bill (S. 81) for the relief of H. B. Wilson, administrator of the estate of William Tinder, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1027) to fix the charge for passports at $1—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In regard to the reference of the last bill, the Chair has investigated the precedents and finds that at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress a bill of similar purport was referred to the committee which the Chair has just indicated, the Committee on the Judiciary.

RETURN OF BILL TO SENATE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House the following request from the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN SENATE UNITED STATES, January 18, 1888.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate Senate bill 928, in relation to the marriage between white men and Indian women.

There was no objection; and the request of the Senate was granted, and the bill ordered to be returned.

PACIFIC RAILROAD COMMISSION REPORTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House a letter received by the Clerk of the House from the Public Printer.

The Clerk read as follows:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 19, 1888.

SIR: The resolution to print 10,000 copies of the President's message and accompanying reports of the Pacific Railroad Commission is herewith returned, for the reason that our estimates place the cost of the same at $805, being in excess of the amount of printing permissible on resolution of the House.

Very respectfully,

TH. E. BENEDICT,
Public Printer.

JOHN B. CLARK, Esq.,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the letter will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have a resolution to submit which I believe is privileged in its character.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will send it up.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed for the use of the House 10,000 copies of the President's message and accompanying reports of the majority and minority of the Pacific Railroad Commission.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The letter of the Public Printer shows it will take $805 to print these documents, and under the law that printing can not be done under a simple House resolution. I therefore submit the concurrent resolution which has just been read, and ask for its present consideration and adoption.

There was no objection, and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. DE LANO, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HAYDEN, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. LAWLER, for to-day.

To Mr. WILBER, for ten days from to-day.

TERM OF CIRCUIT COURT, KANSAS CITY.

Mr. WARNER. I ask, by unanimous consent, to discharge the House Calendar from further consideration of a bill (H. R. 1604) to change the time of the sessions of the circuit court of the western division of the western district of Missouri, and to take it up for consideration at this time.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sessions of the circuit court of the United States for the western division of the western district of Missouri, at the city of Kansas, shall begin and be held on the first Monday of March and the fourth Monday of September of each year. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. All process issued from the clerk's office of said court shall be taken and considered as returnable to the term or terms hereby established in lieu of the term or terms existing at the time such process was issued.

Mr. WARNER. I will state, Mr. Speaker, this bill simply changes the time of holding the terms of the United States circuit court of the western division of the western district of Missouri, held at Kansas City. It has received the approval of the United States circuit judge and the bar of that State, and was introduced at their request. There can be, of course, no objection to its passage.

Mr. CULBERSON. The effect of that bill is merely to change the time of holding the terms of the circuit court in Kansas City.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SIGNING OF PATENTS.

Mr. PAYSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 5514) to amend section 4883 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask for the reading of the bill, and I ask, by unanimous consent, it may be taken up and put on its passage at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

And be it enacted, etc., That section 4883 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after the words "Secretary of the Interior" where that name occurs, the following words, "or under his direction by one of the Assistant Secretaries of the Interior;" so that the said section, as amended, will read as follows:

"SEC. 4883. All patents shall be issued in the name of the United States of America under the seal of the Patent Office, and shall be signed by the Secretary of the Interior, or under his direction by one of the Assistant Secretaries of the Interior, and countersigned by the Commissioner of Patents; and they shall be recorded, together with these specifications, in the Patent Office in books to be kept for that purpose."

Mr. PAYSON. Under existing law all patents must be signed by the Secretary of the Interior. By his request, and under his direction, this bill was drawn to relieve him of that clerical labor, so if this bill passes he may designate one of the Assistant Secretaries to perform that clerical work of affixing his signature to letters patent and copyright.

The bill was presented to the Judiciary Committee, and I am authorized by them to say it is approved unanimously by them. The draught which I have presented was prepared by the present Secretary of the Interior, and is presented at his request.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. BLANCHARD, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 322) to authorize the Southwestern Arkansas and Indian Territory Railroad Company to build a bridge across the Ouachita River in Arkansas; and the same was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

IMPROVEMENT OF NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a short memorial of the National Board of Trade.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

It is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The National Board of Trade, now in session in the city of Washington, respectfully memorializes your honorable bodies in favor of adequate appropriations for the improvement of our navigable rivers and harbors; for the removal of obstructions therein in an expeditious and thorough manner; and for surveys thereof, with a view to define the jurisdiction of the United States over them, so that provision may be made by law to prevent obstructions therein.

By vote and in behalf of the board.

FREDK. FRALEY, President.
H. A. HILL, Secretary.

WASHINGTON, January 19, 1888.

WILLIAM D. WILSON.

Mr. STOCKDALE, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 828) for the relief of William D. Wilson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

John Burkhart; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LUCIUS J. SEALS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 5515) for the relief of Lucius J. Seals; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM L. TRAVIS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2273) for the relief of William L. Travis; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. WEEKS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 5516) for the relief of John H. Weeks; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FLORA ADAMS DARLING.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I am instructed to report back the findings of the Court of Claims in a case which was improperly referred to the Committee on War Claims. It should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary through the petition-box.

Mr. DUNN. This bill, as I understand it, goes to the Judiciary Committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule provides that the change of reference shall be made through the petition-box in such cases.

The bill will go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WIDOW OF LIEUT. JOHN F. STEWART.

Mr. BROWER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 456) for the relief of the widow of Lieut. John F. Stewart; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NORFOLK COUNTY FERRY COMMITTEE.

Mr. BLISS, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 5517) for the relief of the Norfolk County Ferry Committee; which was read a first and second time, referred to Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of committees for reports is now completed.

Mr. LANHAM. I demand the regular order.

Mr. CRISP. I rise to a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRISP. I call up for present consideration the contested-election case of Thobe vs. Carlisle.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman from Georgia permit me to make a statement?

Mr. CRISP. Certainly.

Mr. LANHAM. I wish to state, within the hearing of the gentleman from Georgia, that this is the day specially set apart by the rules of the House for the consideration of business upon the Private Calendar. I have no disposition to antagonize his motion for the speedy consideration of the report mentioned by him. But as this is the only day for private business, I would like to see, if possible, whether we can not effect an arrangement whereby to-morrow may be substituted for to-day for the consideration of such business. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, by permission of the gentleman from Georgia, that on to-morrow the business on the Private Calendar shall be the special order instead of for to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. WEAVER. It seems to me, with the understanding that the Private Calendar comes on to-day after the disposition of the election case, there could be no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman from Georgia indicate the probable length of time which will be consumed in the consideration of the election case?

Mr. CRISP. I am not able to state accurately how much time will be required. I understand that some gentlemen on the other side desire to debate the resolution submitted by the committee, but what time they will need I can not state. I will, however, endeavor to ascertain after the reading of the report what time gentlemen desire. My purpose is that there shall be a full opportunity given to every member to submit remarks upon this question, and I should be very glad, Mr. Speaker, if the House would consent to the request of the gentleman from Texas. I will state further that the Committee on Elections would not ask this action to-day, but would agree to call it up to-morrow, were it not for the fact that to-morrow has been assigned by the committee for a hearing in the contested-election case from Alabama, and not to hear it at that time would be a disappointment and a hardship to the parties interested, as well as to the counsel in the case.

Mr. LANHAM. Then I ask consent of the House that to-morrow may be set apart for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent that the consent asked by the gentleman from Texas shall not interfere with the evening session?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. For what purpose is the evening session?

A MEMBER. For the consideration of pension bills.

Mr. TAULBEE. I withdraw the request I made.

Mr. WEAVER. I see no objection to proceeding with private business after the election case is disposed of, and also to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman has modified his request so that the House may proceed with private business to-day after the election case is disposed of, and also to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the request of the gentleman from Texas, as modified, will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield to me for a few moments, that I may rise to a question of personal privilege?

Mr. CRISP. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. SPRINGER. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read an extract from the RECORD of to-day which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Chairman, the people of Philadelphia and Pennsylvania, of New Jersey, and Massachusetts, and Delaware, and the individual subscribers to the stock were not a little surprised when they found that there was a member of the Congress that appropriated the $1,500,000—who, by the way, is a member of this Congress also—who claimed a fee of $10,000 for having astutely inserted the clause in the bill making that loan on which he could go into court and enforce its repayment. When the United States Government brought its suit, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and their coadjutors submitted the question quietly to the circuit court, which rejected the Government's claim, from which decision, however, an appeal was taken, and on an intimation from the Supreme Court that the language of the law justified the Government in demanding repayment, judgment was entered and the money was immediately paid.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker I dislike very much to believe that the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is so uniformly courteous in his manner toward the members of this House, would intentionally put upon the records of Congress a statement which did injustice to one of his fellow-members; and I think a brief statement from me will satisfy that distinguished gentleman that he has done me great injustice. The remark made by him was at the time I was occupying the Speaker's chair as chairman of the Committee of the Whole House and had no opportunity to reply; and if I had undertaken to reply before the pending bill was disposed of, it would have carried it beyond the consideration hour and placed it in the order of unfinished business, where its friends could not have obtained the action of the House upon it for several days at least. Therefore I ask the privilege this morning of making this statement.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania stated in the remark which I sent to the Clerk's desk that a member of the Congress to which he referred, who was also a member of this Congress, had astutely obtained an amendment to the centennial bill which required the money appropriated by that bill to be refunded to the United States, and for that service demanded a fee of $10,000. As I was a member of that Congress, and as the amendment upon which the decision of the Supreme Court turned was moved by me in that Congress, of course I take it for granted that no other person than myself could be referred to. I did move the amendment in the Forty-fourth Congress to the centennial appropriation bill which changed that appropriation from a Congressional donation to a loan, and required the board of finance, after the conclusion of the exhibition, to sell all the property on hand, convert it into cash, and first repay the United States the $1,500,000 which was appropriated by Congress before any division of assets was made among the stockholders. That proposition was carried in the House. It went to the Senate and the bill was so passed and became a law.

At the close of the exposition the board of finance was of the opinion that the money remaining in their hands belonged to the stockholders of the centennial company, and that no part of it belonged to the Government; but the district attorney of the United States in Philadelphia, Mr. Valentine, I believe, was instructed to bring a suit against the centennial board of finance in the United States circuit court at Philadelphia, Mr. Justice Strong presiding. That case was heard. Briefs and arguments were submitted. Able counsel appeared on both sides, and Mr. Justice Strong decided, after stating the facts and his reasons, as follows:

For these reasons we are of the opinion that the fund in the treasury of the centennial board of finance should be distributed pro rata among the stockholders of the corporation, as directed by the tenth section of the act of 1872; and as it is insufficient to pay to the stockholders the full amount invested by them as stockholders, as no part of it is made up of profits, the case contemplated in the proviso has not arisen, and the United States is entitled to no part of the fund.

I quote from the printed record of the case in the Supreme Court, page 23. The proviso mentioned by Judge Strong contains the amendment which I moved to the centennial act of February 16, 1876, and which was adopted.

As soon as that decision was published I went to the Attorney-General in person and called his attention to it, and stated to him that I was satisfied the court had erred in making it, and asked him to appeal the case to the Supreme Court of the United States. He stated to me if I would put my request in writing he would make the order for the appeal. I thereupon returned to my seat in the House, and on 22d January, 1877, sent a letter to the Attorney-General, which I will ask to have incorporated in my remarks.

It is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, D. C., January 22, 1877.

SIR: I see from the papers that the United States court at Philadelphia has decidedly adversely to the claim of the Government to the $1,500,000 appropriated to the centennial board of finance in February, 1876. I have read the decision of the court in that case, and am quite sure the court has entirely misapprehended the true intent and meaning of the act of Congress. Having moved the amendment which in some way has perhaps influenced the decision, I respectfully ask that the case be taken to the Supreme Court.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. M. SPRINGER.

Hon. A. TAFT, Attorney-General, Washington, D. C.

The case was therefore taken to the Supreme Court. In a conversation I had at the time with Attorney-General Taft he said it was an important matter, and when the case was considered in the Supreme Court he desired me to appear on behalf of the United States and argue the case for the Government. I stated to him I would gladly do so. He thought it would be just to the House of Representatives which had passed this amendment, as well as to myself who had moved it, that I should be heard.

To prove the truth of this statement, I will quote the following extract from a letter written by Attorney-General Taft, November 9, 1877, to a member of this House at that time:

Without wishing to deprive Mr. SPRINGER of compensation for his argument, I am bound to say, however, that my authorizing him to assist in the argument did not arise from any want of legal assistance in the Department of Justice, but from a desire that Mr. SPRINGER and the House of Representatives might be satisfied that their views of the act were properly presented.

This statement of Attorney-General Taft discloses the motive which prompted him to authorize my employment as counsel in the case. The reason is creditable to him, and conclusively demonstrates that my appearance in the case was not only professionally honorable and free from all criticism, but in fulfillment of a public duty which I owed to the House of Representatives, of which I was a member.

I desire to state now, and my recollection is clear upon that point, that the suggestion first came from the Attorney-General that I should appear for the Government in that case, and not from me.

To that fact I have made affidavit heretofore and am ready to make it again, if necessary. The case was appealed, and I was immediately notified by Attorney-General Taft. I have here his original letter in which he notified me that an appeal had been taken, stating also that the case had been advanced and would be heard at a very early day, which fact, he stated, involved prompt attention to the preparation for the argument. I proceeded to prepare for the argument, as suggested. I will ask this letter to be printed as a part of my remarks.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, January 27, 1877.

MY DEAR SIR: I have instructed the district attorney of Philadelphia to appeal the centennial case as you request; I consented, also, on the request of the centennial board, that the case might be brought forward on the docket of the Supreme Court, so that it may be heard without much delay. This seemed to be reasonable, in order to facilitate that board in making a final settlement of their centennial responsibilities. It involves, however, prompt attention to the preparation for the argument.

Yours, very truly,

ALPHONSO TAFT,
Attorney-General.

Hon. WM. M. SPRINGER, M. C.

I have here also a copy of the brief which I submitted in behalf of the Government, covering 40 printed pages, printed at the Government Printing Office, by order of the Attorney-General. I have also a transcript of the record of the case in the Supreme Court. I have also copies of the briefs and arguments—very able arguments they were—submitted by the gentleman who appeared for the board of finance. The case was argued in the Supreme Court, each side being allowed the usual time, two hours. Mr. Smith, the Assistant Attorney-General, stated to the court that the principal argument for the Government would be made by me, that he would not discuss the merits of the case at any length, but would confine himself to a formal statement of the facts, leaving it to me to make the principal argument.

That was done. The court heard the arguments, and after a few weeks they decided the case. The decision will be found in 4 Otto, 500, and it will be seen from an examination of the record that the Supreme Court, with the exception of Mr. Justice Strong, unanimously reversed the decision of the court below, and ordered this money to be paid into the Treasury, and it was paid in pursuance of a mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States. That ended my connection with the case as a lawyer. It has been stated frequently in the press that I had demanded and received $10,000 for this service; and it was stated by the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania yesterday, that I had "claimed a fee of $10,000 for having astutely inserted" the amendment into the bill which provided for the repayment of this money to the Government. I state here that I have never asked heretofore that $10,000, or any sum of money, be paid me for my professional services in that case, nor do I ask it now. What I did in the matter was this: I filed in the petition-box, in the Forty-fifth Congress, my petition as a citizen, calling attention to my services in this matter, and submitting a copy of the briefs in the case, and an affidavit setting forth the facts. That affidavit remained on the files of this House until this day, when I withdrew it a few minutes ago, and I have it now in my hand. In my petition I asked, not that anything should be paid to me, but that the case should be referred to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal as in other cases, leaving that court to determine whether my services were of any value to the United States or not.

When I went before the Committee on the Judiciary I was asked to consent that a sum should be fixed as compensation for my services and inserted in a bill which should be reported to the House. I said I preferred that that should not be done; that I did not desire to receive any compensation from a body of which I was a member; that all I asked was to be permitted to go into court like any other citizen, and show there the services I had rendered, and their value, and get a judgment for the amount, if the court should so decide. That petition was considered by the Judiciary Committee, and on the 21st day of February, 1878, General Butler, of Massachusetts, by the unanimous instruction of the committee, reported a bill to the House referring the claim to the Court of Claims, like other cases, and in his report, which I hold in my hand, he set forth the circumstances of the services rendered by me, and had the kindness to say that those services were valuable to the Government, that the claim was a just and reasonable one, and that the remedy provided for in the bill reported to the House should be afforded.

I will ask permission of the House to print with my remarks the bill and report thereon.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Court of Claims is hereby directed to take jurisdiction of the claim of Hon. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER, and determine the amount, if any, due him for professional services rendered the United States in the case of the centennial board of finance and others against the assistant treasurer of the United States at Philadelphia, lately decided in the Supreme Court.

The following is the report of the committee thereon:

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report:

[No. 237, to accompany bill H. R. 3388.]

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill in relation to the compensation of Hon. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER, for professional services rendered the United States, having considered the subject, beg leave to report:

That a suit in the nature of a bill of interpleader arose between the central board of finance of the centennial exhibition and the assistant treasurer of the United States at Philadelphia, involving the right of the United States to $1,500,000 claimed by the assistant treasurer on behalf of the United States, under the provisions contained in the act of February 16, 1876. This claim was duly heard before the circuit court of the eastern district of Pennsylvania and decided against the United States. Afterward, upon an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, the case was advanced on the docket and was decided in favor of the United States, and by such decision $1,500,000 was put into the Treasury of the United States for its use.

There was evidence before your committee tending to show that Mr. SPRINGER was employed by the Attorney-General of the United States to take charge of the cause as the leading counsel before the Supreme Court of the United States; that Mr. SPRINGER did prepare a brief in the cause and gave to it very considerable time and attention; argued it fully, the brief of which argument shows a good amount of labor in preparation, and skillfully presents the point before the court upon which the adjudication of the case was finally made.

Mr. SPRINGER was a member of Congress at the time the service was rendered, and so could not be appointed assistant district attorney and draw pay under the law regulating the Department of Justice, and hence he has made application to Congress that the Court of Claims may take jurisdiction of the case.

There appears to your committee to be no inhibition of law against his appearing in behalf of the United States, or, indeed, against the United States, as professional counsel in the duly constituted civil courts of the United States, while being such member of Congress; nor is your committee convinced that the law which provides that no officer of the United States shall receive pay other than his salary for any services rendered by him to the United States meets the case of Mr. SPRINGER, or was intended to include or does include such services as he rendered. Certainly it can not be claimed that a member of Congress is bound to try the causes of the United States in its law courts, or, if employed by the Attorney-General so to do for the best interests of the Government, that he ought not to be paid as any other counsel would be for like services. He doubtless would have been paid if there had been an appropriation out of which he could have been paid according to law.

Appreciating the delicacy of his position, Mr. SPRINGER's bill, presented to your committee, asked to have his claim for services referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication, so that he might not seem to be asking Congress, of which he was a member, to vote him a sum of money, but only that a proper court might adjudicate what was the value of his services to the Government, and pay him such sum as he merits. This, of course, relieves the committee from any discussion of what sum Mr. SPRINGER ought to be paid for his services, as that must be determined upon evidence by the Court of Claims.

In the judgment of your committee, the services of Mr. SPRINGER were valuable; the claim is a just and reasonable one, and the remedy set forth in the bill ought to be afforded.

The bill reported by the Judiciary Committee at that time went on the Calendar of Private Bills, but it was never reached, and there the matter has remained from that time to this. I have here, Mr. Speaker, a letter which I deem of considerable value to me personally, on account of the distinguished gentleman who wrote it—Hon. Richard T. Merrick, now deceased. In that letter Mr. Merrick states that he has investigated the matter, and gives his judgment as to the value of my services, and I think everybody will agree that on a question of that kind Mr. Merrick was a judge of the very highest competency and character. In this letter he states that my services were clearly worth to the Government $30,000, and that in making his estimate he had put the figure far below what would ordinarily be charged for like services in a case of similar magnitude between individuals. I will print Mr. Merrick's letter in full in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. It is as follows:

LINWOOD, August 8, 1878.

MY DEAR SIR: The necessity for passing back and forth between this place and Washington must excuse me for allowing your favor of the 31st ultimo to remain unanswered for so many days.

You inclose report, No. 237, submitted to the House with the bill referring your claim to the Court of Claims for adjudication, and ask my opinion as to the amount that ought to be paid to you for professional services in the case.

Independent of the statement contained in the report, I have a personal knowledge of your connection with the litigation from two or three interviews with you whilst you were preparing to argue the case in the Supreme Court, in which we discussed the questions involved.

You were deeply interested in the case, gave it much earnest thought and labor, and argued it with great ability. The judgment of the circuit court which had been obtained against the United States was reversed by the Supreme Court, and $1,500,000 thus saved to the Government.

Considering the amount involved and the peril in which it was placed by an adverse decision of the court below, and your successful effort to reverse that decision, I think that your compensation should certainly not be less than $30,000, being 2 per cent. only on the amount in litigation.

I will add that this is a very moderate estimate according to the ordinary rate of fees for the argument of cases in the Supreme Court of the United States, where the counsel succeeds in obtaining a reversal of the judgment below and secures to his client the entire fund in dispute.

Sincerely and truly, yours,

R. T. MERRICK.

Hon. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER.

Gentlemen must remember that in the case as it stood when I entered it there was a decision of the United States court below to the effect that this money belonged to the board of finance of the centennial exposition, and that no part of it should go to the Government; that at my request the case was appealed; that I appeared for the Government as its attorney to argue the case; that the Supreme Court unanimously reversed the judgment of the court below, and in pursuance of this decision the whole sum of $1,500,000 was paid into the Treasury of the United States. If that case had been between two great railroad corporations of this country, and my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania had been retained by one of those companies, and had made the principal argument in behalf of the company that took the appeal, had had the judgment against it reversed, and had thus secured to his clients by his services the sum of $1,500,000, would he have considered himself too highly paid if the sum which Mr. Merrick indicated had been tendered him?

But I will state for myself that I never had the slightest idea of receiving any such sum from the Government, nor did I desire to receive it. I only desired that the case should be heard by the Court of Claims in the first instance, and taken thence to the tribunal that heard the argument in the case, read the briefs, and knew what was done, and could well compare those services with the services of other attorneys appearing before them from day to day. I was willing to take whatever compensation that high tribunal would say I was entitled to as the attorney for the Government in that case.

Having made this statement, Mr. Speaker, I hope the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, for whom I have personally the highest regard, will do me the justice to retract the statement which he has made, and, so far as he can, withdraw it from the record.

Mr. BAYNE. How much did the Court of Claims find——

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman means the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. BAYNE. How much did the Court of Claims find you were entitled to?

Mr. SPRINGER. The bill which proposed to refer the matter to the Court of Claims was never passed at all; the question never went to the Court of Claims. The bill remained on the Calendar, and was never considered in the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Did you receive anything for your services?

Mr. SPRINGER. I never received a cent for that service. If the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania wants to do me justice, he can move the passage of a bill sending this case to the Court of Claims in order that I may get what it or the Supreme Court, on appeal, may decide the Government owes me. But whatever claim I may have in that regard, I presume I shall have to leave as a legacy to my posterity. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I should dislike very much to remember having done an injustice to the amiable gentleman from Illinois. I did not mean to do one; I do not mean to do one now, when I reaffirm in the language of the RECORD what I said yesterday. I then said, Mr. Speaker:

The people of Philadelphia and Pennsylvania, of New Jersey, and Massachusetts, and Delaware, and the individual subscribers to the stock, were not a little surprised when they found that there was a member of the Congress that appropriated the $1,500,000—who, by the way, is a member of this Congress also—who claimed a fee of $10,000 for having astutely inserted the clause in the bill making that loan on which he could go into court and enforce its repayment.

If there be wrong to the gentleman in that statement, I regret it; but I have lived long under what I have believed to be the well-founded expectation of that gentleman to receive $10,000 as a reward for having obtruded himself in this case upon the United States official whose duty it was to take charge of it. Such was the popular belief of the day; and I remember to have been waited upon by one who was recognized by me as a friend of that gentleman to ascertain whether if he preferred a professional claim in the matter I would oppose it, and I answered no; that if the gentleman entertained the idea of pressing such a claim I would be glad to have it put on record publicly. And when I was asked whether I thought $10,000 would be too large a fee for the recovery of a million and a half of dollars, I answered no; that if, in any case in which I might have been retained, I had gained an amount like that for my client, I should ask a much larger fee; and there the conversation ended. But I supposed, and now believe, that that gentleman came to me as the friend of my friend from Illinois.

I may feel a little more deeply than I should upon this subject of any claim or pretended claim for the professional services of a man who intervened in the case and magnified its importance and the importance of his possible service to officials who were charged with looking after and attending to the interests involved.

Sir, I am no longer as young as I was soon after I entered the bar; but I have carried from that time till the present the impressions derived from the seniors of a bar which was conspicuous as the foremost bar in the Union in the early days of the Government and until 1824, when the Erie Canal supplanted the commercial facilities offered by Pennsylvania turnpikes, and Philadelphia became the second commercial city of the country. I grew up at the feet of those Gamaliels, and one lesson which they each and all taught, when evil occasion invited criticism of such matter, was that no man was entitled to a fee in litigation which he had engendered.

Mr. SPRINGER. One more word, with the indulgence of the House. I regret very much that after the statement I have made the gentleman from Pennsylvania insists upon his declaration that I demanded $10,000 for procuring the insertion in the bill of a clause making the appropriation a loan instead of a donation.

Mr. KELLEY. Will not the gentleman take in what I said?

Mr. SPRINGER. I thought I took it in. Will the gentleman read it again?

Mr. KELLEY. I spoke of the gentleman going into court. I did not allude to the fact that he invited himself to be put on the record as an attorney in the case and then went into court. I dealt gently with him. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. And I shall deal gently with the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania. I always desire to treat him kindly and will do so now. He used these words:

> Who claimed a fee of $10,000 for having astutely inserted the clause in the bill making that a loan on which he could go into court and enforce its repayment.

Now, does the gentleman mean to say that I have ever demanded a fee of $10,000 for having inserted in a legislative bill of any kind in this House any provision whatever?

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman say——

Mr. SPRINGER. Answer that question.

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, I am about to answer it. Now, will the gentleman from Illinois say that he did not invite attention of the United States legal authorities to the fact that there was a clause in it that suit ought to be instituted, and that he went into court to press that clause, and when the circuit court of the United States had decided—the suit which the district attorney of the United States when he had intervened in the case had declined to press—that he then pressed it? But, Mr. Speaker, I did not tell the whole story of his going into court, from court to court, from district attorney to Attorney-General, to show how important his services were. The thing had an ugly odor then, and I do not think it is savory now. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania still insists on his statement with some limitations which the statement does not make.

Mr. KELLEY. The limitation appears in the RECORD of this morning, containing the report of what occurred yesterday.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman states this in the RECORD, that I claimed a fee of $10,000 for having astutely inserted the clause in the bill making that a loan on which I could go into court and enforce its repayment. That is the language of the gentleman. Does he adhere to that statement?

Mr. KELLEY. I do not mean that he demanded a fee for inserting that clause.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then you withdraw that statement?

Mr. KELLEY. If I may state——

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, you withdraw that statement.

Mr. KELLEY. Allow me to speak for myself. I do not think the gentleman demanded a fee for inserting that clause. If I am understood as saying that he demanded $10,000 for inserting that clause, I am misunderstood. What I mean to say is that, knowing the purport of his own clause, he was the one man among more that 50,000,000 of American citizens who felt that the citizens of Philadelphia and the subscribers to that exposition from Pennsylvania, Delaware, New Jersey, and Massachusetts ought to be made to pay its burdens, and who, following his own tracks, hunted them until he stripped them of their investment, patriotic as it was. [Applause.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's statement is satisfactory so far as withdrawing the statement he made. He does not now say all that I quoted from his remarks, but withdraws that part wherein he said I claimed a fee of $10,000 for inserting this provision in the bill.

Mr. KELLEY. I did not mean to say that.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to say that if the gentleman means to state that I demanded a fee for inserting that clause in the bill, he states what is not true and utters that for which there is no foundation either in my conduct then or since. If he means, however, merely to state I pursued that case with all the zeal and ability I had to the highest court in the country and obtained from that tribunal a decision that the stockholders of the centennial exposition were not entitled to that money, but that it belonged to the people of the United States, and should go into the Treasury, where it did go——

Mr. KELLEY. My proposition yesterday——

Mr. SPRINGER. Allow me to finish my sentence. If the gentleman imputes that as disreputable conduct on my part, I beg to assure him that I am proud of my record in that case and regard it as the best service I have rendered the people since I have been a member of Congress. That is the judgment of my constituents, also, who have returned me here to six Congresses in succession, since that time. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY rose.

Mr. SPRINGER. One moment further. The governor of the State of Pennsylvania informed the United States in 1872 that all provisions were made for the pay of the expenses of that exposition, and that not one dollar would be asked of the Government of the United States to pay for that exposition. Every bill which passed Congress on this subject was based upon the fact that the expenses of that exposition were to be borne by the people interested in it and not by the Government of the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States in its decision, in 4th Otto, to which I have referred, bears me out in relation to the language of my amendment in this case, and I will read it:

> Giving that signification to the word in this case, we encounter no difficulties. The statutes are complete, and there is nothing to supply. Everything is in harmony, and no strained construction is required. All accounts are easily adjusted, without resort to unusual proceedings.

Thus the court held that all the statutes passed (and there were several acts passed on the subject) were in harmony with each other, including the act last passed requiring the money appropriated to be paid back to the United States.

The gentleman says that the people of Pennsylvania are entitled to great credit for having gotten up this exposition. New York wanted it, other States wanted it, the merchants, the railroad interests, and the hotel interests in every city and State desired this centennial exposition held in their locality.

And why, Mr. Speaker? Because it was well known that thousands of people from every part of this country, from the Lakes to the Gulf, and from California to Maine, would rush to that city which secured its location. Philadelphia secured the prize. Visitors to the exposition staid there from one day to three or four weeks, or perhaps months, and they left millions of dollars in that city. The other places that were competitors for the exposition never objected to having these benefits received by the people of Philadelphia. When the citizens of Philadelphia and Pennsylvania and other States put their money into the stock of this exposition it was done with the expectation that it was a contribution to the great celebration there, and that the compensation to them for the money subscribed would be in the increased transportation on the railways, in the increased business of their merchants, in the traffic on the street railways, and in the profits to owners of livery-stables, keepers of boarding-houses, and the great gain which would come to all of the other manifold interests which reaped millions of dollars profit out of it.

Mr. KELLEY. I beg leave to say to the gentleman from Illinois that I would like to make my interruption while he is still on the floor, for he may want to reply to it, and I do not want, after he shall have closed his remarks, to again call his attention to the matter.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will yield to the gentleman now.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman proclaims the fact that this was one of the most honored, honorable, and to-be-remembered events of his life. It might have been so if it had not been followed by the suggestion of reward on the part of the man who, according to his own statement, deserves credit for having inserted the clause upon which that claim was to be fixed. I do not think the average professional sense can possibly feel that the gentleman should derive any satisfaction from looking back on that record, winding up with General Butler's bill to send WILLIAM M. SPRINGER'S claim for professional services to the Court of Claims to adjust the amount he had earned.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania again, and I say it with a full knowledge of all the facts involved, that the first suggestion for my appearance in this case came from the Attorney-General of the United States, Attorney-General Taft. He was a Republican Attorney-General, as the gentleman well knows, and I was not at that time in such intimate relations towards the Republican party—a time when we were engaged in the midst of the heated contest of 1876 in relation to the occupancy of the Presidential chair—to ask favors of any kind from the representatives of that party.

He asked this favor of me, to argue the case, for the reasons stated by him in the letter from which I have already quoted, and in view of the fact that it was close upon the time when a change of administration was to take place. That change of administration did, in fact, take place between the period of my employment in that connection and the arguing of the case. A new Attorney-General came in, who was not familiar with the facts of the case. It was at that time I was requested by Attorney-General Taft to appear on behalf of the Government of the United States, and represent its interests. I had no thought at the time, nor did the Attorney-General, I presume, think of any consideration for my services. That question did not enter my mind. But I had moved in the House the amendment upon which the decision of the court at Philadelphia turned, and I felt it my duty as a representative of the people to urge upon the Attorney-General the importance of taking the case to the Supreme Court of the United States, which I did in person, and in the letter to which I have already referred.

Mr. KELLEY. Let me ask the gentleman whether the Attorney-

General asked the gentleman to go to Philadelphia and take charge of the case?

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not go to Philadelphia. I left the case there to the tender mercies of the people of that city, who by their importunities and pleadings, which must have been very effective, induced the presiding judge to decide that the money belonged to them. But when that case came, on an appeal, to the highest tribunal in the country, every member thereof, except the justice who tried it below, decided that it belonged to the people of the United States. It was upon their mandate, and not upon the slight intimation the gentleman suggests, that the money was paid into the Treasury of the United States.

So far as my professional and official conduct is concerned in this matter, I submit it with perfect confidence to my colleagues on this floor, to my constituents, and to my country. I shall be governed by the dictates of my own conscience in the discharge of my official duties here and of my professional duties elsewhere. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania would take as good care of his own honor in matters of legislation as he would require me to do, we would not probably have heard some allegations which have been made in past Congresses in regard to members being interested in legislation. [Applause.]

JOHN H. JONES AND THOMAS D. HARRIS.

Mr. CROUSE, from the Committee on War Claims, by unanimous consent, submitted a report on the bill (H. R. 37) for the relief of John H. Jones and Thomas D. Harris, with an amendment; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CONTESTED ELECTION—THOBE VS. CARLISLE.

Mr. CRISP. I now call up the contested-election case of Thobe vs. Carlisle, from the Sixth district of Kentucky. I presume the members of this House have read and are familiar with the report of the majority and the report of the minority in this case, and the individual views which one member of the committee has presented, as the reports have been sent to members through the mail.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman from Georgia allow me to say that it is impossible that members can be familiar with the reports, as they were not delivered until this morning?

Mr. CRISP. I think the gentleman is in error. The report was sent in the mails last evening to members.

Mr. BURROWS. It was not delivered at my residence until this morning. I mention the fact in order that the gentleman may explain the case fully.

Mr. CRISP. Perhaps, then, Mr. Speaker, I had best give a somewhat full history of this case.

Mr. STRUBLE. I rise to a question or order. For my part I have not had time to examine the report of the committee in this case, and I presume that the gentleman from Georgia is about to submit a summary of that report as well as arguments in support of it. I, for one, desire to hear him, which I can not do while so much confusion prevails in the Hall.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is well taken. Gentlemen in front of the Chair will be seated.

Mr. CRISP. In the Sixth district of Kentucky, at the election for Congress in 1886, by the official returns Mr. Carlisle received 6,476 votes and Mr. Thobe received 5,651 votes, showing a majority for the sitting member of 825 votes. Within the time prescribed by statute Mr. Thobe served on Mr. Carlisle a notice of contest. That notice of contest contained a great number of specifications not necessary to be now read to the House. They may be summarized, and they are summarized in the report as being a claim that the contestant received a thousand votes in the district which were not counted for him; that the ballot-boxes at some of the precincts were opened before the time prescribed by law; that the officers of election at some of the precincts were not divided between the different political parties as they should have been under the statute of Kentucky; and there was an amended notice, in which he alleged that duplicate returns were not made out by the managers as the law directs.

The contestee replied to this notice, denying generally and specifically every allegation except the one as to the failure to divide the election officers between the two political parties, and alleged as to that that in certain precincts that could not be done because there were no Republicans in the district qualified to act as election officers.

Those were the issues between the parties. The contestant took testimony in the district for seven days, or parts of seven days, out of the forty that the statute allowed him for taking testimony. There the case rested, the contestee taking no testimony. There the case rested until August, 1887, when this testimony was transmitted by the notary before whom it was taken to the Clerk of the House. In that state of the case the contestant appeared before the Committee on Elections in person and by counsel, and asked that the case might be reopened, so that further testimony might be taken; or failing in that, that a committee might be appointed to visit the district and investigate the character of the election that was held there in 1886. In support of that motion the contestant presented certain affidavits, letters, and papers, which will be found printed as an appendix to the report in this case.

The contestee, who up to that time had never appeared in the case except to cross-examine the witnesses down in the district—at that stage of the case the contestee asked the privilege of filing affidavits in reply or in denial of the affidavits that had been filed by the contestant. That privilege was given him, and when the committee again proceeded to consider the case the contestee presented the affidavits and papers which appear in the record in the case.

The first question, Mr. Speaker, that was considered by the committee was the motion to reopen the case. The reasons assigned by the contestant in support of the motion you will find stated in the report. One reason urged was that his counsel had been untrue to him; and the minority of the Committee on Elections in the report submitted by them in this case press that charge and seem to think that the action of the majority of the committee in proceeding with this case under the facts presented in the affidavits was improper and unjust to the House and to the contestant. It becomes necessary, therefore, to call the attention of the House to the character of the papers presented by the contestant and the character of the reply made by the contestee.

The contestant in the case alleges in his own affidavit that his attorney professed to him that he could establish the necessary facts; that he knew all about the witnesses in the case, and that he alone, without the special aid or assistance of the contestant, would prepare his case, would procure the witnesses, and would do everything that was necessary to establish the right of the contestant to a seat. He says that very soon after the taking of the testimony began he discovered a lukewarmness on the part of his attorney, an indifference on the part of his attorney which indicated to him he had lost interest in the case; and then he says that from a conversation with his counsel he inferred that his counsel had probably sold out, as he expresses it, to the friends of the contestee.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a very grave charge against his counsel. If this House were fully satisfied that the counsel of the contestant had thus deceived him, had thus betrayed him, it would go very far toward inducing them to give that gentleman another opportunity to present his case.

In reply to that charge, the contestee presents evidence which will be found in the record. He presents the evidence of the counsel assailed; he presents the evidence of other witnesses, and perhaps it may be proper to call attention to what those witnesses say. Mr. Wood, the gentleman assailed, denies under oath, specifically, the charges that are made by the contestant. He denies that he made the statement that he would himself procure the evidence. He denies that the contestant committed his case unreservedly to him. He denies every substantial allegation made by the contestant going to show that he, Wood, had been in any manner derelict in his duty, or had in any regard betrayed his trust.

But the contestee does not rely alone upon the statement of Mr. Wood. He shows by affidavits of others, by the affidavit of the notary before whom the evidence was taken, the conduct of Mr. Thobe himself, which, it seems to me, is a complete refutation of the charge which he now makes, that Mr. Wood was unfaithful to him. Mr. Thobe charges, as gentlemen will recollect, that he sought to procure or to induce his attorney to forward the papers here, that he did everything he could to induce him to procure the testimony of witnesses and to forward it, but that this attorney, whilst promising from day to day so to do, continually neglected and thereby endangered and damaged his case. I want to call the attention of the House to the evidence of the notary who took the testimony, a man by the name of Tinley.

This notary says that some three or four months elapsed between the time of the taking of said testimony and its being forwarded to Washington; that this delay was the result of Mr. Thobe's tardiness in the payment of his fees; that he does not recall the date of Mr. Thobe's calling at his office and requesting him to get the papers, but that he (Thobe) did call and so request; that affiant then demanded of Mr. Thobe payment of his fees, the amount of which seemed to astonish him, and during the conversation which followed—I commend this to the attention of the House—during the conversation which followed, Thobe said to him, in the presence of other witnesses (whose affidavits I will produce), that he did not like to pay out any money in the matter; that he never wanted to go into it, and would like now, he said, to get out of it; and, continuing, he remarked that the labor clubs had forced him into it and had promised him assistance, but that their assistance had failed to materialize. He further said that this was the only day's work he had lost on account of this business, and that he would not have lost this, nor would he pay out any money, but for the imputations and slurs that were being cast upon him and Mr. Wood (the attorney whom he now accuses of faithlessness) by his own party; which imputations and slurs were to the effect that he and Mr. Wood had been bought up; and, simply, as he said, to show his labor friends and supporters that he had not sold out, he would send on what little testimony there was in his behalf to Washington, and let J. Hale Sypher do what he could with it, for, he said, "from what I have heard of Sypher's reputation, he can do a great deal with it," and sending the papers to Washington would at least, he said, remove the imputation of fraud on his part in the matter.

That is the affidavit of Mr. Tinley as to the statements of Mr. Thobe in August, at the time the testimony was sent on here. Bear in mind that the testimony was taken in February and March. In the affidavit now presented to the committee the contestant says that even during the taking of the testimony he was impressed with the belief that his counsel was dilatory and was not doing what he ought to do; yet in August thereafter he states to the notary who took the testimony that he only sends the testimony on to Washington now in order that the labor clubs might not impute to him and to his counsel, this same Mr. Wood, any improper motives in the conduct of the case. In this record you will find the affidavit of a junior Mr. Wood, who says that he heard the same conversation and that it was substantially as set forth in the affidavit. Mr. Speaker, speaking as one member of the committee, and I think in that respect I can speak for the majority, I am fully persuaded that the contest on the part of Mr. Thobe, with whatever motive it may have been begun, was abandoned—abandoned by him and his attorney after an earnest effort to establish what they had charged in their notice of contest. It languished. No further efforts were made because they felt that they had exhausted what they could do, and the case stood just in that attitude. Speaking for myself, sir, I believe that but for an inspiration that came from Washington, and not from Kentucky, the case would have remained just as it was at that time. I make that statement, sir, because I think the record in the case justifies and demands it.

Mr. STRUBLE. I would like to ask the gentleman whether it is the finding of the majority of the committee that the contestant did abandon his contest at any period after he commenced it.

Mr. CRISP. There is no statement in the report that he did abandon the contest. I said distinctly, Mr. Speaker, that, speaking as one member of the committee, I believed that he did, and believed that the majority of the committee so thought. The House will find in this record, among the papers presented by the contestant, certain letters which have satisfied me at least that the inspiration for the further prosecution of this contest came from Washington, and did not originate in Kentucky.

Bear in mind the contestant's statement, that he did not originally want to go into the case; that he would get out of it now if he could; that he did not want to pay any money out in the contest; that the labor clubs had promised to help him, but their help had failed to "materialize;" and then turn to the record in the case which you have before you. You will find a series of letters attached to the affidavit of Mr. Wood, the counsel, whose bona fides and good faith have been assailed. These letters throw a flood of light upon the case and the reasons for the prosecution of this contest.

The contestant in his affidavit charges that one reason why Mr. Wood, his attorney below, became offended and abandoned his contest was that he employed as associate counsel, or as counsel in the case, one J. H. Sypher, of this city, a gentleman whose name is perhaps not unknown to members of this House. The record discloses the fact that a series of letters passed between Mr. Wood, the counsel in Kentucky, and Mr. Sypher, the gentleman in Washington, whom it was proposed to employ, and that Mr. Lee Crandall was the medium through whom these letters passed. In those letters you will find that the counsel or the contemplated counsel here is laboring to satisfy Mr. Wood that no reputable lawyer in Washington would appear in an election case unless he has a written power of attorney, the form of which appears in the record. By that form of power of attorney the party delegates to his counsel the exclusive management of his case. It is, gentlemen, the power of attorney with which you are all familiar, which counsel present and file when they appear in any of the Departments of the Government. It has no more application to a case pending before the House of Representatives than it would have to any case in any court of any State.

The counsel in Kentucky insists that the power of attorney must not be given, because it commits to Mr. Sypher the exclusive control of the case. Mr. Sypher replies that he can not appear, and no reputable counsel can appear, without it. And in these letters he offers inducements to Mr. Thobe to execute this power of attorney, although he says in the letters that he has no desire to come into the case.

It seems that Mr. Crandall originally suggested the employment of Mr. Sypher, and was the mutual friend of him and Mr. Thobe. Mr. Sypher and Mr. Crandall had frequent conversations about the case. These letters which have passed have been put in the record. You will find by reference to them various statements which I think illustrate the reason why this contest was carried on. Mr. Sypher, in a letter of December 1, 1886, to Mr. Crandall, says:

> DEAR SIR: Our mutual friend and brother, Mr. Jeffers, has handed me Mr. Thobe's letter of November 23, addressed to you. As I am not informed as to the contents of your letters to Mr. Thobe and his attorney, Mr. Wood, I do not understand what Mr. Thobe means by saying that "he can't possibly take the case out of Mr. Wood's hands."
> It was not my intention or purpose to have him do so, and if you wrote him to do so, it was not at my suggestion. My idea was that Mr. Wood should continue in the case exactly as he began, and not to change or alter his professional relations in any way, but that I would assist him in preparing the notice of contest, and aid him in taking the testimony, if necessary, and when the case came here take charge of it. There is no lawyer in this country, not familiar with the special and peculiar practice of contested cases before Congress, but that requires assistance when he comes here.
> In fifteen years' experience in such cases in Congress, I have never known of a single successful prosecution which was not conducted by an attorney here on the ground who was familiar with this intricate practice. Then, let me say to you again, and not to be misunderstood, that I would positively refuse to come into this case unless by the consent and desire of Mr. Wood, who is the attorney. But if I should agree to become associated with Mr. Wood in the case when it comes here, I should insist upon managing it, so as to insure success. I have never lost a case, and I will not put my reputation in any attorney's keeping who has not had equal experience in the practice. The political and diplomatic management of such cases has quite as much to do with success or failure as the technical legal proceedings, and it is in these matters that I have decided advantages over any lawyer from a distance.

Then you will find a further statement which I think justifies the inference I draw. In a letter of December 10, 1887, Mr. Sypher says:

> Knowing my views and relations as to the order of K. of L., you suggested my employment as counsel. We discussed fully the whole case, and among other things the matter of "ways and means" to carry on a costly contest. It was agreed between us that if I was empowered officially—

That is by this power of attorney—

> if I was empowered officially to represent Mr. Thobe I might enlist the interest not only of all my Republican friends in the House, but that I might be able to induce some of my wealthy and powerful protection friends to contribute something towards the expenses of Mr. Thobe's contest. These are matters which I do not like to write about, as from the publications I have seen concerning this contest I have great reason to doubt the discretion of both Mr. Wood and his client. The power of attorney about which Mr. Wood complains is the usual printed form used by all attorneys in Washington. What I meant particularly in saying in a former letter that I would expect to take charge of the case here, was assuming that the case would, like all others of the kind, run for six to eighteen months and sometimes the entire Congress, two years.

In a letter of Mr. Blakely, one of the counsel in this case, to Mr. Sypher, the leading counsel who appeared before the committee, will be found a further statement which I wish to read. After reciting a great many alleged errors we find this statement:

> Your theory of the "ways and means" as expressed in your letter of the 5th instant is correct, except in one minor detail. You ask, "How much of this can we prove?" I say, all that I have set out herein and vastly more.

Now mark you, this is a letter from the counsel of Mr. Thobe residing in Kentucky to the counsel of Mr. Thobe residing in Washington. He further says:

> I telegraph you to-night. Do not fail to send me by telegraphic order, if you have not already done so, the $50. The conference is the objective point, and I need the cash for a venture in that direction.
> Your statement in regard to my remittance after the elections to-day is perfectly satisfactory so far as my fee is concerned, but as my expenses through Boone and Pendleton, in the main, have been borne by Mr. Thobe, I must request you to remit by telegraphic order the $50 at once.

This is a letter voluntarily filed by the contestant in the case, and from this letter it appears that the ways and means were furnished, and the carrying on of this contest advised, in Washington and not in Kentucky.

It appears that counsel in Kentucky, where Mr. Thobe lives, when he wanted his fee did not call on Mr. Thobe, his neighbor, but applied to his counsel here in Washington. It appears when expenses were to be furnished to carry on the contest he did not apply to his neighbor, Mr. Thobe, but applied to his counsel here in Washington. And he says one reason why this fee should be paid at once is that Mr. Thobe had himself borne some part of the expense of the contest.

Mr. Speaker, I infer from the evidence, some of which I have read to you, that the contestant in this case told the exact truth when he said that he did not want to remain in this case; that he did not want to pay a dollar out in this case; that but for the fact that his labor friends had accused him and Mr. Wood of selling out he would not pay a dollar in the case, and that he only sent the papers on now to satisfy them he and his counsel had not betrayed them, and to leave it to Mr. Sypher, in Washington, to make as much as possible out of the papers; to leave to him the management, the furnishing of the means, and suggesting the ways; to leave it to him to secure the aid of his Republican friends in the House; to leave it to him to manage the case diplomatically, so as to have it linger, as such cases do linger, from six months to two years, on the Calendar of the House; and to leave it to Mr. Sypher to get from his rich protection friends throughout the country money to help in the prosecution of this case.

I think a careful and impartial examination of the affidavits will satisfy any man who is reasonably free from bias and prejudice that such is the exact truth in this case.

Now, when we go from that question and come to questions of fact presented by the affidavits of the contestant, all fair-minded men must admit that the charges and allegations made by the contestant are overwhelmingly refuted. The minority of the committee, I understand, do not deny that.

This is not a case where one witness swears to the existence of a certain state of facts and another denies it, and the committee and House are called upon to determine between them; this is a case where in most instances contestee produces the affidavit of the witness by whom contestant avers that he can prove a charge, and such witness proves the contrary. Here is a sample: Contestant avers that on the evening of the day after the election contestee admitted to Horace Cambron that he was defeated. The contestee produces the affidavit of Mr. Cambron, in which he says that no such fact can be proven by him, for it is not true. Again, he presents the affidavit of one John J. Pearce that there was a meeting of friends of Mr. Carlisle in Covington for the purpose of defeating and overthrowing the election of Mr. Thobe. The contestee produces the affidavits of his neighbors in the city of Covington, where the meeting is said to have been held, that they had never heard of any such meeting.

He produces the affidavit of the custodian of the public building, of the clerk of the court, of the postmaster, in which they say no such meeting was held. Mr. Pearce alleges in his affidavit that he can show by one P. Casey that the meeting was held. The defendant produces an affidavit of P. Casey in which he states that no such thing can be shown by him, for it is not true.

The contestant states he can show by Mr. John J. Pearce that in seven out of eight precincts of Carroll County the votes were fraudulently returned; that the names on the register of voters in each precinct were in the same handwriting, showing they must necessarily be forgeries.

The contestee produces the affidavits of the election officers and the clerks who wrote the lists, who swear it is their writing, and was done at the time of the election; that each particular list is correct. And further, the contestee produced in the committee-room the clerk of Carroll County, the custodian of its public records, who presented to the committee the records themselves, an inspection of which shows the affidavit of Pearce to be absolutely and necessarily false. Pearce could not have been innocently in error, because he says in his affidavit—

I have examined these returns; I am an expert; I have been called to testify in court as to handwriting, and I state to you the returns in each one of these precincts is in the same handwriting.

The committee examined each one of those original returns, produced under the order of the county court of Carroll County, and it appears from such examination that the names in every precinct were in a different handwriting. So that this charge must be considered absolutely out of the case.

As to every allegation made by the contestant, or nearly all, there is a complete and an emphatic denial, not only by witnesses of credibility, but by the evidence of witnesses by whom the contestant claimed he could prove the facts alleged.

Mr. LAIRD. There are several original copies of the returns, are there not—two or more?

Mr. CRISP. I do not know whether there were two, or not.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the minority of the committee, as I understand them, make no question upon the fact that on the record as made before the motion was entered in the committee the contestee is entitled to his seat. I understand, I say, that no point is made upon that.

But the minority say that the committee were in too great haste in disposing of this case. They say, and how they can say it they can explain, for I can not understand—they say that the contestant made a strong ex parte showing to establish certain facts; and then they say that in that state of the case it is incumbent upon the House, without considering the affidavits in response, to reopen the case. Gentlemen claim that there are two precedents sustaining their motion to reopen the case; they are simply mistaken. The cases cited by them do not sustain their proposition, and are not like the case at bar in any respect.

Gentlemen cite the case of Sypher in the Forty-third Congress. They state that in that case there was no notice of contest, no evidence was taken, and that upon a mere memorial from the person claiming to have been elected the House ordered the Committee on Elections to investigate the matter and opened the case, allowing notice to be served and evidence taken.

If gentlemen had taken the trouble to examine that case they would have found this state of facts: That in the State of Louisiana at that time there were five returning boards, each claiming to be the proper tribunal to count and certify the vote; that Mr. Sypher appeared here with a certificate from the Lynch board, and that Mr. Lawrence appeared with a certificate from one of the other boards, and both came before the House claiming to have the prima facie right. Neither could contest the seat because each claimed the seat under his credentials. Mr. Lawrence had a certificate, and Mr. Sypher had a certifieate. They came here under that state of facts and presented their claim, and it was decided to seat Mr. Sypher upon the prima facie case; and when they did, then, for the first time, Mr. Lawrence became aware of the fact that he was a contestant in the case.

He could not have been expected to serve notice of contest and take testimony when he held a certificate and claimed that he was entitled to be seated on the prima facie case. These are the facts. Is that a precedent for this case, where, under the statutes of the United States, contestant serves notice within the time prescribed, takes testimony, personally neglects and practically abandons his case, and then comes here and asks to have it reopened? Certainly gentlemen can not claim the Sypher case to be a precedent for the motion urged in this.

You will find that case reported among the contested-election cases of the Forty-third Congress, and an examination of it will fully sustain my statement of it here. I may say in passing that when they come to consider that case, in which one of the gentlemen now appearing as counsel here was a party, the committee found his certificate was fraudulently obtained, or rather I should say that it was fraudulently issued by the board; that the board had actually made and signed a certificate for Lawrence, after which there were presented to them some seventeen hundred affidavits, which they counted as votes for Sypher, and which the committee found upon an examination of the case were, to use their own expression, "manufactured."

The other case is that of Mr. BUTTERWORTH in the Forty-sixth Congress. In that case, Mr. Speaker, Mr. BUTTERWORTH and his colleague (Mr. Young) were sitting members. There was no notice of contest, but there was a memorial from the citizens, or some part of them, of the city of Cincinnati asserting or alleging that there had been two or three thousand United States marshals appointed to override the will of the people; that they had taken charge of the polls in Cincinnati and had countenanced all manner of fraud and iniquity. In that state of the case the House of Representatives adopted a resolution not to contest the seat of Mr. BUTTERWORTH, but that a subcommittee might be appointed to visit Cincinnati and take testimony to ascertain the truth or falsity of the charge; and on motion of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio who died as President of the United States, the motion was enlarged so that they might inquire as to the manner of the execution of the law in reference to the appointments of marshals at Federal elections. Is that a precedent for this case? These are the only two cases that can be found, I believe, where this action has been had.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. CRISP. With pleasure.

Mr. BRUMM. In the case of Cook vs. Cutts was the case not reopened and the parties permitted to take additional testimony?

Mr. CRISP. It is quite possible.

Mr. BRUMM. I am quite positive that it is true.

Mr. CRISP. Perhaps the gentleman did not comprehend my point. The minority insist that this case ought to be opened; aver that it has been the practice of the House to open cases even without any notice of contest, and cite these two cases as instances. I concede that there are cases where the House has extended time for taking testimony——

Mr. BRUMM. That is only where there is an issue of fact that has not been decided. Is not that the case?

If the gentleman from Georgia will permit me, is not this the trouble here—first I understand you have agreed that the counsel for contestant have botched his case, or at least that there is incompetency, if not worse, on the part of one if not more of the counsel? It is alleged that there are certain facts at issue in this case that the contestant wants to have a chance to investigate. If there are facts that are at issue, and there is no contradiction except by ex parte affidavits, would not that case come exactly within the case of Cook vs. Cutts, there being only questions of fact at issue that were not decided without regard to the exact law and points in the case?

Mr. CRISP. If I understand the view presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM], it is only in line with the views of the distinguished gentlemen who have filed a minority report in the case. As I understand their report, they claim that whenever a contestant files an affidavit alleging frauds and irregularities in an election it is the duty of the House, without any regard to the truth or the falsity of the charge, without allowing any affidavits to be filed in rebuttal, without making any investigation as to the character of the witnesses by whom the charge is preferred, to order the case to be reopened. That is the view of the minority in this case. I do not think it tenable, and if the House agree with me that the contestee has a right to deny by ex parte affidavit the charges that the contestant makes by ex parte affidavit, then there can be no question that the evidence is overwhelmingly in favor of contestee, and carries with it conviction that the charges of contestant are untrue. The minority will not and do not deny this. But their proposition is that however irresponsible the witness, however vague the charge, that where under oath it is alleged there were frauds in an election then it is the duty of the House to take anew the evidence.

Mr. BRUMM. In other words, if the gentleman will allow me, wherever there is an issue of fact, and that issue is created on ex parte affidavits on both sides, they claim it is the duty of the committee to investigate those facts. That is my position exactly.

Mr. CRISP. That means exactly what I said, that whenever affidavits are presented, no matter how worthless, no matter how untrue, no matter how absurd——

Mr. BRUMM. Are you not assuming that fact? There are simply ex parte affidavits on both sides. Are you not assuming that on one side those affidavits are worthless and untrue?

Mr. CRISP. I understand the gentleman's claim to be that where the contestant claimed that he showed by affidavit certain facts, and the contestee claims that he has produced affidavits which refute the alleged facts, the committee must reopen the case. That is the proposition. I say in this case the only point the contestant makes in his affidavit, as has been well said by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, my colleague on the committee [Mr. ROWELL]—the only point he makes of any consequence is that seven of the eight precinct returns of Carroll County were all in one handwriting. Mr. Pearce swears that the names of the voters were all in the same handwriting. The contestee produces the original returns and they show Mr. Pearce's affidavit to be untrue. Are you to open the case, or are you to appoint a commission to go to Kentucky to look at the returns, which we have seen and you can see? Is that the proposition?

Mr. BRUMM. Is the gentleman from Georgia not assuming now that the returns shown to be different from the statement made in regard to them are absolutely correct? May the facts not show that they are fraudulent?

Mr. CRISP. If human testimony can show anything it shows that those returns are correct.

Mr. BRUMM. You have only ex parte testimony as to that.

Mr. CRISP. And so is the charge which is made based on the ex parte testimony of witnesses shown to be irresponsible.

Mr. BRUMM. On your assumption.

Mr. CRISP. It is not assumption. It is an opinion based upon the testimony of credible, respectable citizens.

Mr. BRUMM. And counteracted by other testimony by other respectable citizens.

Mr. CRISP. Not at all. Pearce says the record of Carroll County returns show the registers of the voters' names are all in the same handwriting. The Committee on Elections have inspected those original records, and from that inspection say the statement of Pearce is not true.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. May I suggest that there is no evidence or claim made that these are not the original returns?

Mr. CRISP. None whatever.

Mr. BRUMM. It might be the proper time to make that claim now.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman's claim is exactly what I said. It is that wherever an affidavit was presented, no matter how well satisfied the committee or the House may be that the affidavit is false, you must reopen the case. He says you can not investigate on ex parte affidavits the question of the truth or falsity of the charge. That means that for the purpose of opening the case you must accept it as true.

Mr. Speaker, I deny that proposition. There is no court on earth that, on a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, would not hear the reply to the proposition made by the party making the motion. There is no case where you propose to do that by an ex parte affidavit where a tribunal will not hear a reply to the party making the motion.

Mr. BRUMM rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RICHARDSON). Does the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. CRISP. I should like to proceed with my argument. That is all there is in the case. The proposition of the minority of the committee is just this, that the contestant, having submitted certain affidavits charging fraud in this election, asks to open the case.

The contestee submits affidavits and records in reply, which, to the minds of your committee, overwhelmingly establish the fact that if you opened the case the contestant could not prove one single charge that he makes. Is the House of Representatives going to do the idle, the futile, thing of opening this case and sending down to Kentucky to give the contestant the opportunity to prove something which the evidence already on file will convince any impartial, unbiased mind he can not possibly prove? That evidence, too, furnished by the very witnesses by whom he says he will prove his case.

Mr. LAIRD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CRISP. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAIRD. Conceding that the votes of Carroll County would stand investigation, are there enough other votes challenged to change the result?

Mr. CRISP. I do not understand, Mr. Speaker, that that would change the result. I do not so understand it. There is absolutely nothing, sir, but the proposition that I have stated. If this House is willing to establish a rule in a contested-election case, where there has been due notice of contest, where there has been full opportunity to take testimony, and where testimony has been taken only seven out of the forty days allowed by law, that, upon a hearing more than twelve months after the election, a party may present an ex parte affidavit charging fraud, and that the other side shall not be heard in the same manner before the same forum, then you may open this case.

But if you believe, as we believe, that when affidavits are presented in that way, it is not only the privilege, but it is the duty of the committee and the House to take the case and examine the evidence offered and see what substantial good could result from the reopening of the case, and, if they are of the opinion that no good could result, if they are of the opinion that the case made by the contestant is absolutely and wholly refuted by the case made by the contestee, they will then and there dispose of the case and settle it. Then this case should not be reopened, no amount of investigation can change the result, and to open this case will set a precedent under which any contestant or contestee can, at great expense to the Government, extend a contest over six months, or indeed two years, as suggested by contestant's counsel.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended. There are some facts that I would like to bring out——

Mr. CRISP. I thank the gentleman, but other members of the committee desire to speak.

Mr. BRUMM. That would not interfere with their speaking; the time is unlimited.

Mr. CRISP. I thank the gentleman, but will now give way to other gentlemen who desire to be heard. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] desires to occupy some time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Some gentleman representing the views of the minority of the committee will now be heard.

Mr. LYMAN was recognized.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, had not we better defer this to some subsequent day? Let it go over until to-morrow or next day, so that we may have time to examine the case.

A MEMBER. Yes; let us have a chance to examine these affidavits.

Mr. HOUK. We have not had time to examine and read these records, and I ask——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. LYMAN. What is the proposition, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee will state it.

Mr. HOUK. We have no sacred characters here. Let us go into this case and examine it properly and know what we are doing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK]?

Mr. LYMAN. I think I had better not, sir.

Mr. HOUK. Well, Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn this case until this day week.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] has the floor, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] can not make a motion in his time.

Mr. LYMAN. Mr. Speaker, as I was about to say, when interrupted by the gentleman from Tennessee, I am not very familiar with the rules of the House, and therefore I will ask the Chair to state how much time I have at my disposal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has one hour.

Mr. LYMAN. And will other members of the minority have the same time as a matter of course?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Until the House by its action changes the order that will be recognized as the order of business, and each member of the committee will be entitled to an hour.

Mr. LYMAN. Mr. Speaker, in the position which I shall take in this case I am actuated by no political or partisan motives whatever; nor am I actuated by any personal motives. Indeed, there are members of this House on both sides, I think, who have heard me say more than once that if any other gentleman than a member of my own political party was to occupy the chair of Speaker of this House, I should prefer that it should be the contestee in this case. I mention this simply to show that I am actuated by no personal motive, and that I am acting simply in pursuance of what I conceive to be my duty as a member of the Committee on Elections, and a member of this House. If the question involved in this case had come to a vote upon the printed record as it stood at the time the committee was organized, there can be no question as to what that vote would have been. The vote would have been unanimous. There would have been no division in the committee; for, as has been stated, the record as then presented disclosed no cloud in law upon the title of the contestee to the seat.

During the able argument to which we have just listened extracts have been read from correspondence between Mr. Sypher, the Washington attorney of the contestant, and another gentleman who, I believe, had some connection with the contest at a prior time. Now, whatever may be said of that correspondence, it has nothing to do in my judgment with the question which the minority of the Committee on Elections desire to present to this House. The private correspondence of Mr. Sypher with other gentlemen ought not, in my judgment, to influence in the least the vote of any member on this floor upon the resolution presented by the majority of this committee. If those letters, coming from the source from which they do come, prove anything, they sustain the allegation which the contestant makes here that he has been betrayed by his attorneys in Covington; for those letters come here as an exhibit attached to the affidavit of Mr. Wood; and coming from Mr. Wood, the local attorney of the contestant in this case, the man whom he charges with having betrayed his interests, they establish his position in that regard; and that is the only bearing they have on this case; only in that view ought they have any influence upon any member here. Mr. Wood had no business to send those letters here. Whatever their weight may be they were received by him as the attorney of the contestant from one who afterward became also his attorney. Mr. Wood had no right to send them here. They come here attached as an exhibit to his affidavit procured at the instance and in the interest of the contestee.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LYMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEARD. Does not the evidence before the committee show that at the time those letters were sent here Mr. Wood, the attorney who sent them, had terminated his relations as attorney and that the senior counsel of the contestant, Mr. Sypher, had, as is shown by the public prints (because the committee-room was open during the discussion), vigorously and mercilessly assailed Mr. Wood, charging him with having given away or sold out his case? These letters, as I understand, were sent as a defense of Mr. Wood.

Mr. LYMAN. Granting that to have been the fact—that the relation of Mr. Wood as an attorney of the contestant had ceased, which was the fact—that is no excuse, no reason why any attorney at law should betray the interests of any one who had ever been his client.

Mr. HEARD. I concede that. There is no issue on that point. I simply stated it in a narrative way; my point being that those letters were sent here in response to charges made by counsel here involving the character of the attorney in Kentucky, who sent those letters here in defense of his character.

Mr. BRUMM. That does not alter the case at all.

Mr. LYMAN. They were sent here after the contestant had charged upon his Covington attorney that he had mismanaged his case, but they constituted no defense to any charge of that kind. They have no reference in the slightest degree to any charge the contestant had made against Mr. Wood. Their publication was simply a base and inexcusable betrayal by counsel of one who had been his client.

Now an assault is made on the character of Mr. Pearce, who makes an affidavit in this case. He said in his affidavit that a day or two after the election of the 2d of November, 1886, there was a meeting of the friends of the contestee in the city of Covington. It is said on behalf of the contestee that Mr. Pearce is not to be believed, that this cause ought not to be reopened and this House made cognizant of the facts in reference to that matter because five or six gentlemen of Covington, Ky., who say they are the most intimate political friends of the contestee, have said they were not at that meeting, were not advised of it, and never heard of it. Any member of this House could make a similar affidavit, that he was not present at any such meeting, was not invited to attend it, and never heard of it.

Why, when such business as this is going on, if any such there was, it is not the respectable part of the community, the gentlemen of integrity, who are invited to such consultations—consultations called for the purpose of devising ways and means by which the choice of the people for their Representative may be overthrown. These affidavits may be true; yet they tend only to establish the allegation that the contestant has made—not only that he has been betrayed, but that steps were taken to overthrow by fraudulent means the choice of the people of that district.

Again, it is argued that the only point which ought in any manner to entitle the contestant to a rehearing is in reference to the poll-lists from Carroll County; and gentlemen say it has been demonstrated beyond controversy that the affidavits of Mr. Pearce and others in that regard are false. They say that the original poll-lists are here; that the committee had an opportunity to inspect them; that every member of the House may inspect them, and that the inspection will demonstrate the affidavit of Mr. Pearce to be false.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman speaks of the affidavits of Mr. Pearce "and others." Will he mention any "others" who made any affidavits sustaining Mr. Pearce?

Mr. LYMAN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I believe I committed the same error in the committee on one occasion. I am not certain that there are any affidavits on that point besides the affidavit of Mr. Pearce. I do not care whether there are or not. I may grant for the purpose of what I have to say that Mr. Pearce's affidavit was the only one on that question.

I was about to say, when interrupted, that it is taken for granted that the members of the committee have seen, and that members of the House may see, the original poll-lists from seven precincts of Carroll County. Now, I submit—and this is the only comment I have to make upon the minority views of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL]—that on these ex parte showings we have no right to take that for granted. That is one of the points on which the House wants further information before passing upon the question who is entitled to a seat from the Sixth district of Kentucky.

Mr. MCKENNA. Are those returns here?

Mr. LYMAN. I do not know. What purported to be the returns were before the committee. I do not know whether they are here now or not. I must say that the appearance of those returns was very suspicious to my mind at least, if not to the minds of others. If those are the original poll-lists, they have been through an election day in the various precincts of Carroll County; they have been handled by clerks in those precincts, and, so far as my experience goes, those persons are not always the most careful or the best educated. The paper on which these returns are written is clean, undefaced, unsoiled, except so far as the writing may be a defacement.

If it be true that the papers are the original returns, then the man who swears that the returns from the seven precincts of Carroll County are all in the same handwriting has committed deliberate perjury; for these are not in the same handwriting; no man, whether an expert or non-expert, would suspect for a moment that they were in the same handwriting.

All I suggest on this point is that there is room for doubt as to whether the Committee on Elections has seen the original poll-list from Carroll County. That is one of the questions we want to examine. If the ex parte showing made by the contestant upon this question be true, then the wrong gentleman has a seat in this House from that district; if it be not true, the right gentleman occupies the seat. This is the very turning-point in this contest—what was the vote in Carroll County? Were the original returns from seven out of the eight precincts of Carroll County in the same handwriting, made up after the election, or were they not, as claimed by the contestee?

Mr. Speaker, at the first meeting of the committee for the purpose of considering this case, the contestant, by his counsel, appeared before the committee and presented this motion:

Motion to investigate the conduct of the election held November, 1886, for a Representative in Congress from the Sixth Congressional district of Kentucky:
1. By select committee, as was done in the case of the First and Second Congressional districts of Ohio by the Forty-sixth Congress, first session.
2. By resolution to reopen case and take testimony, as was done by Forty-third Congress in case of Lawrence vs. Sypher and Davidson vs. Smith.
3. By summoning witnesses before this committee.

That was the motion, and those were the three propositions which the contestant presented to the committee at its first meeting for the consideration of this case.

A strong ex parte showing was made by affidavits and otherwise in support of said motion or proposition, which showing in the view of the minority committee tended very strongly to establish the following facts, to wit:

1. That great and inexcusable frauds were committed in the conduct of the last Congressional election in the Sixth Congressional district of Kentucky, whereby the apparent defeat of contestant was accomplished.

2. That when it was discovered that by the vote of the people of that district the contestant was elected, there was evinced a determination on the part of the friends of contestee to prevent such a result being announced and the certificate of election being given to contestant.

3. That forgery was actually committed for that purpose, whereby the contestant was deprived of the said certificate.

4. That election returns were tampered with and changed for such purpose and with such result.

5. That telegrams had been sent on the night of election to have the returns withheld for the purpose of altering them in behalf of the sitting member.

6. That the necessary testimony was not taken to establish such facts within the time required by the rules of law and of this House because contestant was betrayed and deceived by his attorney, and because he supposed from the representations of his said attorney that the same had been taken, and that the case was fully prepared on his part for submission to this House within the time provided by the law and the rules of the House.

Now, the minority of the committee claim there was a strong ex parte statement showing the facts I have rehearsed in your hearing. As was stated by my friend, the chairman of the committee [Mr. CRISP], this morning, up to this time the contestee made no appearance before the committee. We were furnished with a request on the part of the contestee that time should be given so that he might examine this showing to determine what course he should pursue.

Without a dissenting voice the time asked was granted. At the expiration of that time the contestee came in, and, as has been said already, made a statement in answer to this ex parte showing which had been made.

I care not how strong gentlemen may believe that showing to have been. I do not intend here to-day to discuss that question for one moment. In my view of what ought to be and is the law, and ought to be the rule of this House, it makes no difference how strong it was. That showing was read. The various affidavits were read, which are printed as an appendix to the report of the committee. No member of the Committee on Elections till the time this vote was taken, in my judgment, had read one of these affidavits. My judgment is, up to that time not one of these affidavits produced by the contestee had ever been in the hands of any member of that committee. Time was asked for the purpose of allowing the members of the committee to examine this ex parte showing which had been made by the contestee. By a vote of the committee, and I trust I do not get beyond what is proper when I say this—by a vote of that committee that request for time was refused.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman candidly say to the House that every affidavit presented by the contestee was read in the hearing of every member of the committee?

Mr. LYMAN. I will say so, and I did say so. Every member of the committee was present.

Mr. CRISP. What is the point in the fact that the members had not seen them, if they had heard them?

Mr. LYMAN. The point is this: Some of the members of the committee desired to read them. They desired to go through those affidavits in order to see what they purported to be. We wanted to read those affidavits upon which we were asked to determine a question of so much importance to this House as the seating the Speaker of the House of Representatives. We only had them read by the attorney of the contestee. They were an ex parte showing. But as I have already said the request made to examine that showing on the part of the contestee was absolutely denied by the majority of the committee.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. What purpose did you wish to establish, the affidavits having already been read in the hearing of every member of the committee?

Mr. LYMAN. The gentleman asks me to go into the discussion of a question of ethics and mathematics.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. No. You say the affidavits were ex parte, and you were ready to go on the record to what was in the affidavits——

Mr. LYMAN. No; I did not say so, and do not propose to say so.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. That is not your position, then.

Mr. LYMAN. If you will listen patiently with your ears and eyes open——

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I have my ears and eyes open.

Mr. LONG. Do you say the members of the committee were not permitted to read everything before the committee?

Mr. HOUK. The remarks which have just been made cause me to ask to be heard. While it is a fact we were permitted to read the affidavits, we were not permitted to examine them as we wished.

Mr. LYMAN. In answer to an interrogatory propounded by the gentleman from Massachusetts, I wish to say this, that it is a fact the committee was not permitted for want of time to read the affidavits which had been presented by the contestee in answer to the showing of the contestant; but without any examination or without a showing, we were compelled to vote first upon a motion to ask the House to reopen the case, and then upon the resolution which the majority of the committee have presented here.

Now, that was not an honest, fair treatment of the minority of this committee. There are too many members of this House who have been accustomed to proceedings of this kind—I mean proceedings where testimony is to be considered and affidavits weighed—to know that any gentleman in order to act intelligently upon matters of that kind must have an opportunity of examination as to what he is called to vote upon. That opportunity was denied not only to the minority of the committee, but all the committee were deprived of that privilege. Granting, therefore, and conceding the superior intelligence of my friends, the majority of the committee, who may not have required that examination, I am compelled to say that it was desirable, at all events, the minority should have that privilege.

Mr. MILLIKEN. On what account were they denied it; what excuse was urged?

Mr. LYMAN. A majority voted against it in committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUMM. That is just it; brute force.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I wanted to know what excuse was given for it.

Mr. LYMAN. And I have told you.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me for a moment, as this is perhaps hardly just to the committee?

Mr. LYMAN. I certainly do not want to do injustice.

Mr. CRISP. I believe the gentleman does not, and therefore I took the liberty of interrupting him for a moment.

Mr. LYMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CRISP. After the reading of these affidavits——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does my friend from Georgia state that the affidavits were read?

Mr. CRISP. I do.

Mr. LYMAN. I said they had been read.

Mr. HOUK. They were not all read.

Mr. CRISP. By the kindness of my friend from Iowa, I would like just now to reply to what seems to be upon the minds of my friends from Massachusetts and from Maine, that by some means or other members of the committee were refused or denied the right to read the affidavits to which the gentleman from Iowa refers.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, I ask the chairman of the committee if this is not a fact: did I not ask time to read these affidavits, and was not that refused by brute force?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. You wanted two weeks.

Mr. HOUK. No, sir; I wanted time.

Mr. BRUMM. And it should have been given if it required a month.

Mr. CRISP. I want to state with the permission of the gentleman exactly what took place.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to know whether this House is to be precipitated into an unseemly debate between members on the floor as to what took place in a committee of the House. As I understand the general parliamentary practice, the proceedings in committee are not matters for public announcement on the floor of the House. I can not see, therefore, that any good result can arise from prolonging the discussion in this shape. Bad feeling must necessarily be engendered, and I ask the Chair to decide now whether it is competent for members to discuss publicly the proceedings in a committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state——

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, if any ruling is to be made about the propriety of the conduct of other members of the House, in response to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I wish to be heard upon it.

The charge is made distinctly, by a member of the Committee on Elections, that the other members of that committee, by a majority vote in the committee-room, were refused the privilege of looking at certain affidavits filed in the case under consideration. That statement forces me to say what took place if the members of the House and the Chair will permit me.

Mr. LYMAN. I have no objection.

Several MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. CRISP. There seems to be no objection except on the part of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. LYMAN. Only I do not want it to come out of my time.

Mr. CRISP. Not at all. I just want the House to understand the facts, because I do not wish the committee to be put in a wrong position.

After the reading of the affidavits and the submission of the case to the committee we went into executive session, or had the room to ourselves. Under our rules we have three hours for debate after a case is submitted, one hour and a half on each side. Nobody claimed the time or desired debate. Questions were submitted, but there was no request for debate. The contestant and his friends could have talked for an hour and a half, or could have examined papers for that length of time, under the rules of the committee, and there could have been no objection. They did nothing except submit a motion on the part of the gentleman from Tennessee to continue the case for eight days, which the majority voted down.

Mr. LYMAN. Well, I do not see that anything that I have said is at all controverted by the statement of the chairman of the committee. I said that by a majority vote in the committee we were refused an opportunity to examine the affidavits which had been read. My friend, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK], says they were not all read. That is true, but it was stated that it was an unnecessary consumption of time to read the affidavits, which were exactly the same as others which had been read. I desire to be entirely fair in what I say, and I am sorry that I said a word as to what occurred in committee on account of the dynamite which it has exploded here.

We were called upon to vote in succession upon the questions I have named, with the results shown by the various reports of the committee and its individual members.

Now, then, as has been suggested in the course of this debate, it does seem to me that here was presented too grave a question to be decided simply on ex parte showings on either or both sides. If the showing made by the contestant be true, this House ought to know it. If it be true that the returns and the poll-lists from seven out of eight precincts of Carroll County were in the same handwriting; if they were manufactured for the occasion after the report had gone to the entire country by the Associated Press that the contestee was beaten; if they were manufactured after that time, this House wants to know it. If it be true that on the night after the election, when the returns from the two principal counties in the district in which Newport and Covington are situated—I forget at this moment their names—showed that the contestant undoubtedly was elected, telegrams were sent to the outlying counties to withhold returns until they could be fixed up, this House wants to know it. If it be true that there was a meeting of the contestee and his friends, or of his friends alone, to devise means by which this disaster to the contestee might be avoided, this House wants to know it. And I say that it is not just to this House, it is not just to the contestant, and the contestee ought to deem it not just to him, that so important a question as that should be tried in that summary manner.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit me a question?

Mr. LYMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEARD. I will ask the gentleman if there was any evidence whatever presented to the committee as to the sending of any such telegrams as he alludes to, and if it was not suggested to the counsel for the contestant that those telegrams should be presented, or some evidence of them, if he expected the committee to consider and seek for them?

Mr. LYMAN. The gentleman from Missouri can not have read the printed record before the committee, or he would not have asked me that question. There was evidence before the committee; it was in the printed record that there had been telegrams sent, and the agent of the telegraph company refused to produce them.

Mr. HEARD. I meant in connection with the application for reopening the case. I understand, so far as the record is concerned, there is no difference between us.

Mr. LYMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is too good a lawyer to stand upon any such question as that. He knows the whole record was before the committee, and that record showed there had been telegrams sent.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. What kind of telegrams?

Mr. LYMAN. We do not know, because the agents of the telegraph company refused to produce them; but my friend from Ohio knows the way to produce them when they are wanted at the proper time.

I am only speaking now as to what this committee acted on. If these charges are not true that the contestant has made; if the showing that contestant has made is unfounded, why is it, I ask, that the contestee and his friends are standing here so persistently blocking every road to an investigation? Is he afraid of the truth? Are his friends upon this floor afraid of the truth? Does he doubt—I ought to say do his friends doubt—their ability to go into the Sixth district of Kentucky and establish beyond all controversy that these charges of contestant are not true, if it be a fact that they are not true? The fact that there is such a constant denial, such a persistent determination that the events of the election in the Sixth district of Kentucky shall not be investigated, suggests strongly to my mind that there is something wrong down there; and I can conceive of no good reason why the contestee should be so persistent in his determination that the facts of that election shall not be investigated.

Now, all that the contestant asks is that these facts shall be investigated; and I am free to say here as a member of the Committee on Elections and as an individual member of this House that if the evidence shall not establish these allegations made by the contestant I shall be as ready on the final vote as any gentleman on the other side of the House to vote to retain the contestee in his seat. But if they shall be established, if they can be established, I want to know it; and I know no good reason why this House should not take the proper steps to ascertain whether that is so or not.

We are not without precedents. The precedents have already been alluded to by the gentleman who has preceded me. In the Forty-third Congress there were two sitting members from the State of Louisiana whose seats, when Congress met, were claimed by two other gentlemen. There was no notice of contest; there was no vote taken. The matter went to the Committee on Elections, and that committee made this report to the House:

Mr. Spear, from the Committee on Elections, reported the following resolutions; which were read, considered, and agreed to, namely:

"Resolved, That Effingham Lawrence and E. C. Davidson, from the First and Fourth Congressional districts of Louisiana, respectively, be permitted to serve on J. Hale Sypher and George L. Smith, who are sitting members of the same districts, respectively, notices of contest within twenty days from the passage of this resolution; and that the said sitting members be permitted to answer the same within twenty days after the service thereof.

"Resolved, That the time for the taking of testimony in each of said contested-election cases is hereby extended ninety days from the time the answer is allowed to be filed to the notice of contest."

After Congress has met gentlemen in that case are permitted to serve notice of contest, and the time is extended to allow them to take testimony in order to contest the right of the sitting members, Mr. Sypher and Mr. Smith, to sit in this House. What the result of that contest was I do not know, but I am under the impression that the contestees prevailed.

A MEMBER. The contestants prevailed.

Mr. LYMAN. I am informed by a gentleman near me that the contestants prevailed. I care nothing about that. The reason I bring the action of Congress in that case up here now is to show that we have a precedent for the action which the contestant claims ought to be taken in this case. And so in the Forty-sixth Congress, Hon. BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH, who is an honored and able member of this House, and ex-Lieutenant-Governor Young, of the State of Ohio, were the sitting members from the First and Second districts of that State, respectively. They came here with their regular certificates; there were no conflicting certificates, as has been suggested by the chairman of the committee [Mr. CRISP]. Messrs. BUTTERWORTH and Young came here with undisputed credentials, and were seated as members of the Forty-sixth Congress. A memorial came up in the early days of the first session of that Congress, signed by less than twenty-five citizens of Cincinnati, a great city with hundreds of thousands of inhabitants. In that great city, which these two gentleman represented, there were found just twenty-three men to sign a memorial alleging that there had been fraud in their election. What did Congress do? Congress appointed a committee of seven, of which the contestee in this case was the chairman, and sent that committee to Ohio to investigate the election in the two districts in question. In the discussion of that memorial upon this floor, the contestee in this case used this language:

I mean to say just this, that under the Constitution of the United States this House has the absolute and uncontrollable power, at any time and under any circumstances, to inquire into and determine the election, return, and qualifications of its own members, and that the act of Congress to which the gentleman from Ohio alludes (the act providing for contesting elections in the House) is a mere practice act, if I may use the expression, which prescribes the method of proceeding in certain cases, that is, in cases where there are regular contests in respect to a seat on this floor; but that legislation does not, and in the nature of things could not, affect the constitutional power which belongs to this House, and which belongs inherently to every legislative body, to judge of the election, return, and qualifications of its own members.

In the course of the same debate, Mr. BUTTERWORTH, one of the sitting members who occupied in relation to that case the same position which the contestee here occupies in relation to the present case, said:

I am heartily in favor of the adoption of the resolution. All I ask of the House is a free, full, and fair investigation, not only to purify this House of unworthy members, but as a warning to evildoers, that if there shall be found a taint of fraud affecting the title of my colleague or myself to our seats, all I ask is that we be unseated, as unworthy to sit upon this floor.

That was the language of one of the sitting members in that case, Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Young, the other sitting member involved in the memorial, said:

I rise now only to say that I fully indorse what my colleague, Mr. BUTTERWORTH, has said, and give free consent on my part to an investigation that will take in every point now embraced in the resolution and to say that I do not want to be here unless I have a clear title to it.

Commendable words! Commendable acts! How striking the contrast between these words and acts and those of the sitting member in the case at bar! I have shown, then, that we are not without precedents, precedents established by this House, if not exactly parallel cases, as it is claimed by the chairman of the committee they are not, cases at least parallel in principle; that principle being that this House ought to know who have been selected by the various Congressional districts of this country by the majority of the legal voters of those districts.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have said about all I desire to say in opposition to the report of the majority of the committee. The minority think and believe, and in that belief they are sincere and conscientious as members of the committee and of the House, not influenced or actuated by any political or personal feeling—they believe, I say, that a case is presented here which demands investigation. The contestant is of the same political party as you gentlemen on the other side of the House. This is not a political contest.

The contestant is poor. He says his case has been mismanaged. He says he has been deceived; that he is unversed in the rules and practices of law; that he supposed his case was ready for presentation to this House. He is not asking for this seat unless he is entitled to it by the votes of an absolute majority of the legal voters of the Sixth Congressional district of Kentucky, cast on the 2d day of November, 1886. He asks only that this House take such steps as shall be adequate to ascertain who received the majority. If he did not get the majority, he is content with his present position outside of these walls. If he did receive a majority of the legal votes, he says that out of respect to the vote which was cast and the wishes of the legal voters of the Sixth Congressional district, he wants to sit here among you. He has that right. The fact that he is poor, the fact that he is a laboring man, that he earns his bread by the toil of his hands, entitles him to no more consideration than you would accord to anybody else; but do not forget, gentlemen, that at the same time these things entitle him to no less consideration. Let us treat him fairly. Let us say to this hard-handed son of toil, "You shall have your rights, whatever they are, before the American Congress. If you have been elected, this House will ascertain that fact and you shall be seated; if you have not been elected, this House will find that out and leave you where you now are."

Mr. BUCHANAN. One question for information. Those books which were produced before your committee—were they authenticated?

Mr. LYMAN. They were not books; they were sheets.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Poll-lists, then.

Mr. LYMAN. They purported to be the poll-lists of various precincts. They purported to be authenticated by the judges, or inspectors of the election, whatever the officers may be called.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But is there with them any affidavit showing the committee that the sheets thus produced are the sheets used at the election?

Mr. LYMAN. There are affidavits tending to show that they are the original poll-lists.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Whose affidavits?

Mr. LYMAN. I do not know—some ex parte affidavits.

Mr. CRISP. But they were brought here and produced by their custodian, the clerk of the court.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But I do not find any statement that the books thus produced are the books he had in his custody.

Mr. CRISP. You will find other affidavits.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Are these lists attached as exhibits to any affidavits?

Mr. LYMAN. No, sir.

Mr. STRUBLE. Did the gentleman wish to be understood as saying that while this case was being heard by the committee certain affidavits produced in support of the contestee were not allowed to be examined personally by the minority of the committee?

Mr. LYMAN. I do not want to be misunderstood on that point. I did not intend to say that we were not allowed to examine those affidavits. But there was a motion made by the gentleman from Tennessee that a further hearing of the case be postponed in order that there might be an opportunity to examine them; and that motion was voted down. We had not such opportunity to examine them as we desired. I do not mean to say that they were pocketed or withheld from us, so that we could not get them; they were not; they were in the possession of the clerk of the committee.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does the gentleman say that he was not granted time to examine them?

Mr. LYMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. McKENNA. Had you any reason to suspect that those affidavits had not been read correctly?

Mr. LYMAN. Well, that is a leading question.

Mr. MCKENNA. You must go that far if you desire to make the point good.

Mr. LYMAN. Oh, no; I am not obliged to take that position.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield the remainder of my time to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Several MEMBERS (to Mr. LODGE). Speak in your own time.

Mr. LYMAN. If the gentleman from Massachusetts can be recognized, I will reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CRISP. Before the discussion proceeds further, I would like to see whether we can come to some understanding as to when the debate shall terminate and a vote be taken.

Mr. LYMAN. One or two other members of the committee desire to speak, and also the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ADAMS. Although not a member of the committee, I would like to occupy some time. I do not often occupy the attention of the House, and I should not like to be limited in point of time.

Mr. LYMAN. I think the members of the committee can get through in another hour.

Mr. COOPER obtained the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I thought I was recognized by the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts, if he should proceed now, could only occupy ten minutes. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER], a member of the committee.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, while it is always unpleasant to differ with those for whose judgment we have profound respect and about whose honesty of purpose we have no question, I desire to submit a few of the reasons why I concur with the majority of the committee and dissent from the views of my colleague on the committee [Mr. LYMAN] who has just taken his seat.

I believe, sir, that there ought to be a period in the term of a member of this House when he can be relieved from the menace of a proposed contest, when he may be conscious that the time has elapsed for the challenging of his right to be here. I believe that the provisions of our statute providing when contests may be originated, how conducted, and when terminated are politic, wise, and just. The contestant in the present case seemed to understand this, and in due time served notice of contest upon the sitting member that he would undertake to prove that he and not the contestee had been elected to represent the Sixth Kentucky district in the Fiftieth Congress. He commenced taking testimony in that behalf, yet, as the record shows, and as is conceded here, he was unable to produce, and has not filed, a syllable of testimony justifying his claim or impeaching or casting a stain upon the claim of the sitting member.

The only testimony which the contestant took was testimony tending to show that there were irregularities in the organization of the election boards and in the conduct of the election in certain precincts in Kenton and Campbell Counties, in which precincts he, the contestant, had a large majority, and which if thrown out would have destroyed every pretense of his claim. He was verifying the old story of the man who, seated on a limb, sawed it off between where he sat and the trunk of the tree. [Laughter.]

The testimony being closed, and the time for taking testimony having elapsed, the contestant appeared before the committee and invoked it to reopen this case, which the committee, of course, had no power to grant; but the committee might have recommended to the House the adoption of a resolution to that effect, and the House with its plenary power could ignore or override the statutes which govern the committee. And, sir, even at this late day, if the contestant had procured and presented to us testimony from which it could be reasonably, or, I will say, probably or possibly inferred that it was in his power to prove that he had received a majority of the legal votes cast at the election, I, for one on the committee, would have voted to give him that opportunity.

But what is the case as presented by the testimony? The testimony is ex parte on both sides, and no more ex parte on the part of the contestee than on the part of the contestant. What does the contestant suggest as a reason why this case should now be reopened, or rather inaugurated on the part of the House? For, Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered there was no memorial before the committee signed by any one. I have never seen one, nor have I seen anybody who ever read or heard of one being in existence signed by any person. If there is a memorial anywhere it has not come to the committee, and was not in the possession of the committee.

But he brought some affidavits there of himself and of somebody else, tending to show that there was a conspiracy on the part of the sitting member and some others, originating at a meeting of Mr. Carlisle and his friends, to deprive the contestant of his rights under and by virtue of the election. Upon that point he had only his own affidavit to support his claim, he not pretending to have any personal knowledge of the matter, and without anything upon which to found his claim except some idle rumors floating around the streets of Covington. In contradiction to that affidavit, we have the affidavit of the contestee, who ought to know where he was, and what he did, and of other parties who are unimpeached, and who are unimpeachable and admitted to be honorable men, who testify to a state of facts showing the allegations made on the part of the contestant were unfounded, and could not possibly be true.

It was impossible for Mr. Carlisle to be at that alleged meeting in the nature of things, because he was far away from there, at another place. It is demonstrated, I repeat—it is proven beyond a reasonable doubt—that the allegation of the meeting and conspiracy on the part of the friends of the contestee to deprive the contestant of his right to a seat on this floor is entirely unfounded, and but idle chaff that was floating in the atmosphere, under all circumstances. In regard to this charge of conspiracy, I insist that the affidavits prove that it never existed and this meeting was never held; and in the second place, if it ever had been, it could never have been proved by these parties.

Next he claims the case should be reopened because the sitting member is alleged to have admitted on the day after the election that he had been defeated. What if he did? It would have been but the expression of his opinion as to what might be the result of the pending count not yet ascertained. It would amount to nothing. But this is denied by the contestee. In the first place, he swears that he never made any such admission, and in the second place, the party who is alleged to have heard it from the lips of the coutestee denies that he heard it or ever said he had heard it. Both witnesses deny that the language attributed to the contestee was ever uttered.

Mr. GOFF. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. COOPER. Certainly.

Mr. GOFF. If I correctly read the affidavit of Mr. Thobe, he says that Mr. Carlisle was with the reporter of an evening newspaper, of The Telegraph, I believe.

A MEMBER. Horace Cambron.

Mr. GOFF. He also states that the remarks of Mr. Carlisle on that occasion were reduced to writing and published in the paper represented by that reporter. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Has that paper ever been produced before the committee?

Mr. COOPER. No, sir; nor the affidavit of the alleged reporter, which has never been produced.

Mr. GOFF. I thought perhaps it might be a matter of evidence of peculiar weight where a party swears that another had stated a matter which had been published, that in the denial of it, the publication itself, in which it was claimed to have appeared, had been produced.

Mr. COOPER. It was not there; nobody produced or claimed to be able to produce it.

Mr. LYMAN. Was there any evidence that a search had been made for it; and that that particular number of the paper could not be found?

Mr. COOPER. There seems to have been some sort of an affidavit in reference to such search and failure to find the paper.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me ask if this whole thing is not on somebody's affidavit?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, the whole trouble is in reference to an affidavit that some newspaper man made, not of matter that he heard himself, but claimed to have heard from somebody else.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But is not even ex parte evidence better than no evidence in reference to grave charges of fraud?

Mr. COOPER. We will see whether there is any substance in the charges of fraud as I proceed.

Mr. Speaker, what are the charges of fraud as alleged? It is, as has been well said by my colleague on the committee [Mr. ROWELL], in his report, the gravamen of this allegation, upon which we are requested to open up the case, that a gentleman who claimed that he had some experience and ability as an expert had examined these returns from Carroll County, and upon such examination they showed upon their face that they were all written by the same hand, including the signatures of the election officers. That was an exceedingly grave charge, and if true it would show that a monstrous fraud had been committed there, and that this whole question of that election should be opened up to careful inquiry, no matter what might be the result.

If so grave and monstrous an outrage had been committed upon the ballot-box as is there alleged, it was worthy of the most serious consideration. But, sir, how can such a charge be established? By what means can it be proven, or is it susceptible of proof, if the House should undertake the work of affording the contestant an opportunity to establish his allegations.

If the charge be true, it might be proved by the testimony of parties who committed the outrage. It might be proved by the testimony of the judges and the clerks of the election in those precincts, if they could testify, when brought forward, that they did not sign the poll-books, the tally-sheets, or the returns in question in Carroll County; or it might be established by the testimony of experts, showing that forgery had been committed; but I undertake to say here that, with the exception of a single affidavit of this man Pearce, there is a total want of testimony supporting the charge. But that is not all. I say further, and challenge contradiction of my statement, that all the testimony which could possibly be brought forward to throw light upon this question, either by a commission or by subpœnaing witnesses, or by any other process of investigation that the House might order, even if the time were extended until the great archangel sounded the last trumpet, has been already produced before the committee, showing the baseless character of the charge of fraud.

Mr. BRUMM. Give us some evidence on that point.

Mr. COOPER. You can read it in the record.

Mr. BRUMM. But that is not entirely satisfactory.

Mr. COOPER. I do not know what might satisfy my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania; but I take it that the testimony there will satisfy any reasonable man.

Mr. BRUMM. Will it do any harm to enlighten us?

Mr. COOPER. It will do no good; and that which occupies the time of the House and expends the people's money vainly does harm.

What is the testimony on this point? The sitting member first produces the testimony of prominent experts, men whose position in business life qualifies them and justifies them in saying that they are experts in handwriting; cashiers and other officers of banks with whom the men in that immediate vicinity, and who presided at this election, were in daily business contact. These men tell us that they are familiar with the signatures of these election officers, and that they have examined the returns and found them genuine. Affidavits are produced of the judges and clerks of the election, honest men I take it, and quite a number of them Republicans, Mr. Speaker—ay, gentlemen, Republicans of Kentucky—who testify that this election was fairly held; that there was a free, fair election and an honest count; that their signatures to the returns are true and genuine; and they testify further, that some of them were earnest and active opponents of the sitting member, vigilantly looking after the interests of their candidate, the contestant, and they know that there was an honest count and return.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You say that they were Republicans. How did they vote?

Mr. COOPER. I do not know. They swore they were Republicans, and although it may be, and is, so high an honor to be a Republican that a man may step out of his way to proclaim it, I presume that they swore to the truth. [Laughter.]

That is not all. They say the returns were produced before the committee.

Mr. CUTCHEON. How can they be identified?

Mr. COOPER. I will read, if you please, from the affidavit. I have here the affidavit of the clerk himself, which, if I understand language, does show what I have said. I call attention to the affidavit of Mr. R. F. Harrison, which begins on page 40 of the record and is completed on page 41. He says this:

> Affiant says that the said poll-books and certificates are still in his custody, and that by an order of the county court of said county of Carroll, made on the 11th day of January, 1888, which is hereto appended, affiant has been permitted to withdraw the same from his office as clerk of the court of said county, and they are all herewith exhibited to the committee.

And they were exhibited and were examined by the committee, and it was conceded by everybody, the minority as well as the majority, that there could be no question about the genuineness of these returns, and that any statement that these returns were forged, that these papers, including the signatures of the officers, were all in the same handwriting, was wholly unfounded, to put it as mildly as possible.

Mr. LYMAN. I wish to ask my colleague on the committee, where is the evidence that those returns before the committee are the returns about which the clerk swore?

Mr. COOPER. They came here with the affidavit of the clerk, and I think it is unworthy the dignity of this House to stand here splitting hairs on such a point as that.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I wish to ask my colleague, did any one in the committee question the genuineness of those papers?

Mr. COOPER. If any such question was made it was not in my presence, or at least not in my hearing; and I do not believe any member of the House has any doubt upon that question now.

Mr. LYMAN. What allegation?

Mr. COOPER. That they were not the same returns that were forwarded by the clerk.

Mr. LYMAN. That they were not the same returns that were forwarded to the returning officers.

Mr. COOPER. I am not talking about that.

Mr. LYMAN. That is what we want to get at.

Mr. COOPER. But that we examined the identical returns covered by the affidavit of the clerk nobody questions.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I wish to ask the gentleman whether there has been any impeachment of the character of Mr. Pearce?

Mr. COOPER. I do not know anything about that gentleman's character; and I do not know that there has been any impeachment of the character of Mr. Pearce, or anybody else in this case.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I may be permitted to suggest to my colleague on the committee that the poll-books were brought here by their proper custodian.

Mr. LYMAN. How does the gentleman know that?

Mr. O'FERRALL. He appeared with them there in the committee-room.

Mr. LYMAN. Do you know him?

A MEMBER. Perhaps he, too, was forged.

Mr. COOPER. There is no question but a gentleman claiming to be the clerk of the county court of Carroll County came into the committee-room, and claiming to be such, delivered these returns to the clerk of the committee, and nobody then challenged the proposition that he was the person he claimed to be.

Mr. O'FERRALL. And he came exhibiting the order of the court authorizing him to bring the books here.

Mr. COOPER. He exhibited all the credentials and paraphernalia which could accompany such a messenger, and I do not understand how it can be insinuated that these returns came here or that this man got possession of them in an improper way.

Mr. LYMAN. I simply say I do not know.

Mr. COOPER. Are we to presume every man who comes here to appear before a committee is a scoundrel and a forger? The contestant's counsel were present—two of them. Modesty may have prevented them from making any such question at that time. [Laughter.]

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will my colleague permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The point made by the contestant as it presents itself to my mind is this: That the returns as first made were right; that Mr. Carlisle was defeated; and that afterwards they were cooked up, the returns in Carroll County being in the same handwriting. Now, it is claimed that the returns here show that they were not in the same handwriting. I ask my colleague, was there any evidence before the committee to show that the returns on which Mr. Carlisle was declared to be elected were the returns before the committee?

Mr. COOPER. The affidavit of the clerk shows they were the original returns.

Mr. ROWELL. And he was one of the election officers.

Mr. CRISP. Will my colleague permit me to suggest to him, in reply to his colleague from Ohio, that there is the affidavit of Nat B. Lewis, who says he is a Republican; that he examined these poll-books in the county clerk's office, and they are in the same condition that they were when he signed them; that there is the affidavit of W. H. Hisle, clerk of the election in another precinct, who says the same thing; that there are the affidavits of Mosgrove, Gilkner, and Long to the same effect; also the affidavit of a Knight of Labor, Mr. Leep? These men and others swore that they examined the returns; that they examined the returns on file in the county court of Carroll, and that they are in the same condition as when signed on the day of election. The clerk of the county of Carroll appeared in the committee-room and presented these returns with an affidavit in which he said that these returns were those on which the count was made; and these witnesses told you that the returns they examined there in January were the identical returns and in the same condition as they were in November, 1886.

Mr. COOPER. Permit me to say further that these gentlemen who swore they were, and appeared to have been, the officers of the election, some of whom were Republicans, also swear that the actual count as made by them on the night of the election corresponded precisely with the returns here.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. That is the only statement which has been made here that touches my point.

Mr. COOPER. I understand that I am within the record when I state that that is established.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. COOPER. I think I must decline to yield further; there are so many gentlemen making speeches in my time. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will not be tedious, but I wish to repeat that not only do the affidavits of the officers of election show that these are the returns, but they also show that the actual ballots cast and counted by them verified the correctness of the count, as it appears here by this return, and that the result of the election in the various precincts in that county was precisely as it now appears from the returns. Now, then, in the face of these facts, Mr. Speaker, what good result can possibly come from action by this House reopening this case? In what way are these alleged frauds or forgeries to be proved, if not by the very men who are here upon record as disproving them, and in that way affirming a negative? How can it be possible to make a case stronger?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir; if it is not too long.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It will not be long. There has been some discussion here, and apparently some feeling, in regard to the question of giving time in committee for members to examine those affidavits——

Mr. COOPER. I will come to that in a moment. Mr. Speaker, I approach the discussion of what took place in the committee-room with very great hesitation and delicacy. I certainly would not have been the one to thrust it in here; but as this seems to be a sort of confessional on that subject, I desire to say that when a member of the committee, my friend from Tennessee, I believe [Mr. HOUK], moved that the consideration of the case be postponed for eight or ten days, I voted with him on that proposition. Although I did not desire any further time to come to a conclusion upon the case myself, I was quite willing, and more than willing, that any other gentleman who desired it should have any reasonable time to reread and examine thoroughly the affidavits and the records in this case. But with that view the majority of the committee did not agree. Mr. Speaker, in the interest of fairness, I wish to say that all the affidavits on both sides, with the exceptions which I shall mention in a moment, were carefully and intelligently read in the committee-room.

The distinguished chairman of the committee himself read the affidavits of the contestant, or a portion of them. There were two or three affidavits for the contestee which were not fully read to the committee, but their substance was stated. The committee were told that they were merely cumulative as to certain points, and no member expressed any desire whatever to have them read; on the contrary, it was unanimously signified that no such desire existed. Now, Mr. Speaker, in the face of these facts, I ask again what good result can follow from the adoption of a resolution to reopen this case? What can be hoped from it? The Louisiana case is cited, a case which I do not understand to be by any manner of means on all-fours with this. In that case there was a question as to which of two returning boards, each claiming to be a lawfully organized board, was authorized to give a certificate to the member-elect.

The Cincinnati case is also cited. In that case there was a memorial asking for an investigation of the election, but here the committee have no memorial before them, nor do I understand that the House has any memorial before it. If it has, I have no knowledge of the fact. I wish to say further, that the result of the investigation upon that memorial in the First and Second districts of Ohio was not such as to encourage similar investigations. A committee went forth from this House, clothed with all the authority the House could give them, and sat in solemn council in the city of Cincinnati until they got tired, at an expense to this Republic of over $60,000, and then they returned without having found anything upon which to even predicate a report. I submit, therefore, without desiring to weary the House with words of mine, that the passage of a resolution by this House to reopen this case would be an injustice to the contestee, an injustice to the contestant, and a wrong to this House itself and to the people whom we represent.

It would be an injustice to the contestee that upon such a thin, shadowy, unsubstantial showing as has been made in this case, a showing which of itself demonstrates the utter impossibility of establishing the claim set up, he should be subjected to the annoyance and the expense incident to such a contest. I grant you that, high as his position may be as Speaker of this House, the duties of which office he has discharged in a manner challenging the respect and admiration not only of the House itself, but of the whole nation—I grant you that his high position does not entitle him to any more consideration or to any other measure of justice than that which is due to the humblest member of this House—if there be differences of degree here, which I do not understand to be the case. But I do claim for him that he is entitled to just the same measure of consideration and protection from unfounded and unjustifiable annoyance that any other member of this House is, and I submit that this House would do itself a wrong and any member a wrong, whoever he may be, by subjecting such member to the annoyance and expense of a contest of this kind, compelling him to expend his time, and to withdraw his attention from the discharge of his high and responsible duties as a member, in order to "cavort" around over the country, following a contestant upon such a showing. Such a proceeding would be an injustice to this contestant, because it would be an invitation to him on the part of the House to spend his time and money in the vain effort to find proof which does not exist—an invitation to attempt to accomplish the impossible feat of establishing that which is not capable of being established.

I see it is given out by the contestant, or his friends, through the press that he will carry this contest before the voters of the Sixth Congressional district of Kentucky at the next election—a resolution which I commend—an enterprise in which I wish him success; and I hope to live long enough to congratulate him upon the successful issue of his contest before that tribunal.

I submit further it would be a wrong to this House for it to occupy its time and attention, which ought to be devoted to the interests of the public, upon a contest the determination of which is so obvious and the result so incontestable as that in this case.

Mr. Speaker, I propose to yield now to my friend from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL].

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I would like to ask him one question.

Mr. COOPER. I will answer gladly, if I can.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Is it true there was evidence before the committee showing that some of the polls in that district were opened on the day before the law allowed them to be opened?

Mr. COOPER. Not at all. There was such an allegation in regard to a single precinct, the precinct of Verona. That matter, however, was successfully explained to the committee, as I have no doubt my colleague on the committee [Mr. ROWELL] will successfully explain it to the House. There was no such occurrence even in the Verona precinct, the only precinct as to which such an allegation was made.

I will only say, in conclusion, that giving this contestant the benefit of every vote which he specifically challenges, he still has no claim here to the seat.

Mr. SOWDEN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the counsel for the contestant were present at the time of the reading of those affidavits?

Mr. COOPER. Certainly.

Mr. SOWDEN. Was not the contestant himself also present?

Mr. COOPER. Not when the affidavits were read by the contestee, as I remember.

Mr. SOWDEN. But his counsel were present?

Mr. COOPER. Both his counsel were present.

Mr. ROWELL. I do not design to detain the House by any lengthy remarks. It is always pleasant to be found in harmony with those colleagues upon a committee with whom you affiliate politically, and I regret that I am obliged to differ with some of my party friends in this case. It is sometimes said that all the evidence needed to be presented to the Committee on Elections in a case of this kind is evidence showing the political parties to which the contestee and the contestant belong. So far as my action is concerned, I wish to give the lie to that expression and that belief. I want to try to make in every case a record which shall be law for every other case, and not to make law for each individual case in accordance with party predilection.

Let it be remembered that this case came before the committee as an election contest under the statutes regulating the proceedings in such cases; that it is not the case of a memorial sent to the committee to determine whether the action of the voters in any Congressional district shall be investigated, but a question whether the contestant is entitled to a seat claimed by him in pursuance of the statute, or whether the contestee is entitled to retain his seat.

As has already been said, there was and there could be no difference of opinion among members of the committee upon the original record as presented to the committee. There was presented but a single question of law, and that question capable of decision in but a single way, so that there could be no doubt as to the result upon that question. The contestant comes before the committee and files a motion for a recommendation to the House that a committee go to Kentucky and investigate the conduct of the election in the Sixth Congressional district. Now, in accordance with the well-established practice, a motion of that kind in a pending case, to be successful, should be supported by some proof. What does the contestant do? He brings before the committee four affidavits, the affidavit of himself and three other persons. In his own affidavit he alleges no fact upon personal knowledge. He reiterates substantially the same thing that he had put into his notice of contest. Now, I understand an application for a rehearing, in order to have weight before a court, must be accompanied by the affidavits of witnesses having personal knowledge of the facts upon which the rehearing is to be granted.

There is no claim of personal knowledge. It is a simple affidavit of hearsay, an affidavit based upon information and belief. But other affidavits follow, and in neither of them is alleged one fact which could possibly be material in the investigation of this case.

It is said that the sitting member expressed the opinion on the night after the election that he had been defeated. What if he did? Would that be a legitimate question to be proved in the contest? The question of whether, on the night after the election, the Speaker or anybody else believed one person or another had been elected can have no possible bearing upon the question of who was elected.

So that in the affidavit of the contestant and in the affidavits of two other persons there is raised upon personal knowledge no question to be decided, not one, either to be met by counter-affidavits or to be investigated in proof. The only question presented on plain personal knowledge is to be found in the affidavit of Mr. Pearce, who alleges of his own knowledge that the returns of Carroll County, in seven out of eight precincts of Carroll County, were in one and the same handwriting. If that affidavit was true it shows that the returns of Carroll County were forgeries. But whether enough to change the result of the election, it was so grave a charge it ought to be investigated in the interest of all elections. Now, I understand when an affidavit is so presented by one man purporting to have knowledge of facts, and another and opposing affidavit is presented by some other person claiming to have knowledge of the same facts, it raises a question to be sent to a jury.

But if I understand court proceedings, when there is a plea of a record it raises no issue of fact to be submitted to a jury, but it raises a question to be submitted to the court itself. Now, the only question to be met in the affidavits of the contestant or the personal knowledge of any witness is the question of the forgeries of the returns of the precincts of Carroll County. Everything else is so much bosh. Every other allegation of personal knowledge is the allegation of immaterial fact; and we by opening this case shall be establishing as a precedent that anybody who has been a candidate for Congress may neglect to proceed according to the statutes, and when Congress assembles come in and file his affidavit that he believes certain things may be proven, and then that we must send out committees to investigate that question. Then there is an end of contest under the statutes and an end of security for any member who received a certificate and comes here.

As regards the affidavit of Pearce, there was brought before the committee the clerk who was the legal custodian of these precinct returns, who was by law one of those whose duty it was to open these ballots when they were returned, the third day after the election, to count the ballots and make up the returns of the count, and to keep in custody the returns sent in from the precincts. That clerk brings with him those returns, which he declares have been in his custody as their legal custodian from the day when they were returned to him and when they were brought before the committee by order of the court. They have all the prerequisites of a record. They have all the force of a solemn record of a court presented to us by the legal custodian of that record. It stood before us as a plea of a record, and the returns were submitted to us for inspection and decision as to whether they were all in one handwriting. We did inspect the record, and the affidavit impeaching it was proved to have been a false affidavit. By examination it would be found in the printed form the blanks were filled up in the handwriting of the clerk, as they should be, before being sent out to the several precincts, and I take it, in the examination of this peculiar handwriting of the clerk Pearce satisfied his conscience in saying there was the same peculiar handwriting in each one of these returns.

Now, what issue of fact was raised which we ought to take cognizance of? The single one, and that one settled beyond all peradventure—an issue to be determined on inspection and not by the testimony of witnesses.

Why, it is said, "Give us an opportunity and we will prove that these are not the original returns; give us an opportunity and we will prove that the records of a court are not the records of a court." Now, I do not propose to open the case, so far as my vote is concerned, to give anybody an opportunity to attempt to falsify the solemn records made in pursuance of law by the courts of Kentucky or anywhere else, because it is too herculean a task for anybody to attempt.

Mr. BRUMM. How do you know they were the records of the court?

Mr. ROWELL. Because they are identified and verified, as the law provides, by the custodian of the records, and by order under the seal of the judge of that court himself.

Mr. BRUMM. But the custodian of the records is also the custodian of the seal.

Mr. ROWELL. Certainly.

Mr. BRUMM. Then you have simply one man against one man, one official against another, one oath against another oath.

Mr. ROWELL. Every record, every certificate brought here by every member who comes here with the great seal of the State upon it, is precisely the same character of record; and you might just as well challenge that seal, and declare that the Clerk of this House did not know that somebody had not stolen the seal and put it on without authority; or that the officer provided by law had not himself committed a forgery and perjury.

Mr. BRUMM. When it is challenged under oath there is an issue raised, no matter whether it is a question even as to the seal of the State, for it is after all only the action of the individual that places it there.

Mr. ROWELL. It is not challenged under oath except by one man, himself not the custodian of these records, himself not capable of identifying what the records are in any court. The only way you may identify the records when produced in evidence is to bring the regular legal custodian, and not some outside party to swear to them.

Mr. BRUMM. Does the gentleman pretend that the legal custodian of a record, who is also the legal custodian of the seal attached to the record which is the evidence of the action of the court, that if that custodian has falsely placed the seal of his office upon a piece of paper, and committed a perjury by swearing it is on original paper, that you will shut your eyes and not tolerate an investigation into the fact, when that fact is challenged under oath? That is all the question involved in this case; and I would like to know the gentleman's view of that subject.

Mr. ROWELL. No, I do not exactly claim that; but I do claim that when some unknown party files an ex parte affidavit that the records are, in his judgment, in one and the same handwriting, that the solemn records of the case, identified by the legal custodian that the people have placed over them, are so conclusive that there is scarcely a shadow cast across them by somebody whom I do not know coming in and offering an affidavit that he thinks the records are all in one handwriting.

Mr. BRUMM. But you do not even know the clerk. You know one as well as the other.

Mr. ROWELL. No, I do not know the clerk; but I know that he has the confidence of the lawful authorities of the State of Kentucky. I know that the official in question has the confidence of the people to the extent that he manages estates; the interests of children are intrusted to his keeping and care, and I know in the solemn way official records are identified that these records are before us.

Now, if we are to engage in the business of investigation at the beck and call of everybody, we ought to go into this investigation. But the committee had to consider the things before them. It was not a question of public policy. It was a simple question of a contested election made up first by a record taken in pursuance of law, but second by affidavits filed for a new trial, and these affidavits were gotten up to secure that.

Mr. BRUMM. Are you not rather in error when you say that this is an application for a new trial?

Mr. ROWELL. No, sir.

Mr. BRUMM. I beg pardon; I think you are. An application for a new trial is always made after the verdict. It is pending a trial of the facts themselves and the issue that an application is made upon an affidavit for a fair opportunity to traverse the facts alleged to exist in this case. One of the facts alleged is that the attorneys had divulged the secrets of their client.

Mr. ROWELL. Well, perhaps technically the application was not made after the verdict; but it was in the nature of a verdict after all.

Mr. BRUMM. Who delivered it?

Mr. ROWELL. It was after the verdict of the committee, because it was substantially conceded that the verdict upon the record could be but one way. There was and could be no difference of opinion among men that had any knowledge of legal questions. So that it was a motion—well, put it in another way—that it was a motion to reopen the case and go back to the people and try to take some more testimony, the same rule that would be applied after an order of court to close testimony, and the day of closing had passed for the parties to come in and ask a new order reopening the hearing. And when seeking to do that they must bring the affidavits of the witnesses who purport to know the facts and not the affidavits of the interested party upon information and belief.

Mr. STEELE. These returns, as I understand, were identified and sworn to by a number of others besides the clerk.

Mr. ROWELL. Yes; they were identified by oceans of affidavits. But the affidavits of fact on the one side and the affidavits of fact on the other have raised an issue of fact that ought to be submitted to the jury, and hence I considered none of the affidavits except the one identifying these returns, because it is a proper way to identify them. I treat this matter simply as I would treat a plea of a record submitted to the court and not to the jury.

I would like, if I could find it in my conscience, to reopen this case, because this contestant seems to believe that if it was reopened something would turn up. But when a contestant comes before a committee and says, "I can prove certain things by witnesses whose names I withhold from this committee, and whose names I will disclose after a committee is appointed to investigate," such a statement does not come to me with very much persuasive force in favor of reopening the case.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER. If I understand the gentleman's position correctly, it is that an issue of fact should not have been passed on by the Committee on Elections on ex parte affidavits.

Mr. ROWELL. That is correct.

Mr. WARNER. I will ask the gentleman if it is not now an issue of fact whether these returns that come themselves out of the jurisdiction of the court without any process here in Washington before the committee were the returns which were alleged?

Mr. ROWELL. My friend from Missouri is mistaken. It was not a question of fact resting in the knowledge of witnesses. These records were not out of the jurisdiction of the court without legal authority. These records were here by order of the court. They were here in the custody of their proper custodian. They are identified as the records; and you can not bring against the record parol testimony.

Mr. WARNER. I presume the gentleman has consulted the laws of Kentucky. I understand him to say that these records are here within the jurisdiction of the court and by proper order of the court. Is there any law of the State of Kentucky that authorizes the clerk to take the records of that court beyond the jurisdiction of that State?

Mr. ROWELL. I have not examined the laws of Kentucky, but there is a presumption in favor of the legal judgment of a court.

Mr. WARNER. Then do I understand the gentleman to give this as the opinion of the committee, that it is a presumption if the clerk comes here with the records that they are correct?

Mr. ROWELL. No, sir. You do not correctly understand me in that way. But when a court makes an order, I say that presumptively it has adjudged according to law.

Mr. WARNER. If the court make an order without its jurisdiction, I ask the gentleman what would be the effect in that case?

Mr. ROWELL. If the court makes an order without having jurisdiction in a case, its order is a nullity when the lack of jurisdiction appears.

Mr. COOPER. If my colleague will allow me to make a suggestion, what difference does it make whether there was an order or not, if it be true that the records came here and were before the committee?

Mr. ROWELL. Not a bit. We got a chance to see the records without going to Carroll County. The material question here is a plea of record, and that is to be determined by inspection and not by the examination of witnesses. That is all there is in this case; and if that be so, the minority should have joined the majority in the declaration that there is no occasion for this House to reopen the case in this proceeding of Mr. Thobe to contest the right of the sitting member to a seat. What action I might take on a proper memorial is a question for other consideration. It is not one to be considered in this contested case when the record is presented to the committee.

For these reasons I have been compelled to withhold my signature from the views of my associates of the minority side of the committee, much as it would have gratified me to join them in recommending the reopening of the case.

Mr. LODGE rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is entitled to the floor, as a member of the committee, for one hour.

Mr. LODGE. As the committee has been put in the confessional on the matter of forcing a vote in regard to the affidavits, I should like to state exactly what occurred for the benefit of the House. We listened to the affidavits of the contestee during the entire morning; we then took a recess and came in, if my memory serves me right, at half past 1 o'clock.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the gentleman's question of order?

Mr. BUCKALEW. I raise the point of order that it is not in order to debate the proceedings in the committee, and the gentleman who now holds the floor has given notice that he proposes to re-enter that field of debate which had been interrupted. For that reason I interpose.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I should like to say a word on the point of order. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW], if it is in order for the secrets of the committee-room to be given out and published in the public prints, whether it is not in order for a member of that committee to tell on this floor just what did happen in the committee-room?

Mr. LONG. I suggest, if there is anything in this point of order, it is made too late, as this has already been a matter of discussion.

Mr. RYAN. Certainly. Discussion has proceeded upon the theory that it was right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is not made too late. It can be made at any time during the progress of the debate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I should not have raised this question of what took place in the committee, but it has been discussed freely on this floor. When it was under discussion between the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] and the chairman of the committee, the honorable gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], the point of order was not pressed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW], and I think that as a mere matter of courtesy each member of the committee might be allowed to make a statement.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I will not press the point.

Mr. LODGE. We came in, as I remember, at about half past 1. It was moved by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] that a week should be allowed for the documents on both sides to be printed, and an opportunity given us to read and examine them. That motion was voted down without discussion, and that was the whole of that business.

Now, as to the position of the minority. Speaking as one of those who signed the minority report, their position seems to me an extremely simple one. The case on the original record as it has been so ably argued by the chairman of the committee both in his report and before the House this afternoon, is perfectly plain. It requires no argument. On the case as made up on the printed record there was no room for question. Every man on that committee would have voted in favor of the contestee. But a motion was made to reopen the case. Affidavits were presented by the contestant's counsel and by the contestant himself. Those affidavits were met a week later by counter-affidavits, which, I freely admit, rebut them entirely. I am not going to weary the House by discussing those affidavits. I desire to make this one point: If we are going to try election cases on affidavits, why does the practice act of this House provide that they shall be tried by taking testimony?

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. HEARD. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to concede that upon the record there is no issue between us—that we are all agreed.

Mr. LODGE. So I understand.

Mr. HEARD. And I understand the gentleman now to admit that so far as those affidavits are concerned, they are completely answered by those presented in rebuttal. Therefore, I ask him, what was there for us to try, and what is there to induce us to reopen the case?

Mr. LODGE. I am coming to that. There was a week taken to get those rebutting affidavits, and the very able gentlemen in charge of the case of the contestee would have been much duller than I suppose them ever to be if they could not, in that time, procure affidavits to rebut those presented for the contestant. The point I submit is this: The practice of the House before the present practice act, the practice of the House to-day under the existing practice act, is not to try election cases by affidavit.

Mr. ENLOE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LODGE. I can not yield. I have but very little to say, and I will soon come to an end. The next point is that the practice act, as we all know, shuts out further evidence. The question, then, is simply whether the House will settle this case on affidavits, or whether it considers the case one of sufficient gravity to reopen it. It seemed to me in its significance and its meaning, it seemed to me in the allegations that were made, too important a case to be settled in this way. It seemed to me that it was a case that deserved the attention of the American Congress. It seemed to me that, considering particularly the enormous disparity of political position between the contestant and the contestee, we should proceed with great circumspection and not quite so hastily as we have proceeded. In the case of Butterworth and Young, which has been cited on this floor, there was no notice of contest; there was no contest made; there was simply a petition from less than twenty-five citizens of Cincinnati, alleging fraud.

In a week probably a bushel basketful of affidavits could have been brought in rebutting the statements in that memorial; but the honorable Speaker of this House, who was at that time a member on this floor, stood here and advocated in the most liberal terms the opening of that case, which was as much excluded by the practice act as the present case is excluded by the present practice act. I think the attitude which he then assumed, of going beyond and through the practice act when the seat of a member of this House was called in question, was the correct attitude. The ground which he then took I believe to be the correct ground, and I think so, not only on account of the importance of removing the slightest taint which may attach to the seat of any member, but also because I think it is very important that a false impression of the attitude of this House in this particular case should not go forth to the country.

The contestant was not a Republican candidate. He was the candidate of certain labor organizations and of the labor party. He is a poor man. He has been unable to bear the expenses of this contest. There is no doubt whatever—any one who reads the record and the testimony of his counsel will admit—that his case was shockingly mismanaged. He comes here and in a large measure throws himself upon the mercy of the committee and of the House. There is, as every man knows, a widespread belief among the great working classes of this country that the power of corporations, the power of "trusts," the power of "rings," the power of men in high authority, backed by money and influence, has enormous weight in all legislative bodies in this country. Whether that belief is erroneous—and I am happy to say that I believe it to be—matters not. That belief is abroad; and it is an unwholesome, a dangerous belief.

It is the kind of vague theory to which agitators opposed to every form of order and society appeal. And I do think that when an honest man, whose affiliations are with the working classes, and who ran as their especial candidate, comes before this House asking simply for a hearing—for this contestant says that if there is one majority against him he does not desire to be seated—I do believe that it can do no harm to any man or any body of men or to the interests of the people to allow a hearing of the case.

It has been said that in the Cincinnati case the committee went out, spent some time and a great deal of money, and then came back without enough to hang a report upon. Suppose they did; when allegations of this sort are made in regard to an election to this House, and when the contestant is such a man as I have stated, I think this House can afford, as has been said in the report of the minority of the committee, to temper justice with a very large measure of generosity. And I can not reconcile to my mind the policy which has been alluded to by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER], of limiting contests. I can not see why the contestee should desire to assume the attitude which has been assumed by his friends and counsel in this case. The examination of the case has been hurried. Every effort has been made to stop the investigation. It seems to me (speaking for myself) that if allegations of this sort were made in any contest as to my right to a seat, I should for my own sake wish the matter to be probed to the bottom.

For these reasons I signed the minority report, because I think no harm and no injustice can be done by a further examination of this case. I do not base this position upon the question of affidavits or upon the printed record; I urge it simply as a matter of good policy, of exact and equal justice to all. [Applause].

Mr. CRISP. I now ask unanimous consent that the contestant [Mr. Thobe] be allowed to address the House, if he desires to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is customary to grant such requests by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CRISP. I hope that members will remain here, so that we may vote on this question this evening.

Mr. THOBE (the contestant). Mr. Speaker, I am not here with any set speech prepared by my attorneys or anybody else. I claim simply that right which every American citizen has the right to claim under the law, to hear that which may be advanced against him and to reply to it. Now for the first time have I seen the affidavits which have been before the committee. I dispatched to the chairman of the committee Monday morning before I left home, Cincinnati, to come here, to please withhold the report of the committee and prevent action of the House until I arrived in Washington. I brought with me a protest, and I would like the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the Committee on Elections,
House of Representatives, Fiftieth Congress:

I, George H. Thobe, on my own behalf and on behalf of a majority of the qualified electors of the Sixth Congressional district of Kentucky, protest hereby against your committee reporting adversely on the question of reopening the contest between myself and John G. Carlisle until I have had an opportunity to examine the affidavits filed by Mr. Carlisle and to file counter-affidavits thereto.

I represent to your committee that upon the mere request of Mr. Carlisle he was given one week in which to file affidavits adverse to those filed by me in support of the motion to reopen the case; yet, notwithstanding the opportunity granted to him, your committee, within one hour after discussion on the motion, decided adversely thereto.

Right and justice demanded, and still demand, at least a reasonable time in which I may examine the affidavits filed on behalf of the Speaker of the House, and oppose them by affidavits of citizens of equal standing and reputation.

This, by the action of your committee, has been denied me.

I do not care to call the attention of your committee to the fact that I am the first candidate of the Union Labor party, myself a mechanic, and whose friends are in the humble walks of life, to contest for my right to a seat in the House of Representatives, nor that the contestee is the Speaker, but I do call your attention earnestly to the fact that I am contesting only for the freedom of elections and the right of the electors to choose whom they will to represent them, be he lawyer or be he mechanic.

There is not an affidavit, so far as has been stated in the public prints as having been filed on behalf of the Speaker, but can be controverted successfully.

If others were filed, of which I have had no notice, I am entitled to the same rights, so far as asserting my title to my seat, as is the distinguished Speaker.

If any proof were needed to establish the fact that my cause was mismanaged and betrayed by Logan A. Wood, the fact that he delivered up letters to the contestee which were given to him by me while we occupied the relation of attorney and client should be all-sufficient. The obligations of confidence do not cease when an attorney is discharged, nor whether he quits a cause because of the refusal of a client to perform for him political services at a nominating convention.

I deny his statement that I only furnished him $43. I furnished him over $250.

I charge that if the "poll-books of Carroll County," exhibited before your committee, were other than I have charged them to be, then they were not the poll-books which were in the office of that county clerk when examined on my behalf.

I call the attention of your committee to the disparity of resources possessed by me compared with those possessed by the Speaker of the House, the contestee, since, in defiance of the laws of Kentucky prohibiting such acts under pains and penalties, the county clerk of Carroll County, a sworn officer, takes beyond the limits of his county, not in obedience to a subpœna from any court nor from your committee, a portion of the records of his office; and not only beyond the limits of his county, but beyond the boundaries of the Commonwealth.

I deny as utterly untrue, in every particular, the affidavit said to have been filed, to the effect that I said that I did not want to go into the case, and would like to get out of it; nor that if it had not been for the "slush" cast at me and at L. A. Wood, I would get out of the case; nor that "I intended to send the papers to Washington, that General Sypher might make what he could out of it;" nor that I thought "that it would be a great deal."

I do not know the full extent of that affidavit, because no time was given to examine it; but so far as I have been advised of it by the public prints, I charge it to be untrue.

As to all other affidavits filed herein, of which I have not been advised, I claim the right to examine and refute them.

I charge that the sole reason why the deposition of Col. R. W. Nelson was not taken and presented to your committee, was solely because of the insistence by counsel for the contestee that the names should be given of the gentlemen whom he met, or who met him in Covington, after the election, when it was said that Carlisle was beaten unless something could be done; but that before refusing to proceed further with his deposition Colonel Nelson had deposed that they were close personal and political friends of Speaker Carlisle, and gentlemen of high standing, and influential in Covington.

I charge that the statements as to the conference of certain friends of Mr. Carlisle held after the election are true; that it was matter of common notoriety after the election that such conference was held; and a reopening of this case would establish the facts charged with reference to it.

There are many gentlemen of standing in the Democratic party other than those who have disclaimed knowledge of such conference.

Neither the qualities nor the abilities of myself nor of the Speaker enter into the question; but the same rights your committee granted to him I demand for myself in the name of law, of right, of justice, and of the people of the Sixth Congressional district of Kentucky, who elected me their Representative in Congress, and who, if the action of your committee be not reversed, will be denied their choice at the polls.

I claim only the right which the humblest citizen may claim under the law—to hear that which has been advanced against my cause, and to reply to it.

GEORGE H. THOBE.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 17th day of January, A. D. 1888.
[SEAL.] ROBT. V. HUGHES,
Notary Public.

Mr. THOBE (the contestant). Mr. Speaker, I submitted that sworn statement, which has just been read, to the Committee on Elections, and it was rejected, disregarded, and returned to me by the chairman, with the following letter:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
Washington, D. C., January 18, 1888.

SIR: The chairman of the committee received inclosed affidavit yesterday. To-day he submitted it to the committee, and was directed to return it to you with statement that so far as this committee is concerned the case referred to therein is closed.

Very respectfully,

CHARLES F. CRISP.

J. H. SYPHER, Esq.

Here, then, is a flat and indignant refusal of the committee to even hear me; and they indecently rushed the report through the committee and submitted it to the House before I could reach the Capitol. If I was a criminal charged with a heinous crime I could not have been treated with less respect to my rights as a citizen by this partisan committee.

Mr. Speaker, I made this contest in good faith, and not by word or by a single action have I ever shown it was not in good faith. I was legally elected by the qualified voters of the Sixth district of Kentucky. It was commonly understood and announced that my majority was over 2,900. In Kenton and Campbell it was larger than the entire vote in the other six counties.

Much stress has been laid by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] upon the affidavit of Cambron, who made an affidavit as to what Mr. Carlisle said in an interview printed in the Cincinnati Evening Telegram. Now what was it he did say? We have been able to find, after much trouble, one copy, and perhaps the only one which is preserved, of that paper of November 3, 1886. We had these printed [holding up a pink copy] and scattered throughout the district. Let me read from this copy:

[From the Evening Telegram, last edition, Vol. 2, No. 187.]

CINCINNATI, OHIO, November 3, 1886.

MR. CARLISLE TALKS.

The Telegram met Mr. Carlisle in Covington this morning and had quite a chat with him. The Speaker is smiling, and looks on his very probable defeat with the utmost composure. He said:

"The result is entirely owing to the fact that Democrats felt no concern whatever in my election, and would pass the polls with the remark that 'that man Thobe would not get 100 votes!' Why, there was money, and plenty of it, furnished by manufacturing concerns back of this movement. They went round quietly before the election, and were thoroughly organized in every precinct in the district. The district was flooded with their tickets just before the election. If my information is correct, and I have no reason for doubting it, Mr. Thobe will be the next Congressman; and I will feel a sense of personal relief that I have not felt before for ten years. I will feel that a heavy load has been lifted from me."

The other copies of this edition have been burned or destroyed by Carlisle's partisans. For this copy a gentleman was offered $20, and perhaps it is the only one in existence in that neighborhood.

That was the talk. I do not come here and ask for my seat. I say simply, gentlemen, I ask for simple justice and fair play. I have a memorial here containing the signatures of 3,000 voters—more signatures of voters than perhaps some members received votes at their election. [Laughter and applause.] All we ask is simply to investigate and learn just what my majority was in the district. In fact, I had an admitted majority of over 2,000 when the polls closed.

There was particular stress put upon the fact that the contestee's affidavit was here. I saw only a little synopsis of it. I did not know to what extent it went. I should like to have had time to have put in that protest, and to have stated what is the opinion of gentlemen in regard to this matter of mine of equal standing in their community with any upon this floor.

But I must submit, it is a pitiable spectacle for the Speaker of the House of Representatives to bolster himself up by his own affidavit to maintain himself in a seat in this House upon a fraudulent title.

If you do not grant this prayer to investigate this election, but close down, I do not think you are doing justice to the election laws and to the ballot-box of this country. One of the speakers during this debate has said—the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER]—that the time had expired, and therefore he had voted against opening the case.

The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Georgia, stated that seven days were only used to take proof. That is true, and I will tell you how it was. A few days after the election Senator VOORHEES was interviewed, and in that published interview he said, "Why Thobe will stand but a slim chance of a hearing, much less of the seat." And the attorney I employed, Logan A. Wood, in whom I had full confidence, about the beginning of December, 1886, in a published card of over a column and a half, referred to it, and quoted language of a gentleman from Kentucky, Hon. Mr. MCCREARY, where he was said to have stated in an interview that if Carlisle's majority was 10,000 I would still contest. In that card or report my attorney says the frauds are so glaring on all hands that they can be easily proven.

Mr. MCCREARY. Let me ask what paper that alleged interview was in?

Mr. THOBE. In the Cincinnati Commercial.

Mr. MCCREARY. By whom written?

Mr. THOBE. By my attorney, Logan A. Wood.

Mr. MCCREARY. And that purports to be an interview with me?

Mr. THOBE. No; that interview is copied from the Courier-Journal, which purported to contain an interview with you, and he (Wood) replied to it.

Now, gentlemen, I wish to explain to the members of the committee and of the House why I think it no more than just that I should have an opportunity of reopening this case. I ask simply to have justice and fair play, nothing more. The very fact that I intrusted these letters to that attorney, Wood, and went to my work day by day, he telling me that I should not lose any time, that he would attend to it, and I working, so that by my wages I could pay him—and I did pay him between $250 and $300, although he states in his affidavit that all that he ever received was $43. That statement is false, and he knows it. It is true that I received a small amount from an organization in Cincinnati; but on the second day after the election I paid him, Wood, in the presence of five or six witnesses, went to the bank and drew out all the money I had there, $95, and on the 16th of November I paid him $50 more, and then afterwards sums of $25 and $10, making up the whole amount I stated, in the aggregate being not less than $250. But now he comes and says that "Thobe only paid him $43." He said in that card there was no question that great frauds had been committed; that they were so glaring that they could be easily proved when the time came to take testimony. And, by the way, in this card which he published, he refers to three or four prominent Democrats who were heard talking on the street corners, using such language as, "This is getting dangerous for the Speaker and his party. We must buy the Thobe party off." Then, in his own room, he says to me, "Thobe, we have got them; they are getting afraid; we can make some money out of them." This part of the statement he denies, but he does not deny having the conversation.

But I still had confidence in him; that he would go on and attend to my case; and I urged him day after day to do so. In the meanwhile he told me that Carlisle's answer was enough to unseat him. I said time and time again if I could not show the people that a fraud had been committed, and that I was legally and fairly entitled to the seat, I would not make the contest.

I said, "If I can not do so I will decline to enter it." I was honest in my intentions. In the last seven days my attorney did take a little testimony in Covington; and if you had seen Carlisle's attorney sitting there laughing and smiling while that was going on you would know what he thought it would amount to. It was then being reported, gentlemen, that the Thobe case did not amount to anything, and that they still had hopes the case would not be opened and Thobe would not have a chance to prove the facts that he alleged. It is not to be expected, gentlemen, that men holding positions in that Democratic stronghold will volunteer to give testimony against one of their own party in such a case. But you can get that testimony by having a proper committee duly authorized. They are honest men and will tell the truth, and you will find that a conference was held by Carlisle's friends and that something was done to bring in enough votes from these six outlying counties to overcome my majority of 2,062 in Kenton and Campbell Counties.

Gentlemen, here are something like 3,000 voters whose names are appended to this memorial. They are not bankers nor wealthy merchants, but they are men like myself, who labor in the shops, factories, and farms of the Sixth district. Two-thirds of them are voters living in Covington and employed across the river in Cincinnati. Here are the papers, and the names will show for themselves.

It has been stated that I was getting voters from Cincinnati to sign their names to this petition, because it happened that I went there to the factories to ask them to sign. But the facts are that those persons that I went to there were employed in the factories of Cincinnati, but not a man has signed this paper except those who lived and voted in that district. Still an effort has been made to show that all of these names were fraudulent. Why should this House determine to refuse to reopen the case? No previous House of Representatives has disregarded such a petition. No American Congress has ever attempted to deny the right of petition and do justice in such a case. If you do so in this case, you establish a precedent without a parallel in the history of our country.

Gentlemen, I am sorry that the working class of our country have begun to lose confidence in the security of the ballot; and if the ballot is not pure and honest, what laws can you make that will be just and secure the rights of the people? [Applause.]

I am proud of Kentucky, where I was born, but there are many things there that I am not proud of. Twenty-seven years ago I was an apprentice boy at my trade. If I had then been in a lawyer's office reading law, perhaps I might stand a little different now.

But I do not consider it a very great honor exactly to be a member of this House. [Great laughter.] Gentlemen, what I meant by the remark was this: that I think the mechanic who invents something useful, the farmer and the miner who discharge their duties faithfully, are just as honorable and noble, and just as much entitled to respect, as any citizens of this country. If every member here were like the Kentuckian whom we all admire, who would rather be right than be President, these seats would be filled by the right men. When you can say that in your long lives of public service you were never influenced by pecuniary or selfish motives, but had a single eye to the welfare of your people, then we would have the legislation we ought to have and there would be realized what Ingersoll has beautifully said, that under this flag of ours the weakest must be protected and the strongest must obey.

I am not here asking for favors. Simple justice is all I ask, and that is all that those petitioners in my district are asking. In seeking to reopen this case I do not make any capital or propose to make any, because I am a working man. I am sorry some people think they might be under some obligation in regard to their vote in this matter because of the difference between myself and the distinguished Speaker. But I do not dwell on that for a moment. The humblest citizen has as much right and is entitled to as much as the highest.

Gentlemen, I do not wish to take up much time. If I had had time to look over those affidavits I might have made some notes in regard to them. I did make a few while the discussion was going on.

Reference has been made to the fact that in some cases the ballot-boxes were opened before the proper day for counting the vote. That was in Trimble County. The ballot-boxes were opened and the ballots counted on the second day, while the law directs that that shall be done on the third day. Some 300 votes were counted for Mr. Carlisle and 3 for me. In every county I received some votes.

When I have met some of the first men in that district and I have asked, "Do you honestly believe Mr. Carlisle was elected?" they answer, "No." The feeling there is that Mr. Carlisle was not elected, but was defeated, but you can not expect those gentlemen to come forward and testify. If, however, you put them on the witness-stand they will tell the truth.

My local attorney in Covington told me what had been said on the Sunday after the election by a prominent politician: "We will fix that fellow; he has been a Democrat for so many years and has now turned against us, and we will fix him." I have no party there to back me, no officials in those counties to take my part as the Democratic party has. The Republican party is doing nothing in my behalf down there, and I never asked them to do anything for me. I have simply asked for justice. The great majority of the votes I received came from the workingmen, who had been trying for long years to get a fair chance.

Gentlemen, can you afford to not investigate this matter thoroughly? I make no threats and do not want to be understood so. I expect to never lose confidence in the ballot, which is the only remedy I see by which the people can redress any wrong that may befall this country and its people.

Mr. BRUMM. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, I will suggest that he send that memorial up to the desk and have it made part of his remarks.

Mr. THOBE. I will do so.

To the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned, citizens and electors of the Sixth Congressional district of the State of Kentucky, respectfully represent: That at the election for member of Congress in the said district, held on Tuesday, the 2d day of November, A. D. 1886, in accordance with the acts of Congress and the laws of the State of Kentucky in that behalf made and provided, there was not a full, fair, and impartial expression of a majority of the qualified voters of said Congressional district in regard to their choice for a member of Congress for said district in the Fiftieth Congress of the United States, for the following reasons:

1. That in the matter of the appointment, service, and qualifications of the election officers, there was an open, intentional, and corrupt violation of law, in that the said election officers were not appointed in the interest of a fair election and an honest count and return of the vote so cast, but were appointed to aid and assist in the election of J. G. Carlisle, the candidate of the Democratic party, to the injury and prejudice and defeat of George H. Thobe, the opposing candidate of the Union Labor party.

2. That gross frauds were perpetrated and committed by the supporters and partisans of John G. Carlisle, in his interest and for his benefit, in the counties of Trimble, Grant, Gallatin, Campbell, Carroll, Boone, Pendleton, and Kenton.

3. That the returned majority of 825 votes which it was alleged was received by John G. Carlisle in the said Congressional election is false and fraudulent.

4. That your memorialists further charge, in consequence of the outrageous frauds perpetrated at the election and in the district aforesaid, John G. Carlisle was falsely and wrongfully returned as a member-elect from said Congressional district, and he, the said Carlisle, now occupies and holds said seat to the injury and prejudice of a majority of the legally qualified electors of the said State and Congressional district.

5. And because in many election precincts in the counties of the said Sixth district of Kentucky the polls were not opened until after the hour of 6 o'clock, and were closed before 4 o'clock of said day, in open violation of the laws of Kentucky, thereby preventing many persons from voting for said Thobe who otherwise would have voted for him.

And your memorialists herewith present a number of affidavits in support of the allegations herein contained, and they aver that the charges therein can be substantiated by a great number of reliable and credible witnesses.

Wherefore your petitioners respectfully request in the interest of good government and of honest and impartial elections, to the end that an honest ballot and a fair count may be had in the State and district aforesaid, that your honorable body may direct to be made and make a thorough and searching investigation into the matters herein set forth as to the conduct and results of said election in the State and Congressional district aforesaid, to the end that full and complete justice may be done in the premises.

Mr. Speaker, the signers of this memorial are voters of the Sixth Kentucky district. Does any member of this House suppose these 3,000 voters would sign such a petition if the contest was not being prosecuted in good faith? They are in earnest and so am I, and all we ask is justice, and we do not believe you can afford to deny us. Great stress was laid on the poll-books of Carroll County. The gentleman who investigated them on two or three occasions told me they were in one handwriting. Private marks were made on them. He made a private mark on each one of those poll-books that no one else knew.

I feel now certain in my own mind that those poll-sheets presented here to the committee were not the original ones. I have every reason to believe that the gentleman sent in my behalf put a private mark on those poll-books. If those produced have that private mark, right and well. So much for the great stress laid on the poll-books from Carroll County. But I assert here and now that if this House will reopen this case and investigate the matter honestly and thoroughly, it will be found that the poll-sheets produced on behalf of the Speaker are as false and fraudulent as the certificate on which he holds his seat in this House. Those poll-sheets are spurious and were manufactured and dumped upon the committee and this House to save the Speaker.

Mr. BRUMM. Were you present when these poll-books were before the committee?

Mr. THOBE. I was not, and I never saw them. The committee accepted these spurious papers without question.

Gentlemen, if I can not prove that that conference of Carlisle's friends was held after the election, and that something was done, as I have charged, to change the honest result, I am willing to rest my case on that.

If a committee would go down to Covington and subpœna gentlemen of high standing there and examine them, then if we could not prove that a conference was held I would give up the fight. I am positive about it, gentlemen. It was common talk. Not enough votes were polled to overcome the large majority of the workingmen in those two counties, which was 2,062. If my attorney, L. A. Wood, had been true to me, there is no doubt he could have proven these facts; and because he was not true to me I wish to have this case reopened, in any way you gentlemen see fit, and I am certain that we will prove up this case to your satisfaction. The people there do not wish to volunteer their testimony, but their testimony can be had by a committee. Another thing, gentlemen; it has been said again and again in conversation by men of character and high standing, "Mr. Carlisle was defeated; but then, look at the man Thobe. It is better to say nothing about it and let Carlisle hold the seat than to have that man Thobe." But, gentlemen, the people have made inquiries in regard to this man Thobe, and they have found that he is not quite as bad a man as they thought he was. They have found that he has six children, and that he sends them to school. He has a boy eighteen years old now in the State of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], at Atlanta, working at bricklaying, and another going to school at Lexington. I own my own home, where I was born and raised, in Covington, and when I went to Indiana some years ago, the first thing was to get a home, and I own a home there still. I have always taken an interest in elections and in the affairs of this Government, and all I ask is justice in this matter. During our campaign we distributed some sixty thousand copies of our "platform," and the two paragraphs that we dwelt most upon were these:

Fourth. Should encourage home industries, make such liberal appropriations for internal improvements as shall meet all the industrial demands of the country and develop its resources, and so afford employment for otherwise unemployed labor; and should prohibit the importation or employment of all contract, convict, or pauper labor.

Sixth. Should maintain and protect the purity and freedom of the ballot, and the rights and interests of citizenship at all times, in all places, and under all circumstances by the whole power of the Government, State and National.

Gentlemen, the workingmen are in earnest in this matter. It was talked about at all their public meetings, and all they asked or ask now is justice and fair play. I well remember that when I used to read the Bible as a school-boy the Ark of the Covenant always seemed to me the most sacred thing possible, but I believe to-day that every citizen ought to think just as much of the ballot-box. The ballot-box should not be handled like a plaything.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. THOBE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. It has been stated, or the opinion has been expressed here in the course of the debate, that the gentleman [Mr. Thobe] at one time gave up his case, and that his present movement in asking it to be reopened was inspired from Washington. What I desire to ask is whether that be true, or whether it be true that he is now proceeding of his own motion, inspired by what he believes to be the justice of his case?

Mr. THOBE. It is utterly untrue that I did not want to go into this contest, or that I ever thought of abandoning it; utterly untrue. I can prove by twenty or thirty of the leading workingmen of Covington that on the first Sunday after the election, when my first attorney said to them that it would be an easy matter to prove fraud and to seat their candidate, I insisted on the contest. I was not forced into it by anybody else, and I will state again that in no instance have I said anything or done anything that could in the least imply that I did not enter into the contest in good faith.

Mr. LODGE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. THOBE. Yes, sir. I like to be asked questions.

Mr. LODGE. On page 51 of the report of the committee is the affidavit of Horace Cambron, from which I read:

Affiant says that he never caused to be published in said paper any item to the effect that Mr. Carlisle admitted his defeat, nor was any such item ever published to affiant's knowledge; but the files of that paper prior to a change of ownership about six or seven months ago were not preserved, and affiant does not know where to find a copy of said issue.

Is that paper in which the affiant denies that any such publication was made the one in which it was made?

Mr. THOBE. That is the paper.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the gentleman to send the paper to the Clerk's desk that the publication may be read.

Mr. THOBE. November 3 is the date of the paper. I ask the Clerk to read the passages which are marked.

The Clerk read as follows from the Evening Telegram, published at Cincinnati, Wednesday evening, November 3, 1886:

There are yet eight precincts to be heard from in Kenton County, and all in Campbell, except Dayton and Bellevue, so that it is utterly impossible, judging by the surprises already received, to form any accurate idea as to the result.

MR. CARLISLE TALKS.

The Telegram met Mr. Carlisle in Covington this morning and had quite a chat with him. The Speaker is smiling and looks on his very probable defeat with the utmost composure. He said:

"The result is entirely owing to the fact that Democrats felt no concern whatever in my election, and would pass the polls with the remark that 'that man Thobe would not get 100 votes.' Why, there was money, and plenty of it, furnished by manufacturing concerns back of this movement. They went round quietly before the election and were thoroughly organized in every precinct in the district. The district was flooded with their tickets just before the election. If my information is correct, and I have no reason for doubting it, Mr. Thobe will be the next Congressman, and I will feel a sense of personal relief that I have not felt before for ten years. I will feel that a heavy load has been lifted from me."

CARLISLE—THE BIG KENTUCKIAN PROBABLY A DEFEATED MAN.

At 12 o'clock the indications are that Hon. John G. Carlisle is a beaten man. But for more definite information see next edition. Republicans are claiming the election of their candidate by 500.

Mr. STRUBLE (to the Clerk). Read the name of that paper.

Mr. THOBE. It is a Carlisle paper—the Evening Telegram, of Cincinnati—the issue of November 3, 1886.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do the names of the publishers or editors appear?

Mr. THOBE. The reporter of that paper who wrote the article was Mr. Horace Cambron, formerly a lawyer, who stated to my local attorney that he would hate to make an affidavit in regard to the interview, because Mr. Carlisle was a particular friend of his, and he had named his son after the Speaker. [Laughter.] In that interview Mr. Carlisle says:

If my information is correct, and I have no reason for doubting it, Mr. Thobe will be the next Congressman.

How did he get his information? Some particular friends of his gave it to him; and I can say that if I wished to do so, I could mention the names of half a dozen prominent gentlemen who said to others the day after the election, "Mr. Carlisle is defeated, but he won't be defeated to-morrow."

Now, gentlemen, can you afford to pass this question by without a full investigation, when, if you do so, every man in that district will believe that I was elected? All I ask is simply an investigation.

One word more and I am done. I was legally elected a member of this House by the legally qualified voters of my district. I was defrauded and cheated out of my legal majority by ballot-box stuffing and false counting. I was betrayed and sold out by my original counsel in the contest. I have been denied the right to furnish the legal proofs, to expose the frauds committed, and to establish my right to the seat to which I was elected. I submit my appeal for justice to this House, and in the name of the industrial classes who voted for me, and of whom I am proud to be an humble member, and in the name of the three thousand signers of this petition, I respectfully demand that justice be done in this matter. [Applause.]

Mr. McCREARY. In justice to myself as well as Mr. Thobe, I wish him to state again in what connection he referred to me, so that if necessary I may make the proper explanation.

Mr. ROGERS. I raise the point of order that there is so much confusion on the floor members can not hear what is going on.

Mr. THOBE. I wish to be understood——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The contestant will suspend a moment. Gentlemen of the House will be seated. Does the contestant yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. THOBE. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCREARY. In order that justice may be done to myself as well as to Mr. Thobe, I ask him to repeat what he has stated in the course of his remarks in reference to myself, so that I may understand exactly the purport of his language.

Mr. THOBE. That was in the Commercial of December, 1886. It was in reply to an interview published in the Courier-Journal in reference to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY], wherein it was stated that if Carlisle's majority was ten thousand, I would still contest the election. In reply to that my attorney, Logan A. Wood, wrote a column and a half, and also dwelt on the interview published before that with "the Tall Sycamore of the Wabash," in which he said that I would not even get a hearing. The article to which I refer could be read if the House desired, showing the exact language that Logan A. Wood used, mentioning Mr. McCREARY's name, and also various other names.

Mr. McCREARY. Was that a statement in Mr. Wood's card, or did it purport to be an interview with me?

Mr. THOBE. Oh, no; he just wrote, a card after reading what the Courier-Journal said.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Wood wrote a card after reading what the Courier-Journal said?

Mr. THOBE. That is it exactly.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I think it proper I should say now that I never at any time said that no matter what the result of that election might be Mr. Thobe would contest it. I was never interviewed at Louisville about the Carlisle-Thobe election, and I never said at any time anything in regard to it, except that I desired the returns to be counted fairly, that I believed they would be so counted, and that when the result was announced, I wanted it to be in accordance with the law and with the votes as they had been cast by the people of that district. [Applause.]

Mr. MATSON. I wish to ask the contestant whether he did not state the alleged interview with Senator VOORHEES too strongly when he said the Senator had stated that he (Mr. Thobe) would not even get a hearing.

Mr. THOBE. Those are the words.

Mr. MATSON. Let me refresh the gentleman's memory a little. Did not Senator VOORHEES state, or rather did not the alleged interview represent him as stating, that Mr. Carlisle was very popular with both sides of the House, and that the Republicans would be very sorry to see him lose his seat? Was not that about it?

Mr. THOBE. If you will look over the files of the paper to which I have referred——

Mr. MATSON. Have you the paper?

Mr. THOBE. No, sir.

Mr. MATSON. Do you say the language represented to have been used in that interview was that you would not even get a hearing?

Mr. THOBE. My attorney wrote a column and a half in reply to that article. The language was that I would stand but a slim chance of getting even a hearing.

Mr. MATSON. I wish to say that I read that article myself; and I am sure that Senator VOORHEES was not represented as saying that the gentleman (Mr. Thobe) would not even get a hearing. That is my recollection.

Mr. THOBE. "Would stand a slim chance."

Mr. MATSON. No, sir; the language was not anything like that.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is for the contestant to proceed.

Mr. THOBE. Mr. Speaker, I would not like to see party lines drawn on this question. I trust that members will vote as their consciences dictate. When I left home the impression prevailing there, especially among the industrial classes, was that, there being a majority of Democrats in this House, they would vote solidly against investigating this matter. I told them I did not believe that statement; that they would be fair; and I hope they will be fair now. All I ask is a simple investigation, and the facts I have stated can be established. The people there have no doubt of the future, but say that it did look doubtful at one time, but it is all cleared up now.

I ask that the memorial to which I have referred be made a part of my remarks as read.

Mr. CRISP. What is that request?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The contestant asks that a memorial to which he has referred be made a part of his remarks.

Mr. CRISP. Is it understood that all the names are to be printed?

Mr. ROGERS. He says he does not desire the names printed.

Mr. THOBE. I will state that there are twelve hundred more on the way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the memorial as read will be printed without the names.

There was no objection.

It is as follows:

Memorial for reopening the case for new testimony from Grant, Gallatin, two precincts of Pendleton, four precincts of Trimble, and the Eighth ward of Covington (Kenton); also from Kenton and Campbell Counties.

To the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned citizens and electors of the Sixth Congressional district of the State of Kentucky respectfully represent: That at the election for member of Congress in the said district, held on Tuesday, the 2d day of November, A. D. 1886, in accordance with the acts of Congress and the laws of the State of Kentucky in that behalf made and provided, there was not a full, fair, and impartial expression of a majority of the qualified voters of said Congressional district in regard to their choice for a member of Congress for said district in the Fiftieth Congress of the United States, for the following reasons:

1. That in the matter of the appointment, service, and qualifications of the election officers there was an open, intentional, and corrupt violation of law, in that the said election officers were not appointed in the interest of a fair election and an honest count and return of the vote so cast, but were appointed to aid and assist in the election of J. G. Carlisle, the candidate of the Democratic party, to the injury and prejudice and defeat of George H. Thobe, the opposing candidate, of the Union Labor Party.

2. That gross frauds were perpetrated and committed by the supporters and partisans of John G. Carlisle in his interest and for his benefit in the counties of Trimble, Grant, Gallatin, Campbell, Carroll, Boone, Pendleton, and Kenton.

3. That the returned majority of 825 votes which it is alleged was received by John G. Carlisle in the said Congressional election is false and fraudulent.

4. That your memorialists further charge in consequence of the outrageous frauds perpetrated at the election and in the district aforesaid, John G. Carlisle was falsely and wrongfully returned as the member elect from said Congressional district, and he, the said Carlisle, now occupies and holds said seat to the injury and prejudice of a majority of the legally qualified electors of the said State and Congressional district.

5. And because in many election precincts in the counties of the said Sixth district of Kentucky the polls were not opened until after the hour of 6 o'clock, and were closed before 4 o'clock of said day, in open violation of the laws of Kentucky, thereby preventing many persons from voting for said Thobe who otherwise would have voted for him.

And your memorialists herewith present a number of affidavits in support of the allegations herein contained, and they aver that the charges therein can be substantiated by a great number of reliable and credible witnesses.

Wherefore your petitioners respectfully request, in the interest of good government and of honest and impartial elections, to the end that an honest ballot and a fair count may be had in the State and district aforesaid, that your honorable body may direct to be made and make a thorough and searching investigation into the matters herein set forth as to the conduct and results of said election in the State and Congressional district aforesaid, to the end that full and complete justice may be done in the premises.

To the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned citizens and electors of the Sixth Congressional district of the State of Kentucky respectfully represent: That an election for a member of Congress in the said district was held on Tuesday, the 2d day of November, A. D. 1886, in accordance with the acts of Congress and the laws of the State of Kentucky in that behalf made and provided; and your memorialists represent that at the election held upon the day last mentioned there was not a full, fair, and impartial expression of a majority of the qualified voters of said Congressional district in regard to their choice for a member of Congress for said district in the Fiftieth Congress of the United States, for the following reasons:

1. That in the matter of the appointment, service, and qualifications of the election officers there was an open, intentional, and corrupt violation of law, in that the said election officers were not appointed in the interest of a fair election and an honest count and return of the votes so cast, but were appointed to aid and assist in the election of J. 3. That the returned majority of 825 votes which it is alleged was received by John G. Carlisle in the said Congressional election is false and fraudulent.

And that your memorialists further charge in consequence of the outrageous frauds perpetrated at the election and in the district aforesaid, John C. Carlisle was falsely and wrongfully returned as the member elect from said Congressional district, and he, the said Carlisle, now occupies and holds said seat to the injury and prejudice of a majority of the legally qualified electors of the said State and Congressional district.

And your memorialists herewith present a number of affidavits in support of the allegation herein contained, and they aver that the charges herein can be substantiated by a great number of reliable and credible witnesses.

Mr. CRISP. I move that the House do now adjourn. [Cries of "Let us take a vote!"] Very well, I will withdraw that motion and demand the previous question upon the adoption of the resolutions, which seems to be the desire of the House.

Mr. LYMAN. I desire to offer a substitute for the resolution proposed by the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from Georgia has demanded the previous question.

Mr. CRISP. I do not desire to exclude that, of course.

Mr. LYMAN. I supposed not from our conversation. I do not wish to discuss it, but ask to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the contest of George H. Thobe, an elector residing in the Sixth Congressional district of Kentucky, questioning the election of John Griffin Carlisle as a member of the House of Representatives and his right to represent such district in this House, is of such importance to the sitting member, and to the people of the country, regardless of party, that it is entitled to a full, thorough, and impartial investigation, and without expressing any opinion upon the merits of such contest:

Be it resolved, That all the papers be printed and referred to a select or subcommittee of the Election Committee of this House, with power to sit during the sessions of Congress, and to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and employ a clerk and a stenographer, and to visit such places as may be necessary to ascertain the full truth; and the expenses necessarily incurred in the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is upon agreeing to the substitute of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 132, not voting 66; as follows:

Mr. CRISP. I understand the previous question is still operating upon the other two resolutions.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Had not we better have the vote first announced on this?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will first announce the pairs.

The following pairs were announced until further notice:

Mr. BURNETT with Mr. GROSVENOR.

Mr. SPINOLA with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. GAINES.

Mr. MCCLAMMY. I am paired with Mr. NICHOLS. Were he present, I would vote "nay;" he would vote "yea."

Mr. LANHAM. My colleague, Mr. MILLS, is absent from the House, by reason of sickness.

Mr. BRUMM. It seems to me that several gentlemen sitting around here—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BRUMM. There may be an error in the recapitulation of the vote. We heard the name of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] announced as having voted "nay." He voted "ay" on the first call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is correct; but the gentleman himself corrected the vote immediately.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first resolution reported by the committee.

Mr. CRISP. On that question I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That George H. Thobe was not elected a Representative to the Fiftieth Congress of the United States from the Sixth district of Kentucky.

Resolved, That John G. Carlisle was duly elected a Representative to the Fiftieth Congress of the United States from the Sixth district of Kentucky, and is entitled to his seat.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to know if the gentleman from Georgia demanded the yeas and nays on both resolutions.

Mr. CRISP. On the first one only.

Mr. BRUMM. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Are we to vote on the report of the majority or of the minority first?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first resolution reported by the majority of the committee.

Mr. CRISP. If it is the wish of the House, there is no objection to taking the vote on both resolutions; the one that Mr. Thobe was not, the other that Mr. Carlisle was elected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the vote being taken on both resolutions?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRISP. I ask that the Clerk again report the resolutions.

The resolutions were again read.

Mr. KERR. I ask if we have the parliamentary right to have the two questions divided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair submitted to the House the proposition that the vote should be taken on both resolutions, and no one objected.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 139, nays 3, not voting 181; as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 21, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

TRUST AND POOL COMBINATIONS.

Mr. BACON. I submit a report from the Committee on Manufactures, and ask its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Manufactures, to which was referred House resolution 69, relating to an investigation of certain trusts, respectfully report back said resolution with the accompanying resolution as a substitute therefor, and with the recommendation that the original resolution lie on the table, and that the substitute be adopted in lieu thereof.

Mr. PAYSON. Let the substitute be reported.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that certain individuals and corporations in the United States engaged in manufacturing, mining, or dealing in some of the necessaries of life have combined for the purpose of controlling or curtailing the production or supply of the same, and thereby increasing their price to the people of the country, which combinations are known as associations, trusts, pools, and like names, but are not incorporated under the laws of any State; and

Whereas such combinations not only injuriously affect commerce between the States but impair the revenues of the United States as derived from its duties on imports: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures be, and the same is hereby, directed to inquire into the names and numbers and extent of such alleged combinations, under whatever name known, their methods of combination or doing business, their effect upon the prices of any of the necessaries of life to the people of the country, upon its internal or foreign commerce, and its revenues from import duties, together with any and all other matters relating to the same which may call for or suggest legislation by Congress, and report the same to the House with such recommendations as the said committee may agree upon.

And for these purposes the Committee on Manufactures is authorized to sit during the sessions of the House, to employ a stenographer, to administer oaths, examine witnesses, to compel the attendance of persons and the production of papers.

And the expense of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that it be considered now.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNSATISFACTORY MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer for reference the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to inquire into and inform the House of Representatives of the cause and foundation of the grievances complained of in the subjoined editorial taken from the Capital, a daily newspaper published at Topeka, Kans., under date of January 11, 1888, and also to inform the House whether the almost universal complaint prevailing in the West against the present unsatisfactory mail service results from the appointment of inexperienced and incapable employés or from inadequate and insufficient appropriations to meet the wants of the Post-Office Department and the needs of the people, or whether it results from other causes, and if so, what.

[From the Capital, official State paper.]

THE MAIL SERVICE OF KANSAS.

Never at any time in the history of Kansas has there been in the United States mail service such an utter disregard of the rights of the people as at this time. Notwithstanding the great increase in population, the stupid attempt on the part of the Administration to make a record for economy has cut down the clerical force necessary to properly distribute the mails at large offices and in the mail trains, and it is consequently too small to do the work. Tons of mail matter pass through Kansas on the trains westward that can not be disposed of by the force allowed by the Post-Office Department. The result is that it is carried past the towns where it belongs, and brought back after two or three days' absence in Colorado or New Mexico. It is not the fault of the railway clerks, because the Department asks of them a task that it is not possible for them to perform. The people of Kansas have been patient, and the press has been lenient over this Democratic folly. Mails going west are so heavy that men working to the extent of their strength, doing more than double duty, can not handle them.

Appeals to the Department at Washington for adequate help to take care of this important public service are unheeded. The railway mail service through Kansas has become criminally neglected, and it is time this attempt of the Democratic party to make capital by a show of false economy should be brought to the attention of Congress. In reply to continued appeals for the Department to send a man to examine the railway mail service in Kansas, a man came, and overlooking the tons of mail that could not be distributed in time to be thrown off at the towns where it belonged, he succeeded in having two or three clerks fined for not having the regulation gold-lace band on their caps, and thus civil-service reform was indorsed and the record of the party for economy maintained.

Objection was made.

ELECTION CONTEST—THOBE VS. CARLISLE.

Mr. LANHAM. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports of a private nature.

Mr. DOCKERY. What disposition was made of the resolution just read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection was made to its consideration.

Mr. CRISP. I submit that under the rules of the House the regular order to-day, immediately after the reading of the Journal, is the execution of the order of the House made yesterday under the operation of the previous question. The pending question is upon the resolutions reported by the Committee on Elections in the contested-election case of Thobe vs. Carlisle.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Georgia calls up that question, it takes precedence.

Mr. CRISP. I ask that the consideration of that question be resumed, and the vote be taken upon the pending motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the position of the question. At the adjournment last evening the House had voted by yeas and nays upon the resolutions reported by the majority of the Committee on Elections, and no quorum had voted.

Mr. HOGG. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Can a motion be now made to reconsider the vote by which the substitute of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. LYMAN] was rejected? Can that motion be made pending the call of the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Did the gentleman vote on the prevailing side?

Mr. HOGG. I voted in the negative.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can enter that motion.

Mr. HOGG. I now move that the vote——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not in order to debate it. The House in the execution of its order is taking a vote by yeas and nays.

Mr. HOGG. I simply wish to make the motion—not to offer any remarks in support of it. I move that the vote by which the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa was rejected be reconsidered.

Mr. CRISP. I submit that nothing is in order now except the vote by yeas and nays.

Mr. HOGG. I am not debating my proposition.

Mr. CRISP. No motion is in order; the only business in order is to take the vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can enter the motion to reconsider. A motion to reconsider is in order at any time on the day when the original proposition is voted upon, or on the succeeding day. The question is now on the resolutions reported by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] on behalf of the majority of the Committee on Elections. On that question the yeas and nays were yesterday ordered and taken; but no quorum appeared. The Clerk will now call the roll. That is the only matter now in order.

The Clerk, proceeding to call the roll, called the name of Mr. ABBOTT.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I call for the reading of the pending resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That George H. Thobe was not elected a Representative to the Fiftieth Congress of the United States from the Sixth district of Kentucky.

Resolved, That John G. Carlisle was duly elected a Representative to the Fiftieth Congress of the United States from the Sixth district of Kentucky, and is entitled to his seat.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order for me now to ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution which I will send to the Chair?

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would not be in order at this time. The roll-call has begun; and the order of the House for the yeas and nays must be executed.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I wish to offer a motion——

Mr. CRISP. I object.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. CHIPMAN. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the substitute of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] was defeated.

The call of the yeas and nays was resumed.

Mr. BYNUM (when his name was called) said: I ask consent to explain my vote.

Mr. STEELE. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No debate is in order during a roll-call.

Mr. STEELE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is to proceed with the call of the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 140, nays 6, not voting 177; as follows:

YEAS—140.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HOGG] made the motion, as the Chair understood, to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was rejected. That motion will not be in order until the vote on ordering the previous question has been reconsidered.

Mr. HOGG. Then I make that motion.

Mr. CRISP. And pending that motion I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. JACKSON. I call for the regular order of business. Nothing is in order but the call of the roll, as a quorum did not vote on the last roll-call.

AMENDMENT TO THE BANK BILL.

By unanimous consent, Mr. DUNN was granted leave to print in the RECORD a proposed amendment to the bill (H. R. 1733) relating to the issue of circulating notes to national banks.

The proposed amendment is as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"SEC. 2. That hereafter any national banking association may deposit gold and silver bullion with the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States, in amounts not less in value than $10,000, and receive therefor certificates in denominations of $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, and $500, as the depositor may elect, prepared as now provided by law for the United States notes, fractional parts of $10 on any deposit of bullion to be paid for in coin. Such certificates shall be receivable in all parts of the United States for customs, taxes, and all other public dues, and shall be a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, except where payment in coin is expressly stipulated. They shall be redeemable on presentation at the Treasury, or subtreasury in the city of New York, in coin.

"SEC. 3. That the value or ratio to gold at which certificates shall be issued on silver bullion deposited under this act shall be its actual ratio or market value at the time of deposit, to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury for each calendar month by taking the average selling price of silver bullion, as expressed in gold dollars, in the open market in New York city, during the preceding month, which price, so determined, shall be the value or ratio to gold at which certificates shall be issued during the succeeding month: Provided, That certificates shall not be issued on silver bullion at a value above the ratio of silver to gold as now fixed by law for standard gold and silver coins.

"SEC. 4. That silver bullion deposited under this act shall be received subject to all the provisions of law as to assaying, melting, and refining when below standard, casting into ingots or bars, the same as if deposited for coinage: Provided, That coins struck at European mints, and ingots and bars made by melting down such coins, shall be excluded from the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 5. That when any of the certificates herein authorized are redeemed in coin they shall be canceled and destroyed; but certificates which come back into the Treasury by being received for customs, taxes, or other public dues, or in exchange for lawful money, shall not be canceled, but shall be held as cash, and may be reissued or paid out again, as current money, for all debts and demands owing by the United States, except where payment in coin is expressly stipulated.

"SEC. 6. That on the taking effect of this act the monthly coinage of silver dollars under the act of February 28, 1878, shall be stopped, and in lieu of such monthly coinage the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to cause the coinage, from time to time, of standard silver dollars and gold coins from the bullion deposited under this act in amounts sufficient to supply any demand that may arise for coin for circulation, or that may be required to pay coin obligations of the Government: Provided, That concurrently with the coinage of any bullion for which certificates have been issued under this act the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be destroyed certificates equal in value to the bullion so coined at the time of its deposit.

"SEC. 8. That this act shall take effect 188—."

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on the subject of the agreements negotiated with the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, stating, in response to a resolution of January 18, 1888, in relation to the employment of Charles R. Westbrook as assistant attorney to the district attorney for the southern district of New York, that the Department has no official knowledge of such employment of Charles R. Westbrook, has no correspondence upon its files in relation thereto, nor any information as to compensation paid him for any such services; which was read.

Mr. HALE. I have just come in from the Committee on Appropriations and did not hear the reading of the communication. I hope it will be printed and lie on the table for the present, so that I may examine it.

The communication was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Finance.

Rice, late governor of the Commonwealth; Charles W. Eliot, and Julius H. Seelye, presidents of colleges in that State; Dr. Edward Everett Hale, Phillips Brooks, Andrew P. Peabody, Leverett Saltonstall, Edwin D. Mead, and a large number of other persons, eminent scholars, men of letters, clergymen, and in other various walks of life, a committee representing a mass meeting held at Tremont Temple, in Boston, on the 12th of November, 1887, to welcome the British deputation of peace and arbitration, praying that the desire of that deputation may be granted by Congress, or by the treaty-making power, and that a treaty be made with Great Britain providing for a settlement by arbitration of all future disputes between these two nations which can not be settled by diplomatic agency.

This British deputation represents a large number, I believe a majority, of the present members of the British Parliament, and a large number of other persons of rank and influence and distinction in that country.

Some jealousy has arisen lest this present message, which has come so recently from Great Britain, may be intended to affect in some manner matters which are now in course of negotiation between these two countries, and which I have no doubt will be adjusted by peaceful and ordinary diplomatic methods, or by the good sense of the two nations without diplomatic intervention. I am satisfied that there is no foundation for that jealousy; that the existence of the fishery disputes or of any other which may have arisen between this country and Great Britain has no connection whatever with this deputation, but that it relates to a larger and more comprehensive purpose.

I desire to say in moving the reference of the petition to the Committee on Foreign Relations, that it seems to me one of the most important and interesting questions which can be brought before the Senate at the present time. This message is a message which it well becomes Great Britain and the United States on the one hand to send and on the other to receive and welcome. These two nations speak the same language, are of the same blood, have largely the same pursuits and the same interests; and the evil which it is sought to avert—an evil to mankind in a thousand ways, evil because of its waste of human life and of treasure and of the great forces which may be so beneficent when turned into peaceful channels—is especially an evil, as it constitutes the greatest and most serious burden which presses upon the neck of the laboring classes of mankind.

The great armaments which are kept up by the European nations operate chiefly as a burden upon their poor and laboring classes; not upon their dominant classes, but upon the classes to whom the sympathy of the American people always goes out. On the continent of Europe every peasant or workingman who is born is born with a soldier upon his back, and he goes through life with the armed man clinging to his neck and pressing him down into the dust.

The cost of a single ship of war is much greater than the cost of a first-class university. The cost of our own late war, the result of which I know and concede is worth all the cost, still is so great that if the amount were put out at interest at 5 per cent., the interest would pay all the expenses of government, national and State both, in this country forever.

I say again, it seems to me this message, which comes from so high an authority in Great Britain, is one which is well worth the respectful attention of the American people.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, authorized to send for persons and papers in respect of its inquiry into the said alleged participation of officers of the United States in said matter.

The said committee is authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate, either as a full committee or by any subcommittee thereof, and any such subcommittee shall, for the purpose of such investigation, be a committee of the Senate to all intents and purposes.

Mr. VEST. I wish to state as a member of the committee that I consented to the reporting of these resolutions because it went without saying that they would be adopted; but, as a matter of fact, I do not believe in any such inquiry. I saw, however, that it was a foregone conclusion that the resolutions would be adopted, and therefore I consented to this modified form, confining the investigation to United States officials alone. I am opposed to the whole thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. From the same committee I report a resolution which must go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. It provides for paying the expenses of the investigation.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the necessary expenses of the Committee on the Judiciary or any subcommittee thereof, in making the inquiries into certain matters alleged to have occurred at Jackson, Miss., and as directed by the resolutions of the Senate of the 12th instant and of the 23d instant, be paid out of the appropriation for the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of said committee.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT MELBOURNE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 72) relating to the invitation of the British Government to the Government of the United States to participate in the international exhibition at Melbourne to celebrate the founding of New South Wales; and for reasons which I will state, if the Senate will give me a moment, I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The Committee on Foreign Relations some time ago unanimously recommended the adoption of the provision of this joint resolution, and directed that it should be moved as an amendment to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; but since that time the House of Representatives has passed, I believe without much division, a similar joint resolution. The Committee on Foreign Relations now report back the House joint resolution, and ask that the Senate agree to it.

If this invitation is to be accepted and a commission is to be sent to Australia, there is a necessity that it should be now organized. I trust, therefore, that as the subject-matter has been pretty fully debated in the other House (and I am prepared to give the Senate any information on the subject if desired) that we shall have a vote upon it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the joint resolution will be considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and read at length.

Mr. HOAR. If there be no debate. If there be debate, I shall ask the Senator to put it over until the routine business is concluded.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; I do not desire to debate it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution; which was read, as follows:

Whereas the British Government has extended to the Government of the United States an invitation to participate in the international exhibition which is to be held at Melbourne, beginning on the 1st day of August, 1888, to celebrate the centenary of the founding of New South Wales: Therefore,

Resolved, etc., That said invitation is accepted, and that there be, and there hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to effect the purpose of this resolution, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of State for the purpose of such representation at said exhibition.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of State to transmit to Congress a detailed statement of the expenditures which may have been incurred under the provisions of this resolution, together with any reports which may be made by the representatives of this country at said exhibition.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

ACTION OF THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to inform the Senate what plans, designs, drawings, or specifications of ships or marine engines have been purchased or procured in foreign countries by or in behalf of the Navy Department and from whom they have been obtained; and to state what plans, designs, drawings, or specifications so purchased or procured have been adopted in whole or in part for vessels or engines now under contract or construction; and also to transmit to the Senate a statement of the cost to the Government of each of such plans, designs, drawings, and specifications; and also an account of all expenditures made by the Navy Department since March 20, 1885, under the appropriations for information from abroad, and for emergencies and extraordinary expenses arising abroad.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to transmit to the Senate a statement of the changes made from the original plans of the Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, and Dolphin in addition to those specified in a communication from the Navy Department to the House of Representatives of February 11, 1885 (constituting House Executive Document No. 220, Forty-eighth Congress, second session) and in a communication from said Department to the Senate of May 24, 1886 (constituting Senate Executive Document No. 153, Forty-ninth Congress, first session), together with the cost of such additional changes in each case; and that the Secretary be directed also to furnish the Senate with copies of all documents and correspondence on file in said Department, written since March 5, 1886, in any way concerning the aforesaid vessels, which are not contained in the annual reports of said Department, including all reports of boards and of commanding officers and engineer officers; and all log-books kept while the vessels have been in motion since said date, and all the evidences of settlements and payments made since said date by the United States, and of any unsettled claims on account of said vessels; and that the Secretary be directed further to state the present condition of the Atlanta, Boston, and Chicago, and the reasons for the delay in their completion and reception into active service.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BECK. I do not propose to object to this or the preceding resolution, but they are very comprehensive, and I do not see any member of the Committee on Naval Affairs on this side in the Chamber. Is there any objection to laying them over until to-morrow, so that they may be printed?

Mr. CHANDLER. Not at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies over under the rule.

Mr. BECK. There are two of them, I think.

Mr. CHANDLER. The first resolution offered by me was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. Perhaps it might be as well to let them both go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee suggests a reconsideration of the vote by which the first resolution was adopted.

Mr. HARRIS. So that both may be printed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reconsideration will be ordered, if there be no objection. Both resolutions will go over and be printed.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to transmit to the Senate information concerning all naval vessels and machinery and armor for the same, and all naval ordnance and gun metal, for constructing or furnishing which contracts have been made by the Navy Department since March 4, 1885, as follows:

1. Copies in the case of each contract of the advertisement, and of the written or printed conditions and rules for tests and inspections upon which proposals were invited.
2. A schedule of the proposals received and awards made.
3. A copy of the contract made.
4. A statement showing the time within which the contract was to be performed, and the present condition of the work, and the payments made thereon, with copies of the reports and correspondence upon which each payment was made.

And that the Secretary be directed also to inform the Senate whether or not since said contracts have been made any of the terms or conditions of any of them have been altered, or any agreements have been made for changes in the quality of material or work, or any of the stipulations or rules for tests and inspections have been relaxed or varied; and, if so, to state the circumstances and causes of any such alteration, change, or variation.

Mr. BECK. Let that be printed along with the other resolutions submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over until to-morrow, and be printed, under the rule.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 484) for the relief of Thomas C. Dickey;

A bill (H. R. 1604) to change the time of the sessions of the circuit court of the western division of the western district of Missouri; and

A bill (H. R. 5514) to amend section 4883 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate as early as practicable what progress has been made by his Department in examining the claim of the State of Massachusetts for expenses incurred and paid at the request of the President and Secretary of State during the war in protecting the harbors and strengthening the fortifications on the coast, now on file with the Third Auditor, under the act of July 27, 1861, in pursuance of the authority and direction of the act of July 7, 1884; and how early the "report of the amount to Congress" therein required will be made.

ISAAC D. SMEAD & CO.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with a detailed statement of the entire amount paid by the District government to Isaac D. Smead & Co. from the date they commenced work for the District to the present time, giving in connection with each payment its amount, date, kind of work done, and designation of the building in which it was done; also to report whether there was any competition or whether any proposals were invited for said work before contract was entered into therefor, and, if so, to furnish specific information in regard to the same.

Mr. McPHERSON. Let that lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies over under the rule.

CŒUR D'ALENE RESERVATION.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Whereas it is alleged that the present area of the Cœur d'Alene Indian reservation, in the Territory of Idaho, embraces 480,000 acres of land; that there are according to the statistics in the Indian Bureau only about four hundred and seventy-six Indians in the tribe now occupying such reservation, or more than 1,000 acres to each man, woman, and child; that Lake Cœur d'Alene, all the navigable waters of Cœur d'Alene River, and about 20 miles of the navigable part of St. Joseph River, and part of St. Mary's, a navigable tributary of the St. Joseph, are embraced within this reservation, except a shore-line of 3½ miles at the north end of the lake, it being alleged that this lake and its rivers tributary constitute the most important highways of commerce in the Territory of Idaho, and are, in fact, the only navigable waters, except Snake River, now used for steam-boat navigation in the Territory; that all boats now entering such waters are subject to the laws governing the Indian country, and all persons going on such lake or waters within the reservation lines are trespassers; and

Whereas it is further alleged that the Indians now on such reservation are located in the extreme southwest corner of the same, around De Smet Mission, near the town of Farmington, in Washington Territory, where the land is good for agriculture; and it being further alleged that all that part of such reservation lying between Lake Cœur d'Alene and Cœur d'Alene River and that part between the Cœur d'Alene River and St. Joseph River is a territory rich in the precious metals and at the same time being of no real value or benefit to the Indians: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate as to the extent of the present area and boundaries of the Cœur d'Alene Indian reservation in the Territory of Idaho; whether such area includes any portion, and if so, about how much, of the navigable waters of Lake Cœur d'Alene and of Cœur d'Alene and St. Joseph Rivers; about what proportion of said reservation is agricultural, grazing, and mineral land, respectively; also the number of Indians occupying such reservation; also on what portion of such reservation the Indians now thereon are located; also whether, in the opinion of the Secretary, it is advisable to throw any portion of such reservation open to occupation and settlement under the mineral laws of the United States, and, if so, precisely what portion; and also whether it is advisable to release any of the navigable waters aforesaid from the limits of such reservation.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know that there is any objection to the adoption of the resolution, but all the information called for in reference to the character of that reservation is in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, already printed and on file; and so far as the Secretary of the Interior is directed by the resolution to inquire whether it is proper or feasible to reduce the reservation, I will say that recent legislation has authorized the Secretary to do that very thing whenever in his opinion it is beneficial to the Indians. All that is a matter of enactment now, so that without coming to Congress for that purpose the Secretary of the Interior can initiate any negotiation suggested by the resolution. However, I do not object to its passage. I only make this statement so that the Senator from Oregon may address his arguments and considerations to the Secretary himself without coming to Congress for aid.

Mr. MITCHELL. I simply want the information in a condensed form, and I want the advice of the Secretary of the Interior on the subject directly.

Mr. McPHERSON. I think the resolution is a very important one, and should be printed and lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over and be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I give notice that I shall call it up to-morrow morning.

THE PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, that order is closed.

Mr. FRYE. I move to take from the table the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to refer the annual message of the President of the United States to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the motion of the Senator from Ohio, that the President's annual message be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the motion to refer.

Mr. FRYE said:

Mr. PRESIDENT: The President of the United States, in his annual message, has thrown down the gauntlet of "free trade," with, I admit, a thin veneer of disguise—too thin, however, to deceive the people. His remarkable declaration of policy has, of course, been received in England with undisguised joy. She has been seeking our markets with a persistency that never tired, a courage that never failed, a faith never hopeless, though for a quarter of a century the defenses against her aggressions have been formidable, and now she hails with unconcealed delight the announcement that these defenses are to be razed. Listen to the comments of her press congratulating her people, and at the same time mercilessly stripping off the President's flimsy disguises:

[From the Saturday Review.]

It may be taken for granted that the President has not acted without previously consulting the leaders of the Democratic party and securing their approval. He and they have taken up again the old free-trade policy of the South Carolina politicians, unconnected with what, in the jargon of American politics, was called the sectional question.

[From The Sepectator.]

His terse and telling message has struck a blow at American protection such as could never have been struck by any fair-trade league, such, indeed, as would have been greatly weakened by the operations of any fair-trade league. * * * He has fired a shot at the protectionists which will be all the more effective for his refusal to discuss the theoretic issue. * * *

[From the People's Journal, Dundee.]

A great sensation has been created by President Cleveland's Message, and if the policy which it indicates be carried out, it will produce almost as much effect in this country as in America. The tariff reform which the President recommends goes as far, at least, as the abolition or reduction of the duties on raw materials. Should Congress give effect to this proposal, its immediate result would be an enormous stimulus to English industry.

[From the Scotsman.]

The President proposes a radical reduction in the duties on raw materials, or even their free importation, as a way of compensating manufacturers for the sacrifice which they are asked to make. The free importation of iron, coal, and wool would be a great boon to British producers; if it were accompanied with reductions in the tariff upon cotton, woolen, and other manufactures the artisans of this country would derive a marked benefit from it. If once the United States finds herself on the road to free trade she will hardly know where to stop, for the principle which President Cleveland, as the head of the Democratic party, lays down is really that no import duties are justifiable which are not levied solely for purposes of revenue.

[From the Glasgow Herald.]

"It is a condition which confronts us; not a theory." Precisely so. Words almost identical with these have been used, and with enormous effect, in this country by Adam Smith, by Richard Cobden, by Sir Robert Peel. President Cleveland may say to others, therefore, and think what he chooses, but he has precipitated the inevitable struggle between free trade and protection in the United States, and that is tantamount to saying that he is on the side of free trade.

[From the Haddingtonshire (Scotland) Courier.]

This much is certain, that another fierce contest is impending in America over the principle at issue. If it terminates, as it may be hoped it will do, in the direction of a relaxation of those imposts that now so vexatiously hamper commercial intercourse between Great Britain and the United States, we may look to an impetus being given to our home trade that will go far to make up for the depression of late years.

[The London Iron and Steel Trades Journal.]

The facts set forth in the President's message, though by no means new, are now brought so prominently under the notice of the American Congress and of American citizens that a violent stimulus must be given to the party which advocates entire freedom of trade.

[The London Iron.]

The message of President Cleveland to the United States Congress is the preliminary to a movement which, we trust, will gain in strength.

[The London Ironmonger.]

Dealing with the message as it stands, it would certainly seem to indicate a greater leaning towards free-trade principles on the part of the United States Cabinet than has been observable hitherto."

"Mr. Cleveland's policy," said the Times, "may not establish free trade in the strict sense of the term, but it will to a great extent make trade free."

"The President," said the Daily News, "does not seem to perceive the effect of his own arguments, or even the meaning of his own words. His statement that the question of free trade is irrelevant is astounding and preposterous. Mr. Cleveland has persuaded himself to think, or finds it convenient to say, that the principle of fostering native industries by duties on foreign imports can be made compatible with the principle of regulating the burdens upon the people by the needs of the public service. It is pure delusion. Protection, albeit indefensible, is the height of wisdom compared with proposals which combine all the evils of interference with all the risks of liberty."

"His real meaning is that the scheme by which the artificial fabric of domestic enterprise has been built up in America is fundamentally vicious. He demands in effect that there should be a tariff for revenue purposes only."

[From "A member of Parliament" by cable to the free-trade New York Herald.]

To convert the United States is indeed a triumph. The Cobden Club will henceforth shet up a special shrine for the worship of President Cleveland, and send him all its publications gratis. Cobden founded free trade; Cleveland saved it. Such is the burden of the song all through England to-day.

[By special cable dispatch to the free-trade New York World.]

LONDON, December 10.

The English papers continue to devote much space to what they call "Mr. Cleveland's delaration in favor of free trade." From the average English comment the public here has been led to believe that free trade is now as good as adopted in the United States. It is considered here (in England) that free trade with us (in America) is just what is needed to revive drooping English industries. The Times, this morning, devotes a column to the American situation, denoucing Mr. Blaine for holding on to what it calls "the absurd principle of protection."

[From the London Post.]

We must regard the message of the President of the United States as being a distinct pronouncement in favor of free trade.

We shall be much mistaken if the effect of this State communication will not be to strengthen considerably the case of free traders in all parts of the world. It will be regarded as a step in the right direction by all who believe in the soundness of free-trade principles.

[From the London Times.]

It is calculated that to give effect to Mr. Cleveland's policy, duties to the amount of some £16,000,000 a year, about two-fifths of the entire customs revenue, must be surrendered. This operation may not establish "free trade" in the strict sense of the term, but it will to a great extent make trade free.

As was to be expected, the protectionists have taken the alarm, and, as our correspondent at Philadelphia informs us, they are organizing for a determined resistance. They are, no doubt, right in believing that, whatever may be said of preserving the essence of the protective system and of ignoring free trade, the tariff can not be reduced to the strict proportions of a revenue corresponding to the limited and diminishing necessities of the Federal Government without admitting a great flood of foreign competition.

[From the London Standard.]

"In readjusting the tariff," he adroitly explains, "the interests of American labor and our manufactures should be carefully considered. Relief from the hardships of the present tariff," he goes on to say, "should be devised with especial precaution against imperiling the existence of the manufacturing interests, but"—there is much virtue in the "but"—"such existence should not mean excessive profits."

Mr. Cleveland has used such praiseworthy candor in his positive treatment of the evils of the existing faulty system, that this soothing parenthesis, which the whole context proves to be a polite nothingness, may well be pardoned. When the inevitable consequences of adherence to a protectionist tariff are set forth by a man in Mr. Cleveland's position in the language which he has used, free trade becomes at once a living issue. There is an end of the truce, of the makeshifts, of the hollow compromises between the rival factions to keep the delicate subject in the background of the platforms. If the Congress does not forthwith expunge the scandals of the customs lists the next Presidential campaign will be fought out, not on the obsolete cries of Republican and Democratic strife, but on the new question whether the people are—simply because it suits the convenience of certain manufacturing rings that foreign competition should be rigorously excluded—to be mulcted year after year of enormous sums which the Treasury does not need, and which it can not employ.

These exposures of the President's purpose, these expressions of redundant joy, these prophecies of the realization of long-deferred hopes, would have multiplied without limitation, if warning had not come that English opinions must be restrained in their utterance, or the full fruition of English hopes might be endangered. They heard the warning cry of the London Pall Mall Gazette:

English free-traders would be well advised if they moderated the ecstacy of their jubilation over President Cleveland's message. Every word which they say in its favor will be used as a powerful argument against the adoption of its recommendations.

They promptly gave heed, and these English free-traders assumed a new role, became congratulatory of America, complimentary of our statesmen, prophets "of a marvelous prosperity to visit our borders," seers with bright visions of our disenthralled Republic, "successfully competing with their own country in the markets of the world." Is it possible that England has seen the shining of a light from heaven, and suddenly been converted into a great philanthropist? Has she come to recognize our country as "her daughter beyond the seas," entitled to her affectionate regard? Did she ever in all the history of her marvelous success permit the rights of any other nation to impede her progress in commerce or manufacturing? I admit freely her sagacity, her clear-sightedness, her promptness in action, her success in diplomacy, her power, but I deny emphatically that she ever before indicated any sympathy in our prosperity, and I assert with equal emphasis that she has never permitted an opportunity to injure us to pass unimproved.

I receive her congratulations now for all that they are worth in the light of her past conduct. But ought not these fresh and unwarned declarations of her press at least to put us on our guard? Ireland once supported in reasonable comfort 8,000,000 of people. Her manufacture of linen, silk, wool, and cotton, protected by tariffs, and encouraged by subsidies, absorbed her capital, employed her laborers, promoted a diversity of industries, and insured prosperity. England, was her next friend, advised, cajoled, and flattered her in to the belief that she could raise raw materials on her fertile soil, sell them to her, buy of her the manufactured products more cheaply than she could make them, and that free trade would be a national blessing. Beguiled by her, Ireland consented, her tariff was gradually repealed, horizontally destroyed, her subsidies withdrawn. Since then she has been raising raw material, selling it to England, buying her manufactured goods of her at prices determined by England alone, and to-day, with only 5,000,000 of people, is the poorest, most distracted and harassed country on earth. She drank the free-trade cup which England pressed to her lips to the very dregs. Thomas Francis Meagher, the Irish patriot, in a speech made at Dublin in 1847, thus summarized the results to his afflicted country of England's friendship and advice:

The cotton manufacture of Dublin, which employed 14,000 operatives, has been destroyed; the 3,000 silk looms of the Liberty have been destroyed; the stuff and serge manufactures, which employed 1,491 operatives, have been destroyed; the calico looms of Balbriggan have been destroyed; the flannel manufacture of Rotterdrum has been destroyed, the blanket manufacture of Kilkenny has been destroyed; the camlet trade of Bandon, which produced £100,000 a year, has been destroyed; the worsted and stuff manufactures of Waterford have been destroyed; the rateen and frieze manufactures of Carrick-on-Suir have been destroyed; one business alone survives, thrives, and flourishes, and dreads no bankruptcy. * * * That favored and privileged and patronized business is the Irish coffin-makers.

And yet, England hopes and the Democratic party expects that every Irish-American citizen of this Republic shall, in the coming Presidential election, vote for Mr. Cleveland and free trade!

Portugal, Egypt, India, China, and, indeed, our own country, in its early life, can bear abundant testimony to the blighting influences of England's peculiar policy. But all her victories in the past would pale into comparative insignificance in the presence of that she is now so confidently contemplating in the promise of Mr. Cleveland's message. One of the greatest of her free-trade writers and speakers declared, years ago, that her proudest achievement would be the subjugation of the American market, and that she thinks she beholds close at hand, accomplished, too, at a time for her the most fortunate possible.

She finds herself with her markets open to the world, whilst nearly all the nations of the earth have, partially at least, closed theirs to her. She sees her industries suffering from a competition under which some of them can not long survive; her silk manufactures almost destroyed; where once in London alone there were 90,000 operatives, now only 8,000; Germany and Belgium capturing one-half of her colonial trade in iron and steel manufactures, competing successfully in her own home market to her loss of over $800,000,000 in four years; James Adamson, president of the British Iron and Steel Association, in his inaugural address, delivered only a short time since, declaring that this industry would be driven to the wall without protection or a reduction of wages; her cotton industry crippled; the manufacturers of Manchester, in convention only a few months ago, declaring that lower wages or protection against Germany and Belgium must be had; millions of men and women seeking for work and finding none; thousands and tens of thousands of hungry men marching through the streets of London, even into that holy of holies, Westminster Abbey, with banners inscribed "bread or work;" nearly one-fifth of the population of London indoor paupers or requiring outdoor relief; her agricultural lands mortgaged for 58 per cent. of their worth, shrinking in value the last ten years more than one-half, and her farm laborers decreasing more than one-third, while those remaining work for from 1 shilling 6 pence to 2 shillings a day. In her distressed condition she hears the voice of President Cleveland proclaiming that "our present tariff laws," the very laws that partially close against her the best market in the world, are "the vicious, inequitable, and illogical source of unnecessary taxation," and who can wonder that her people should deafen our ears with their "hears! hears?"

She sees him adopt, as the slogan of the political battle of 1888, that fundamental doctrine of the free-trader of the past ages, exploded ten thousand times by cold facts, "the tariff raises the price to consumers of all articles imported and subject to duty, by precisely the sum paid for such duties," and why should they not indorse him as the great champion of their interests. She listens to his invitations to participate in the best market in the world, and knowing that such a participation would start her halting machinery, employ her millions of hungry, idle, laborers, why shouldn't they hail him as their great deliverer?

But, Mr. President, I come to a question more important to us here than England's attitude. Will the Democratic party indorse and sustain their chief? They have for a score or so of years been masquerading as reformers, in the garb of "tariff for revenue only with incidental protection," "of tariff for revenue exclusively," even in manufacturing sections as mild-mannered protectionists. In the South, where, until recently, there has been but little diversity in industries, they have been bolder in their utterances, but for the last few years, even there, blinded it may be by the smoke of iron furnaces, or bewildered by the noise of the loom and shuttle, now and then some bold man dares proclaim himself a friend of protection! But the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] a few days since, said, on the floor of the Senate, that he indorsed every line, word, and letter of the message, while the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] in his elaborate speech, in cold blood, laboring under no excitement, declared "it is true to the teachings and principles of the Democratic party, from its foundation, eighty-seven years ago, to the present day."

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] in a speech made elsewhere, announced that his vote would never be given to the protection of any industry whatever. Indeed, I am inclined to the opinion that the party really believes "our tariff legislation to be vicious and illogical," that a duty is a tax paid by the consumer. And why should it not? The controling element of the Democratic party is in the South, and can to-day determine its principles as readily as it could before the rebellion, when it forced it into the championship of slavery. As to their position there can be little, if any, doubt. When they adopted a Constitution for the Confederacy, a portion of one article, agreed upon with entire unanimity, as I am informed, was in these words:

> But no bounties shall be granted from the Treasury, nor shall any duties or taxes on importations from foreign nations be laid to promote or foster any branch of industry.

The Democratic Representatives of this part of our country learn and forget very slowly; and, in my opinion, the most of them still hold to that Confederate doctrine, and are totally blind to the marvelous changes wrought in their midst. For fifty years they have been inspiring the Democratic party to fidelity to the shibboleth of free trade, and whatever disguises the party may have adopted, however frequently it may have masqueraded before the public, however elastic it may have made its platforms, whenever it has been called upon to act it has fully justified the President's message as sound Democratic doctrine. In the Forty-fourth Congress they controlled the House, and have from then to now, except during the Forty-seventh, and for that entire time they have kept the whole country disturbed by their frantic efforts to revise the tariff, which has but one meaning in a Democratic dictionary—to reduce duties. Fernando Wood, William R. Morrison, and Randolph Tucker have been chairmen of the Committee on Ways and Means, all three of them open, undisguised free-traders. Mr. MILLS, of Texas, now presides over the deliberations of that committee—almost cranky in his advocacy of the same doctrine.

The Speaker of the House, Mr. CARLISLE, in his devotion to the work of destroying our present tariff, arrogated to himself almost despotic power in his refusal during the last Congress to recognize any member of the House to offer for immediate consideration any proposition to reduce the surplus unless it should first have been submitted to a Democratic caucus. At the opening of every Congress since and while they have had a majority in the House their war cry has been "Revise the tariff!" and every bill reported from their committee as a revision, if enacted into law, would have sacrificed many of our industries to the greed of Great Britain. They have even gone to the absurd extent of reporting favorably a horizontal reduction along the whole line of duties. The Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, too, helps to swell the choral song of free trade. In his annual report he says:

> And now there is left only the revenue from customs taxation to be considered. Here is where the reduction should be made. * * * Add to the free-list as many articles as possible. Reduce duties upon every dutiable article to the lowest point possible.

In other words, strike down our "vicious" tariff. But the honorable Secretary does not rest here. He sees another direction in which we can legislate in the interests of Great Britain, and promptly seizes upon it. He says, in the same report:

> A citizen of the United States may buy a foreign-built vessel in a foreign port; he may put the United States flag upon it and trade with all the countries of the world except his own. Our Government will protect him with all its power in such trade; but if he brings his ship with our flag upon it to one of our ports, our Government will confiscate it or impose prohibitory duties. He may, however, put the flag of any other country on that same ship and bring it to his home without molestation by our Government; it is then protected by the power of a foreign country. It is difficult to understand why it would not be well to so change our navigation laws as to allow foreign-built ships owned by our citizens to come and go between this and other countries while bearing the flag of the country of their owners.

What the Secretary means in the first ten lines of this quotation is beyond my comprehension. I have always believed that the only way to determine the nationality of a vessel was by an examination of her papers, and it is an entirely novel doctrine that a flag settles the question. There is hardly a foreign steamship entering an American port that does not hoist the American flag. Nor was I aware before that a vessel could trade at any port of any commercial country without carrying such papers, regardless of the flag she was flying. The last four lines are unmistakable. The Secretary advises the prompt repeal of our laws which provide that no foreign-built vessel shall be admitted to an American register, also, of course, of all restrictions now protecting our coastwise trade. In other words, the Secretary accedes to the demands of Great Britain that she, with her cheap coal, iron, steel, and labor, shall build all of our ships. To be sure they are 90 per cent. labor; what of that? This Administration, from President down, prefers to employ, feed, and clothe English workmen to American. To be sure, such a surrender would destroy our coastwise fleet and trade; but what of that, the English and Canadians would serve our people more cheaply.

To be sure our ship-yards would disappear, our skilled ship-carpenters and mechanics forget their cunning, our sailors become unknown; but what of that, England could supply our necessities. To be sure a maritime nation without ships, ship-yards, and sailors might as well be without a constitution, would properly fall into contempt in the presence of the world; but what of that, our mother England has maritime power enough for the whole family, and will surely take care of her own.

Mr. President, it seems to me we may safely assume that the Democratic party, while it may not have the courage or the honesty of the President, does enjoy the same convictions as to the vicious, illogical, and inequitable character of our tariff laws; that, if by cheating the people as to their real sentiments, they can secure another lease of power, obtain control of the Senate, then we may bid farewell to any policy of protection illustrated in legislation.

Mr. President, the Republicans rejoice in the courage of the President, and take up his free-trade gauntlet.

They join the issue tendered and emphatically declare that our tariff laws, instead of being "vicious, inequitable, and illogical," are and have been promotive of a marvelous prosperity. That instead of "the duty increasing the tax to the purchaser" the effect of it has almost invariably been a reduction of cost to the consumer. Why, Mr. President, we live in a country wonderfully endowed, splendidly equipped for a successful struggle with any other. Our fertile lands can feed a billion of people as readily as they now sustain sixty millions. We have a seacoast almost limitless, within our borders one-half of all the fresh water in the world, located in lakes and rivers, as if our necessities and convenience had alone been consulted; as many miles of railroad as the rest of the world, and as a legitimate consequence, the lowest rates of freight to be found anywhere. We have inexhaustible mines of iron and coal in twenty-four of our States and Territories; even mountains of iron like Pilot Knob and Iron Mountain, said to contain 500,000,000 of tons of good quality, accessible. We have copper, lead, tin, gold, silver, granite, slate, lime-rock, marble, mountains of salt and sulphur. Our capacity for wool-growing and for cotton-raising has never yet been tested. Texas alone can easily produce all the cotton we manufacture at home and export. We are possessed to-day of the finest machinery and the best tools, with a skill in their manufacture able to respond to all demands that may be made upon it. We have more inventive genius than any two of the nations of Europe. Our business men are energetic, bold, and sagacious, our laborers the best in the world, active, hopeful, and ambitious. With all these advantages we can not compete successfully with the countries of Europe. Why not? There is, there can be but one answer, we are handicapped by the cheap labor there.

Why, is labor a factor in production sufficient to overcome all of our advantages? Undoubtedly it is. Labor, on the average, makes one-half the cost of all production. I do not mean to assert that the cost of a yard of cheap cotton cloth is one-half labor, but iron ships, machinery, furnaces, forges, and factories are 90 per cent. labor. A year or two since I was in the Waltham Watch Factory. The superintendent showed me some watch screws so fine that the naked eye could not see the thread. I asked him to figure out their cost by the ton. He complied, and found it to be a little over $4,600,000, seven times more precious than gold, and yet laying in the earth the ore was not worth more than one dollar and a half. Whether the labor converting the ore into the screw was one or two dollars a day would make a marvelous difference in its cost. But the free-trader insists that after all there is not much difference between the cost of labor here and in Europe; that the living is not so expensive there as here. Now, this is a question which must be settled according to the facts. It is fundamental, vital; and a mistake in its determination may be fatal to our industries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the unfinished business will be informally laid aside and the Senator from Maine allowed to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no objection be made, that will be the order.

Mr. BLAIR. I make no objection this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine will proceed.

Mr. FRYE. During the year, the opportunity offering, I investigated as thoroughly as I could the condition of labor in Europe. My information was gathered largely from European investigators and from the men and women who worked. I found that to obtain it from the employers was difficult, and when obtained it was unreliable, wages being generally exaggerated. They were fond of dealing in averages. They arrived at these by disregarding numbers. For instance, in a cotton mill nearly all of the employés are women, a few skilled men being required to look after the machinery, to whom fair wages are paid. The superintendent in answer to your inquiry would reply, "We pay from $2 a week to $8, the average being $4 or $5." He never volunteered the information that while one hundred of his employés earned $2 a week, only two were paid $8. Our consuls are entitled to great credit for their unceasing efforts to arrive at the facts, but their sources of information have generally necessarily been the employers, and some of it I know has been incorrect. I visited personally factories, furnaces, forges, shipyards, iron and coal mines, and talked whenever I could with the workmen, and in my conclusions as to facts do not think I can be mistaken.

ITALY.

Italy is not, I admit, a serious competitor of ours to-day, but, if I mistake not her spirit, means soon to be. She is not a power to be ignored in the great struggle of the nations for commercial and manufacturing supremacy. She has nearly 30,000,000 of people, an army of 500,000 men, a navy greatly superior to ours, powerful coast defense, supports and encourages her merchant marine by bounties and subsidies. King Humbert is one of the most sagacious rulers in all Europe, and understanding thoroughly that to make his country prosperous and powerful the people must be employed, he is doing his utmost to encourage manufacturing enterprises, with a success, too, which is little known outside his own borders. During ten years the increase shipment of cotton from India to Italy has been 175 per cent., while that to England for the same period shows a decided decrease. What are the wages? In a government lace factory, employing hundreds of women and girls, making the finest thread laces in the world, the earnings were from 8 to 12 cents a day. One woman, who had worked there for forty years, the most skilled in the factory, succeeded in earning 12 cents a day, as I saw by the pay-roll of the mill. The superintendent of a cotton mill near Naples, employing mostly women, told me that they were excellent workmen, willing, contented, and cheerful; that their wages averaged 20 cents a day, while the men worked for 40. In a marble yard I found the earnings to be from 40 to 60 cents a day. Forty cents a day was regarded as good pay for an able-bodied man. In the silk mills 20 cents for women and from 40 to 50 for men would secure all the laborers wanted. The farming was done almost entirely by women at from 16 to 20 cents a day. I never saw there any improved farm implements. Should they be furnished, four out of five of these women could be relieved from out door work and go into the mills. Indeed; there seems to be no end to the men and women willing to work for the lowest wages and yet with nothing to do. It is difficult to conceive of a progress in manufacturing which shall create in twenty years a demand for labor sufficient to increase to any great extent the wages.

BELGIUM.

Belgium is a competitor, and to England a most alarming one. It is a perfect bee-hive. The women make the land blossom like a rose at daily wages from 20 to 25 cents. In the lace factories at Brussels the skilled women, who in Italy were earning 12 cents a day, could command 20. In the cotton mills 25 cents a day was regarded as satisfactory wages for women, from 40 to 50 for men. In the iron and steel works $4 a week would furnish an ample supply of common laborers, while skilled labor seldom averaged more than $5 or $6. Miners of iron and coal received from $3.75 to $4 a week.

Mr. GRAY. I hope the Senator will be able to tell us how it is that the protective policy there and the system of bounties and subsidies, for the obtaining of which he says King Humbert was the sagacious promoter, has not operated to raise this scale of wages.

Mr. FRYE. I did not suppose the Senator would ever ask that question. I have heard others ask it a great many times, and I have heard England pointed out over and over again as a free-trade country that has higher wages than countries with a tariff like Germany or Italy. It ought to be as plain as A B C to any man. How did the English scale of wages ever get above the scale of wages in France, Germany, and Italy? It got above their scale of wages when they were all free-trade countries and when England was a protective-tariff country with the very highest kind of a protective tariff, and under that protective policy of Great Britain her scale of wages was raised while the scale of wages in these free-trade countries was kept down.

How can a protective tariff increase wages? There is only one way on the face of the earth that a protective tariff increases wages, and that is by making a demand for labor, by building mills and opening mines and erecting furnaces and forges, and thereby creating a demand for labor, and the moment labor gets ahead of the supply then your wages begin to go up. That is what the protective tariff does for wages; and to-day in Germany, in the iron and steel manufactories, they are increasing their wages, and not in the others. Why not? Because even under their protective tariff, adopted only in 1879 or 1880, the demand has not yet got to be beyond the supply.

Mr. GRAY. That is your answer?

Mr. FRYE. That is my answer. Now take Germany.

GERMANY.

My conclusion was that the wages in Germany were hardly as high as in Belgium. Agricultural laborers seemed to be plenty at 20 cents a day, while women wood-sawyers in the streets of Munich were content with the same. I was told by a German statistician, an investigator of the labor problem, that the cotton-mills, employing mostly women, could hire them for anything they pleased to pay, and that some corporations without soul were taking advantage of this condition and paying wages "atrocious in their meagerness." To test the influence of their tariff on wages, a call was made upon 233 establishments, engineering, iron and steel, where, presumably, the highest wages are paid, for returns for the years 1879 and 1886. The responses show that the average wages paid before were about 15 shillings a week, and 16 shillings 6 pence in 1886, while the increase of workmen in these industries was 30,000. The supply of labor still exceeded the demand, and the rise had been small. I see that one of our consuls reports the average wages of women employed in the German factories to be $2.38 a week. I am clearly of opinion that he is deceived, that he procured these figures from the employers and not from the employed. I am entirely confident that one can employ all the women he requires at 25 cents a day to do any kind of work.

At Stuttgart, an important manufacturing point, there is an immense corset factory and the wages actually paid were not one-third of those in a like concern in the United States. The entire product was shipped to this country and invoiced at one-half of its market price. Hon. Charles P. Kimball, formerly Democratic candidate for governor of Maine, received the appointment from Mr. Cleveland to the consulship at this city. Three months after his arrival he wrote me: "I came here a free-trader; I am now a high protectionist. With present wages in America the attempt to compete with these Germans is absurd. Why the wages are a mere bagatelle. Our party should be looking to an increase rather than to a decrease in duties." I am quoting this letter from memory, but the substance is correctly given. Mr. Kimball paid a first-class coachman 2 marks (48 cents) a day and he boarded himself. From careful inquiries addressed to our consuls, to gentlemen investigating the labor problem, to employers and employed, I am entirely satisfied that the average annual earnings of able-bodied men in Germany will not exceed $115, and of women $85, while the agricultural laborers and the women employed in out-of-door work earn still less.

ENGLAND.

But England is the free-trader's paradise, and her scale of wages higher than in any continental country, is cited as proof positive that a tariff is no protector of wage-workers, forgetting that this scale was largely influenced by the highest kind of protection, regorously enforced by England until she believed that her wealth, her machinery, and her skilled workmen could control the markets of the world. Neither her manufacturers nor her laborers to-day participate in this admiration of her fiscal policy. Wages all over Great Britain are low and decreasing. Eighty thousand women are working in her cotton-mills at Manchester for from 30 to 35 cents a day, while the manufacturers are insisting upon a decrease, to enable them to compete with Germany and Belgium. Two shillings, and in favored localities, two and six-pence a day are the highest wages paid to common men laborers, while hundreds of thousands can not get work at that. I saw, on the magnificent docks at Liverpool, thousands of men, hungry-looking men, daily asking for work, work at any price, work if only an hour, so that they might buy bread for their children. The streets of the great cities are full of idle men, not willingly so, but from necessity, and great armies of police are required to preserve the peace. She is to-day supporting in her poor houses more than a million of people, and how many more receive ontdoor relief no man can tell. Her silk industry is almost destroyed, her cotton is suffering, her iron and steel being supplanted by that of Germany and Belgium, her ship-building not employing one-half of the usual compiement of men.

I heard Mr. Bradlaugh declare in a speech in Parliament that agriculture was ruined; that half of the farm laborers could get no work; that those employed received the pittance of a shilling or a shilling and sixpence a day. If I should describe the condition of English laborers in his words I should be charged with gross exaggeration. This being England's condition to-day, what utter nonsense to talk about high wages there. I say that men and women there will to-day work for what they can get, and that the wages actually paid are not more than one-half of those paid in our Northern States.

SCOTLAND.

Scotland is in no better condition. In Glasgow, where Mr. Bright said forty-one thousand families out of every one hundred thousand lived each in one room, the army of the unemployed is perfectly immense, the evidences of pinching poverty horrible. The great works on and near that marvelous river, the Clyde, are painfully slack in business, ship-building greatly depressed, the most of the iron used, until recently mined and worked at home, is now imported from Spain, and wages are adjusted by the employers. While I was there all the ship-yards, furnaces, forges, and factories in and for 10 miles around the city shut down for an entire week on account of a two-days fair.

The Langloan iron works, located here, do an immense business, cover 35 acres of land, run seven furnaces, produce 300 tons of iron daily, consume in its production 500 tons of coal. The average haul of the coal is only 2 miles, and the cost delivered 5s. The average wages illustrate the highest paid labor. Skilled workmen are paid from 3s. to 7s. a day, the large majority not over 4s; their coal-miners from $5.59 a week to $5.88, iron-miners from $5.34 to $5.59 per hand, foremen from $6.25 to $6.32 a week, common laborers from 54 cents to 62 a day. I had a curiosity to visit Paisley, knowing that the enormous thread mills had their duplicates in our own country, at Newark and Pawtucket, run by the same owners. The hands employed there and here are nearly all women. The business is such as to require careful selection. The operatives were neat in appearance, active, attentive to their work, and satisfactory to their employers. Their earnings at the Paisley mills averaged about $2.80 a week. A month or two since I was at Pawtucket; found the average weekly wages of the same class of workers, on precisely the same work and for the same owners, to be nearly $8 a week. Mr. Coates, of the firm, told me that the help in Paisley were as active, efficient, and attended to as many machines or spindles as at Pawtucket. It is impossible to find a more reliable and faithful illustration of the difference in wages in Great Britain and America than this.

IRELAND.

It is hard for me to understand how any moderately decent rate of wages can prevail in this afflicted country. More than half of the people, men and women, seemed to be entirely out of work. As you ride through the country hundreds will follow your carriage, some of them for miles, begging for a penny. Agriculture seems practically dead. Out of the 250,000 tenants of small holdings, 5 acres and less, many, if not the most, formerly worked on the farms in England and Scotland during each summer, earning and saving enough to pay their rents, while their wives and children cared for the home lot. But now the farmers of England and Scotland cannot employ more than two-thirds of their own, so that resource is cut off. In some counties almost half of the inhabitants are now receiving help. Pauperism is fearfully increasing. They raise an abundance of wool, are willing to work for the lowest wages, and nearly all their mills are idle. What little cotton manufacturing they had seems to have disappeared, and even the linen industry has greatly declined. I hardly see how any rate of wages could be fixed.

They might depend upon the greed of the manufacturer and the hunger of the worker. The very best of house servants could be obtained for $1 a week. Flax breakers asked about $4 a week, hacklers about the same, spinners and weavers $2 to $2.50. The women at work on the farms, I was told by good authority, were glad of 20 cents a day. Of the countries I visited, the wages in Switzerland and Italy were the lowest, Germany next, then Belgium, then France, while those in England were highest. Now, Mr. President, as to the cost of living. A conversation I had with an American consul will illustrate this. The consul had just concluded a report to the State Department with, "the cost of living for the laborer here is not half so great as in the United States." I called his attention to the statement, and asked him if beef was any cheaper there? No, was the reply. Pork? no; mutton? no; flour? no; butter? no; cheese? no; bacon? no. I asked him to name some necessary of life that was cheaper. He named clothing. I asked him if cotton underwear, such as they used, was cheaper than in America. He admitted it was not. I had already experimented in that, and discovered, by paying for it, that it was considerably higher. He, however, stood by woolen clothing. This I carefully investigated, and concluded the investigation in Boston on the day of my return. I have no hesitation in saying that our machine ready-made clothing, better made, more neatly fitted, can be purchased by the laborer here as cheaply as it can be in Great Britain. The consul finally said that I misunderstood the force of his report; that what he meant to be understood was that the laborer there did not expend for his living more than one-half as much as he did in the United States. This I readily admit, and am rejoiced that our workingmen can expend twice as much. If, however, free-trade policy prevails, they will have an opportunity to compete in economy with the laborers abroad.

On the Continent almost everything consumed by workingmen is fearfully taxed. It is estimated that in Italy 30 per cent. of the wages are required for taxes. In Russia, church and state take about one-half. In Germany, a Swiss porter without family, without a dollar of property, paid as his tax $17 a year. I saw his receipt. But after all, the cost of living to the workman has no bearing at all on the question of our ability to compete. It is only significant as to the question, how shall he live when free trade has done its perfect work and his wages have been reduced to the European standard.

Now, Mr. President, this difference in the cost of labor has been becoming more vital every day. In my opinion 10 per cent. protection from 1830 to 1840 had as much efficiency as 40 per cent. now. Why? Fifty years ago the countries of the earth were widely apart, communication between them slow, uncertain, and dangerous, freights enormously high, the profits insisted upon by merchants and manufacturers excessive. Mr. Bright, in a speech in Parliament about that time, arguing that America as an independent country was a more valuable customer of England than she possibly could have been as her colony, said, "on all the goods exported to America during the last quarter of a century you have made a net profit of 40 per cent." These conditions and these circumstances alone afforded us great protection against their products and effectually weakened the force of their competition. But now all these nations are touching elbows, the distances between are of little or no account; in time New York and Liverpool are no further apart than New York and San Francisco; in cost of freight not half so far; communication is regular, certain, constant.

The great interior cities have been brought close to the seaports by railroads. In but a few days' time the bulk of any and all of the products of any one of the nations can be dumped onto the wharves of another. Excessive profits have disappeared. Whether or not there shall be any profit to the manufacturer at all depends upon his skill in organization, his economy in manufacturing, his immediate appropriation of every improvement in machinery—the largest possible production from any given amount of power. England, fifty years ago, with her advantage in machinery and skilled labor, had no fear of the competition of any country, however much cheaper its labor might be, while to-day she admits that Germany, and Belgium, and France are sorely pressing her. Now, Mr. President, confronted with the living facts of to-day, laying aside all fanciful theories, generally founded on error, can this Republic, with all her admitted advantages, compete with Great Britain and the nations of the Continent, even in her own markets, with labor here from one to two hundred per cent. higher than there? It can in only two ways:

First. By enacting into law the policy of protection; that is, nearly equalizing labor by a duty.

Second. By reducing the wages paid our laborers nearly to the level of European wages.

The first method, fortunately, is now no experiment. It has been on trial for a quarter of a century and its fruits are known. During that time, though for four years, millions of men were converted from producers to destroyers, though lives were sacrificed by the hundreds of thousands, though treasure was expended and property destroyed by the billions, yet we increased in population a million a year—more than England, France, Germany, and Austria combined in the same time. We increased in wealth from $17,000,000,000 to $43,000,000,000—a billion a year. Mulhall, the English statistician, no enthusiast in our favor, says that this Republic for a quarter of a century has laid up every year $885,000,000—almost half as much as the saving of the whole world. Gladstone says: "England's daughter beyond the seas is passing by the mother at a canter," and she passed by her long ago—almost distanced her in the race. Mulhall gives the value of the annual product of Great Britain manufactories, mines and forestry, $4,500,000,000, an increase since 1850 of 30 per cent. The same product in the United States, as appears by the census of 1880, was valued at $5,500,000,000, an increase since 1860 of 160 per cent.

Since 1860 our farms have doubled in number, increased in value from $6,000,000,000 to over $10,000,000,000, while their product has increased from $1,800,000,000 in 1860 to $3,600,000,000 in 1880.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We want to change the balance on to the English side.

Mr. FRYE. That is what I have been charging.

Mulhall gives the entire product of Great Britain, farms and all, in 1880, as worth $6,200,000,000, $172 to an inhabitant; her exportations same year $1,300,000,000, leaving consumed at home $136 worth to an inhabitant. The entire product of the United States for the same year was valued at $10,000,000,000, $200 to an inhabitant, and, more significant of prosperity than any other statement, $9,176,000,000 of it were consumed at home. Our home market consumed more than Great Britain's home consumption and exportation combined. Our home market disposed of double in value the combined exports of Great Britain, France, Germany, Russia, Holland and Austria.

Great Britain has 20,000 miles of railroad, while we have 130,000, reaching 2,300 counties of our 44 States and Territories. We have grown weak in but one direction, our foreign carrying trade, which, during this period, has been absolutely without protection; but our coastwise fleet has grown to magnificent proportions, three times as large as Great Britain's, five times greater than that of any other country. This has been protected by our navigation laws, and yet the honorable Secretary of the Treasury can see no reason why they should not be repealed. These results, Mr. President, are terrible blows to theoretical free trade, and yet, sir, we have not accomplished all that we ought the past year. The completed returns show that we imported last year, notwithstanding the "vicious" tariff:

|---|---|
| Iron and steel and their manufactures | $54,618,986 |
| Wool and its manufactures | 60,586,614 |
| Flax, hemp and jute manufactures | 33,807,283 |
| Silk manufactures | 31,264,277 |
| Cotton manufactures | 29,500,000 |
| Total | 209,777,160 |

The same returns show that the increased importations of these manufactures over that of 1886 amounted to nearly $25,000,000; that the increase came when the duties had been slightly reduced. Now nearly all of these manufactures might just as well have been produced at home, two or three hundred thousand more of our people employed, a million more supported, a larger market insured. The most of these goods were those in the manufacturing of which labor was the most important element, its cheapness abroad enabling the foreign manufacturer to pay the duty and sell the goods in our market to the exclusion of ours. The duties on these products ought, in my opinion, to be increased; but is there a Democrat of all those frantic for the revision of the tariff who admits, even in his dreams, that any duty should be raised?

The second method by which competition is possible to us, the reduction of wages to the European standard, I do not care to discuss—a resort to it would destroy our industries, and imperil the very life of the Republic. It would degrade our laboring men and women, take from them all the stimulus of hope and ambition, reduce them to a condition worse than that of the foreign worker. They could not live as the European does, for they have known something better. Many things have become necessities to them and to their families which are luxuries elsewhere. And yet free trade would inevitably work out this result.

Mr. President, what is this tariff which so provokes the hostility of the Democratic party; so arouses the warm indignation of the President, and leads him to such vigorous denunciation?

They say, first, that it is a cunning device of the Republican party to care for capital; to protect bloated manufacturers; to build up monopolies; to make the rich richer and the poor poorer, and the President appeals to the patriotism of these greedy manufacturers to surrender some of their ill-gotten gains. Why, sir, how utterly absurd. The capital, the money of this country needs no especial protection. It is amply able to care for itself. If invested it finds its business unprofitable, it can readily change its investment; if located at one point it gains no adequate returns, it can easily locate at another; it may even, as it does occasionally, leave the country and build up an industry in another; it may avoid all business enterprise, invest itself in United States bonds, where it is perfectly safe and pays no taxes, or in State, county, town, and railroad bonds, or it may deposit itself in national or savings banks. But, Mr. President, capital is excessively timid. A tariff encourages it to locate itself here at home, to come out from banks and bonds, go into factories of wool, cotton, and silk, into machine shops, into furnaces and forges, into an active development of the vast resources of this country, thus creating and sustaining a constantly increasing demand for labor, which inevitably results in advancing wages for the workman. The tariff does its beneficent work of protection where protection most is needed. It guards the laborer here against the competition of the cheap wages of Europe.

Without it as a safeguard, when times were hard, when European countries had, as they do every now and then, enormous surpluses of manufactured products piled up at home, our markets would be flooded, our factories closed, our laborers out of work, or if business continued wages would necessarily suffer a serious reduction.

Again: Suppose we had free trade, manufacturing in this country would not cease. Iron, steel, cotton, wool, and silk would still be worked by busy hands, but the hearts of the workers would no longer be buoyant with hope, their homes no longer comfortable and happy. They must work and weep, or starve. Then, indeed, might monopoly become possible, and capital despotic, for the cheaper the wages, the more likelihood of the ownership of the worker.

Mr. President, where are the enormous profits of the manufacturer the President asks them to yield in part? That such were realized, both at home and abroad, years ago, I admit, but that day has gone forever. Competition is so fierce that the margin for gain is exceedingly small. I am personally familiar with the operations of manufacturers of fabrics, indeed, live in a city devoted to the business, and I assert, without fear of contradiction, that the manufacturers of New England of cotton, wool, and silk have not for the last five years averaged a net profit of over 6 per cent. I assert further that a guaranty to them of such a profit for the next ten years would be eminently satisfactory.

But, says the President, the tariff raises the prices to consumers by precisely the sums paid for such duties, or in other words, a duty is a tax paid by the purchaser, and yet he may examine the entire list of the industries of this country, encouraged and sustained by the protective tariff, and not one can be found justifying his proposition, except sugar, and that only because up to now, for climatic reasons, competition has not done its perfect work. I assert the very contrary, that even "the present vicious, iniquitable, and illogical" tariff laws have decreased to the consumer the prices of all the products of protected industries, other than sugar, by more than 25 per cent. since they have been in force, and if I had time could bring forward to its support hundreds of unimpeachable witnesses.

Mr. EUSTIS. Sugar is cheaper when the tax is highest, it seems.

Mr. FRYE. That is the general rule. I could bring a good many witnesses to that. I only want to bring a few, however.

Under the encouragement of our tariff, that is a duty of about 58 per cent., the manufacture of glass has increased enormously in this country, employing thousands of men at good wages, and yet you can buy a foot of plate glass to-day for $1 which cost $2.50 in 1860.

In 1860 salt was free; the price at Chicago was $2 a barrel. In 1861 a duty of 6 cents a hundred was laid—later on 24 cents a hundred—and in 1880 it was selling in Chicago for 75 cents a barrel, and now in Michigan for 60 cents.

WORSTED CLOTHS.

In 1860 there were 3 mills in the country, wages low, business poor, production small. We encouraged it with a heavy duty, and in 1883 we were running 5,000 looms, employing 75,000 workmen, consuming 50,000,000 pounds of wool, producing 15,000,000 yards annually, with a capital of $30,000,000. During this time worsted cloths declined in price from 35 to 40 per cent. In 1883 the duty was reduced; by a vicious construction of the law a greater reduction still was made; now one-third of our looms are idle. In 1883 we imported a little less than $500,000 worth of these goods, last year nearly $5,000,000. If the President succeeds in inducing Congress to still further reduce, all of our mills will close, we shall once more import all we need from England, and the prices will go back to those of 1860.

POTTERY.

In 1860 pottery carried a revenue duty of 24 per cent. The business was insignificant, the wages low; only two or three thousand people employed. The Morrill tariff act levied a duty of 40 per cent., subsequently increased to 55, and to-day we make pottery in every State in the Union, except Florida, employ an immense force of help, pay wages higher than in 1860, and yet as much can be bought now for $2.50 as could be then for $4.

COTTON GOODS.

The duty on some of the cheaper lines of cotton goods is nearly as great as the price of the fabric, and yet they were never furnished to the people as cheaply as now. They are retailing in my city at a lower price than in Manchester, England.

SILK.

Silk manufacture in this country is almost entirely due to the Morrill tariff act, which laid a duty of over 50 cent. In 1860 only 4,000 workmen were engaged in the business. To-day 40,000 men and women are employed; capital invested, $17,000,000; annual pay-roll, $9,000,000; product valued at $50,000,000. In New Jersey alone in 1886 the production of the silk looms was worth $28,000,000, employed 20,000 people, paying them annually nearly $7,000,000.

How about the prices? I give the decline as shown by the price lists of 1865 and 1882:

| | Per cent. |
|---|---|
| Machine twist | 56 |
| Fine silks and scarfs | 53 |
| Serges and twilled silks | 62 |
| Handkerchiefs | 62 |
| Ribbons | 54 |
| Laces | 50 |
| Dress goods | 30 to 35 |

Take soda-ash. We use it in enormous quantities in the manufacture of glass, soap, and for bleaching purposes. Six years ago we imported all we used and paid $48 a ton. A duty was laid on it of one-quarter cent a pound. Six hundred thousand dollars of English capital was induced to come to Syracuse, unite with an equal amount there, erect an immense factory, which I had the pleasure of visiting a short time since. The product of the mill was 150 tons daily, requiring for its production 300 tons of lime rock, 300 tons of salt, 300 tons of coal, and 5 tons of ammonia; all, while in the earth, of little value, 90 per cent. of the worth of the manufactured product being labor. This concern employs directly 750 men; wages average $1.75 a day, while the English wages in the same business average a little less than a dollar. How about the price? During the first quarter of their operations in 1884 the price fell to $45 a ton; the second quarter to $36, while in the last invoice I saw, only a month or two since, it was a shade less than $30. But why pursue this further? Ten thousand such witnesses might be summoned and testify as clearly and convincingly as these, and then the free-trader, with the President of the United States, championing his cause, would still insist that a duty was a tax paid by the consumer. Well, Mr. President, why is it not, and how does a protective tariff decrease the price to consumers?

The worsted manufacture will illustrate it. We were purchasing all of our goods in England; there the price was determined, not here. Of course the highest possible was fixed. We imposed a heavy duty on the cloths, and for a brief period prices strengthened, but encouraged by this protection capital emerged from the banks, bonds were converted into money, worsted mills were built all over the North until $20,000,000 were invested. Then we established the market price, not England. Competition at home became a powerful factor in its determination. The mills were thoroughly reorganized, economy became a science, the inventive genius of the country was called upon for new and improved machinery; it responded generously, as it always does here, the product was doubled with the same power, and the prices continually fell, while the wages of the operatives increased.

Now, Mr. President, suppose this Administration succeeds in destroying this industry, what will be the inevitable result?

Home competition will disappear, we shall no longer regulate the market; what cloths we need we shall buy abroad. England once more determines the conditions on which we shall buy, and the prices will go back. If, however, all of our industries were equally exposed to the pernicious effects of free trade, they might not be destroyed. Manufacturing might, and probably would, continue here, but the price of it would have to be paid by the poor laborer, in scanty wages, hard work, poor living, and destroyed homes. The total extinguishment of one industry is easy, for its laborers would not consent to a reduction of wages which would enable it to live, but would find employment in those that survived. The doctrine of the President, that the wages of those employed in the protected industries alone are affected is too absurd to require refutation.

But, Mr. President, there is a surplus. What shall be done with that? I object to the surplus just as vehemently as does the President. We need nothing more, and ought to have nothing more than a working surplus. Democratic incapacity has afflicted us with this evil, and if we are not careful the same incapacity, in providing a remedy for the disease, will, by mistake, administer poison to the patient. The disposition of this surplus does not seem to me a very serious problem. Some of it ought to be wisely expended in the restoration of our merchant marine, in the building of a navy, in the erection of necessary coast and harbor fortifications, in the education of the people. But if the only thing desirable is to stop the inflow of money, that can be easily effected. Not, however, by the method proposed by the President, and indorsed by his Secretary of the Treasury.

A readjustment or revision of the tariff can be depended upon to reduce revenues only by two methods, one by extending the free-list, the other by an increase of duties and the consequent discouragement of importations. The latter would provoke the hostility of every free-trader in the country, while the former would cripple or destroy many of our industries. There is no middle course, for any reduction of duty less than a repeal only tends to invite increased importation, and to insure a greater revenue. The annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows this clearly. By reference to it we find a small decrease of duty on wool, manufactures of wool, of iron, steel, and silk, while the increase revenue in 1887 over 1886 from these articles alone was $10,908,460. Knit goods fairly illustrate this position. By the act of 1883 the duty was reduced 10 per cent., now about 15. During the years 1881, 1882, and 1883, under the old tariff, we imported 1,318,807 pounds, and collected as duty $1,722,483.

For the years 1884, 1885, and 1886, under the reduced duties, we imported 3,433,480 pounds, an increase of 2,114,573 pounds, and there was paid into the Treasury $3,617,864, an increase in the revenue from this source of $1,894,881. Worsted cloths afford another illustration. The act of 1883 made a slight reduction on the wool and on the cloth, but an unjust classification resulted in a reduction on the cloths of, I should think, from 15 to 20 per cent. What followed? The year before this act took effect our importations of these cloths amounted to a little less than $500,000. Then an increase commenced which resulted, last year, in an importation of nearly $5,000,000, a decrease of duty of 20 per cent., an increase of revenue of 500 per cent. The same result followed the reduction on yarns, on dolmans, cloaks, and other outside garments, on raw, combing, clothing, carpet wools, and shoddy.

Now, suppose Congress, in response to the message of the President, reduces the tariff along the whole line 20 or 30 per cent. Is not an increase of revenue inevitable? Then, surely, our industries would have been crippled for nothing, our laborers sacrificed without compensation, our market surrendered without pay.

But if the earnest purpose is to stop the inflow of money into the Treasury, then as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] proposes, we can repeal all of the internal-revenue taxes, and it is accomplished. The Democrats and their allies, the brewers and saloon-keepers, need not worry so about the temperance sentiment of the country. That is very rapidly crystallizing into the opinion that the tax on spirits ought to be repealed, in the best interests of temperance. One of my objections to this proposition is that it would keep from the Treasury too much money, that an exigency might arise, as in 1875, requiring the reimposition of these taxes, always a difficult thing to do.

We can repeal the tobacco tax and $30,000,000 will stay in the pockets of the people. Repeal the tax on all spirits used in the mechanic arts and in manufactures—ten millions more are provided against. If in the list of dutiable articles any can be found the importation of which will not compete with a successful production of the like at home, place them on the free-list. It seems to me that sugar clearly comes within this specification. It has been highly protected for many years, carries to-day the heaviest tax of any article necessary for consumption, 78 per cent. ad valorem, and yet while its use has steadily increased its production in this country has not increased at all in thirty years. It is the only protected article illustrating the fidelity to truth of the President's free-trade doctrine, that a duty is a tax paid by the consumer.

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. FRYE. With pleasure.

Mr. EUSTIS. Does the Senator understand that it is possible for a capitalist to engage in increasing an industry where that industry is exposed to such violent threats of destruction as are being made year after year by the leaders of the Republican party?

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, what does the Senator from Louisiana say to the threats that have been coming from the Democratic party ever since they have had power in the national House of Representatives to every single industry in the United States of America, except sugar?

Mr. EUSTIS. I deny it.

Mr. FRYE. I served on the Committee of Ways and Means in the Forty-fourth Congress when Ferdinand Wood was chairman, and I was on a subcommittee to revise the tariff, and I say the bill that committee finally agreed upon was a menace to every single industry that I know of in the country, except rice and sugar.

Mr. EUSTIS. Those bills, as I understand them, were for the revision of the tariff, and to destroy the inequalities, and what both political parties denounced as the iniquities of the tariff. I do not mean to say that the duty on sugar is a protective tax.

Mr. FRYE. That is what it is for.

Mr. EUSTIS. If the Senator will allow me a moment to read an extract; I do not want to interrupt him——

Mr. FRYE. I am nearly through, but I yield.

Mr. EUSTIS. No; go on.

Mr. FRYE. I was saying we were in need of money in 1875, and the Secretary of the Treasury sent to the House of Representatives a statement as to the condition of the finances and a request that new taxation should be levied somewhere; and where did we levy it? We put a duty of 25 per cent. on sugar, because we knew we could get money from sugar in the quickest and the most certain way to meet the exigency of the Treasury. The title of the act is "An act to provide for the exigencies of the Government," and that duty of 25 per cent. is still on sugar. Where is the exigency?

Mr. EUSTIS. I should like to ask the Senator one question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. FRYE. Certainly.

Mr. EUSTIS. When you increased the duty on sugar by 25 per cent. in 1875, was not everything then in this country taxed to the highest point, and was not sugar selected because it was considered a tax which the people could more cheerfully endure than any other? It is a tax which protects the sugar-planter only remotely and incidentally. For every $10 of the tax that is derived from the import duty on sugar $9 go into the United States Treasury and $1 to the benefit of the protection of the sugar-planter. Why was that article selected if it was not that it could bear taxation more equally and more evenly than any other?

Mr. FRYE. I told the Senator a moment ago why it was selected. It was selected because people were compelled practically from necessity to use sugar. We knew perfectly well that the most certain way to answer the demands of the hungry Treasury then was to put that tax on sugar. We put it there for money and nothing else, not for protection, but to relieve the Treasury. What I complain of is not that it was put there, but that it is there now, and here is the President of the United States declaring that the Treasury is so plethoric that it is a standing menace to the Republic itself, and yet that duty of 25 per cent. still remains.

Mr. President, I would repeal the duty on sugar. I tried my best in 1883 when the tariff was under revision in the Senate of the United States to get that 25 per cent. off, and then 40 per cent. off, and nearly every Democrat in the Senate voted against my amendments. I asked the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], I remember perfectly well, to inform me or the Senate why it was that he, a free-trader, voted against every amendment to reduce the duty on sugar, and he replied frankly that it was because it was a duty for revenue only.

Mr. EUSTIS rose.

Mr. FRYE. I decline to be interrupted any further, because I am getting very tired.

Mr. President, I say I am in favor of taking the duty off sugar and giving it to the people cheap. It is in fact the only duty paid by the consumer, is paid, too, by every family in the country—the only one that fails to encourage home production, and in my opinion ought to be repealed. But I would not destroy this industry, feeble as it is, nor would I discourage the present attempts to make sugar from beets or sorghum.

In the repealing act I would provide for a direct bounty on every pound of sugar produced in this country equivalent to the duty now levied. I would make further provision that this repeal should not apply to the sugar product of any country laying an export duty, nor to sugar brought into our ports in any vessels other than those of the country exporting or our own, nor to such exportation from countries refusing to our ships in their ports precisely the same treatment in light-house dues and other charges as we grant to theirs in our ports, or making less favorable terms for the entry of any of our products than are made by it to the goods of other countries.

This repeal would probably reduce our revenues next year $60,000,000, and the bounties paid would amount to seven millions more. A further reduction would not be safe, for "exigencies" are liable to confront us, as they did in 1875.

If this should be regarded as too radical, resulting in too great a decrease of revenue, we could reduce the duty on sugar one-half, and then it would bear the highest rate imposed on any article of food, except rice. If, however, the only purpose is to destroy the protective principle in the tariff, then, of course, the President and his Secretary of the Treasury have submitted to Congress a plan absolutely certain of success.

Mr. President, we have a splendid country, perfectly marvelous in its possibilities. It ought to lead the world in a lofty, pure civilization, in religion, education, temperance, in the arts, sciences, literature, and in material progress. Who of us doubts its glorious future, if only we remember that we are Americans; if only our administration of affairs, and our legislation shall be earnestly directed to the promotion of the best interests of our people, [Applause in the galleries.]

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. PALMER. I desire to give notice at this time that I will call up a bill now lying on the table, which was introduced by me, entitled a bill (S. 553) to regulate immigration, to-morrow morning immediately after the morning hour, for the purpose of submitting a few remarks.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to strike out section 2, and insert in lieu thereof what will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the words proposed to be inserted, as follows:

SEC. 2. That such money shall annually be divided among and paid out in the several States and Territories and in the District of Columbia, in proportion to their population, respectively, according to the census of 1880: Provided, That all of said money remaining undistributed at the date of the publication of the returns of population as shown by the census of 1890, shall be divided as aforesaid in proportion to the population according to said census of 1890.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to present some further suggestions in the way of testimony showing the necessity of this aid to common schools in the Southern States. I have understood that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations may desire to go on with an appropriation bill; but if he does not, I will proceed with this matter at the present time.

It may be remembered by those who were present at the close of the discussion of this bill last Wednesday—other matters have intervened and have occupied the attention of the Senate—that one of the Senators from Texas was making some explanation in regard to the difficulty experienced there in the pay of teachers. It will be remembered that there was a deficit, or a delay at least, in the payment of teachers, that the aggregate amount which was unpaid was something like a million dollars, and it was explained by the suggestion that there had been a drought in that State, and for the relief of that drought it was necessary that there should be an appropriation of about $10,000 worth of seeds, and the suggestion was made that this was an uncommon state of the country.

If that was a true explanation there was a million dollars due in the wages of teachers and $10,000 was necessary to provide for the relief of the drought, and then further a suggestion was made that this difficulty was not one of long standing; that it came about casually and as a consequence of the destitution of moisture in that State. I have now in my possession a letter from the superintendent of public instruction for that State upon this very point, Mr. O. H. Cooper. It seems that the teachers and others interested have been applying to him, as to the treasurer and other State authorities, to know why it is that the money is not ready when the services have been rendered. I read the other day a reply to a letter of one of the county treasurers. This officer, Mr. Cooper, is the superintendent for the entire State, and he replies to a teacher writing from Coryell County, who, like others, has not been paid:

AUSTIN, TEX., January 5, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I have read with interest your letter of January 2, setting forth the embarrassing and vexatious delays which you in common with many other faithful and earnest teachers in Texas suffer year after year in collecting your wages after you have done your work. The cause of this trouble is beyond the reach of the executive officers of the government. It lies in the defective laws regulating the school finances. Let the teachers agitate this subject until our lawmakers understand that the time can not longer be postponed when the financial administration of the school system must be placed on a sound and correct business basis. Public opinion needs to be enlightened on the defects in our school system.

O. H. COOPER.

This, from the highest educational authority in the State, would seem to indicate that the explanation of the Senator needed some explanation itself. I have here the biennial report of the superintendent of public instruction for the year 1886, a Mr. Baker. It seems he has been succeeded by Mr. Cooper, and as bearing on the question of the reliability of some of the returns of superintendents and others in the Southern States which have been cited as an evidence that the deductions from the census were not to be relied upon, I will introduce what he says in criticising the reports that he has to rely upon from the counties, for it must be understood that the superintendent of education makes up his report from the statistics which are furnished to him by teachers and by county and by other officers. At page 11 of the report of 1886 Mr. Baker says:

Another evil consists in the unreliability and, in many instances, absurdity of the statistics furnished by county judges, when furnished at all.

I ask attention to this in connection with the statistics which have been furnished and relied upon so largely from the New York Post, which Senators seem to think are to be accepted as a reply to everything that has ever been urged in any of these debates founded on the sworn returns of the Government.

A few specimens culled at random will give a better idea. The official reports show that for the scholastic year ending August 31, 1885, Webb County had an average school term of four hundred days, and that the tuition of the children of that county cost between $20 and $21 per month—

Whereas in that State where the highest cost obtains of any in the Union, Massachusetts, that cost has never been fixed at more than $22 the entire year, but in Webb County, Texas, according to their returns, it seems the schools cost per month the same amount—while tuition in Hopkins County only costs 14¼ cents per month;—

Twenty dollars and $21 in the other county—that Red River, with a scholastic population of 4,085 had an average daily attendance of only 43 and a total daily attendance of 199,583; while Runnels County had an average daily attendance of 152 and a total daily attendance of only 192.

Grayson County, with a scholastic population of 6,832, had an average daily attendance of only 56, although she had 102 schools; and Shelby, with a population of 2,051, had an average daily attendance of 34.

The total daily attendance is from 100 to 120 times greater than the average daily attendance, but in Liberty County last year they tallied with each other.

The total daily attendance in Montgomery County was 1,801, average daily attendance 1,801, with 583 pupils studying natural philosophy; while Ellis County, with a scholastic population nearly twice as large, had only 12 studying natural philosophy, Travis County only 3, and Austin City 31.

Now, if the Legislature of the State were to appropriate enough money for a six months' term at the same rate as the actual cost of the Webb County schools for 1884–'85, it would take about $13,000,000.

Which is more than is expended in all the Southern States, leaving out Missouri and Maryland.

On the other hand, if the appropriation was made on the Hopkins County basis, it would only require $89,986.71 to maintain the schools of the State for six months.

* * * * * * *

Nothing approximating a complete diagnosis of our school affairs can be had until the Legislature establishes a school system, and it seems to me that the first step towards the establishment of a system would be the creation of the office of county superintendent of schools, and the complete annihilation of county judges, treasurers, assessors, and boards of examiners as school officers and a merger of their duties into the office of county superintendent. In this officer the State would have a responsible agent, charged with the duty of keeping accurate accounts, of obtaining thoroughly reliable statistics, and administering the school affairs of the State honestly, intelligently, and in accordance with the best business methods.

He goes on making further useful suggestions, showing that he is a competent officer, and that he realizes the nature of the difficulties he has to engage with. He speaks further of the failure of officers to make reports at all. He says:

An inspection of the accompanying tables will show that several county judges, county treasurers, city superintendents, and city treasurers have failed to make reports to this department as directed by law. I have used every exertion to secure these reports. The Legislature can not be accurately informed of the condition of affairs unless the officers of government make prompt and faithful reports to the proper departments.

He deals with the matter of taxation, and in conclusion he says:

In this connection it may be well to state that many districts and committees are practically without school-houses. The schools are being taught in rented houses, in dwellings, in church houses, and public halls. The time has arrived for looking these matters squarely in the face, and the situation demands provision for present needs and active preparation for future wants.

The report is for 1886, a late report. It is not one of the obsolete returns; it is since this marvelous reform has taken place, since this entire transformation!

Mr. COKE. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that every Legislature that has met for several years past has been amending and improving the laws on the subject. They are rapidly developing into a complete system, and the last report shows that the annual school revenues are about $3,750,000, which is every dollar that is needed when the Legislature shall have perfected our school system as it should be.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator stated that three times before. I have here the last report of the Commissioner of Education, the report for 1885–'86. I desire to introduce some matter from this as bearing on the alleged statistics which are said to falsify everything that has ever been introduced in this debate before. I have taken some tables to be found in this report of the present Commissioner of Education, who is strongly in favor of the enactment of this bill into a law, basing that on his knowledge of the condition of the South, that it is and still continues an actual necessity. This report contains tables which are founded upon a principle or idea that I have never seen embodied in any other report, and one which most excellently exhibits the actual condition of education as it is proceeding throughout the country.

Assuming that sufficient education is to be obtained in the common schools between the ages of six and fourteen inclusive, these tables are constructed in such a way as to show the proportion of the attendance that actually took place between those ages, and also including the additional attendance of those who are younger and those who are older, and the ratio of that actual and total attendance to the total number of those between the ages of six and fourteen. I find that the ratio of attendance in 1885 and 1886 to the population between the ages of six and fourteen was, in several of the States, what I shall proceed to give. They have not been able to obtain the returns of all the States, and I take those which illustrate the actual situation best.

I wish first, however, to call attention to the fact that in every State there will be those attending the schools who are less than six, and there will be others attending the schools who are over fourteen years of age. In fact, in some of the Southern States it is still the truth that colored people, and I think perhaps some of the white people, are attending the schools who have attained their majority. In Alabama there are 46.75 per cent., that is to say, less than one-half, including all that attend school of the population between six and fourteen. The actual attendance is 46.75 per cent. of the number who are there in that State between the ages of six and fourteen.

In Florida—and I call attention to Florida because that is a State which has been contrasted with New Hampshire, and it has been alleged in statistics which have been cited by the three Senators who have argued against this bill, that education is as advanced now in Florida as in the State of New Hampshire—in Florida the proportion of all who attend school to those between six and fourteen is 50.64 per cent., or one-half. In Louisiana it is 33.43 per cent.; that is to say, one-third as many attend school as there are those within the State between six and fourteen. In Maryland the ratio is 49.04 per cent., less than half; in Mississippi, 65.51 per cent.; in North Carolina, 56.45 per cent.; in South Carolina, 52.44 per cent.; in Virginia, 48.23 per cent.—all about one-half. On the other hand, of the Northern States where the schools have been longer established and there is money to support them, in California the total attendance compared to the number of children between six and fourteen is 79.22 per cent.; in Colorado, 87.55 per cent.; in Connecticut, 75.89 per cent.; in Illinois, 78.11 per cent.; in Indiana, 83.39 per cent.; in Kansas, 84.89 per cent.; in Massachusetts, 91.06 per cent.; in New Hampshire, 88.10 per cent.; in New York, 71.25 per cent.; in Ohio, 81.05 per cent.; in Oregon, 81.67 per cent.; in Pennsylvania, 74.66 per cent.; in Vermont, 85.59 per cent.; in the District of Columbia, 68.07 per cent.; and in Dakota Territory, 80.82 per cent.

Mr. COKE. What about Texas?

Mr. BLAIR. I think Texas is not given. There are no returns from Texas.

Now, in the matter of expenditure in the several States, as between the Northern States and Southern States and the actual necessity for aid, it appears that in 1885–'86 in Alabama, with a population of 1,467,384, there was an expenditure of $741,244; in Wisconsin, with a population of 1,563,423, there was an expenditure of $3,645,160; in Arkansas, with a population of 935,058, there was an expenditure of $866,892; in Nebraska, with a populaiton of 740,645, there was an expenditure of $2,350,869; in Louisiana, with a population of 1,008,951, there was an expenditure of $450,030; in California, with a population of 1,001,293, there was an expenditure of $3,505,931; in Florida, with a population of 338,406, there was an expenditure of $385,800; in Vermont, with a population of 333,155, there was an expenditure of $599,515; in Georgia, with a population of 1,694,809, there was an expenditure of $711,090; in Iowa, with a population of 1,766,239, there was an expenditure of $4,660,000; in Kentucky, with a population of 1,801,831, there was an expenditure of $700,790, while in Michigan, with a population of 1,912,181, there was an expenditure of $4,332,968; in Mississippi, with a population of 1,237,453, there was an expenditure of $840,776; in Minnesota, with a population of 1,117,798, there was an expenditure of $2,371,990; in North Carolina, with a population of 1,525,341, there was an expenditure of $671,116; in Kansas, with a population of 1,284,809, the expenditure was $3,849,017; in South Carolina, with a population of 1,085,789, there was an expenditure of $425,903; in Connecticut, with a population of 670,807, there was an expenditure of $1,791,666; in Tennessee, with a population of 1,723,996, there was an expenditure of $1,047,223, while in Massachusetts, with a population of 1,942,141, there was an expenditure of $7,151,075; Indiana, with a population of 2,061,008, spent $5,214,198, while Texas, with 2,027,895 population, expended $2,166,633.

I have here massed together the school expenditures for 1885 and 1886 in most of the Southern States. I do not know but that I have them all. Here is the list. I have all with the exception of Missouri, Maryland, and Delaware. Missouri has a large fund, and her expenditure, I think, is nearly $5,000,000 yearly. This report makes the entire expenditure for all school purposes throughout the country $111,304,927. That is much the largest estimate I have ever seen. I do not know whether it can be authenticated. I hope it is as much as that. It is variously estimated at from about $90,000,000 up to this amount. In the States which I have enumerated here, Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and West Virginia, the total reaches $11,497,574.

Mr. COKE. I ask the Senator if that is based on the last census?

Mr. BLAIR. The figures I am giving now?

Mr. COKE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. I am not giving the population. I am giving the expenditures. That can be easily ascertained by comparing the table with the census returns.

Mr. COKE. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the amount put down as having been expended by Texas is a million dollars less than shown by the statement of Mr. Cooper, the superintendent.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know how that may be. These are returns made the last year, 1885–'86. Is the Senator aware of any great increase of taxation in Texas by one-third the present year?

Mr. COKE. My colleague some days ago read a letter from the comptroller of Texas, in which he stated that the actual annual school fund for the last scholastic year was $3,700,000. Where does the table the Senator read come from?

Mr. BLAIR. That is taken from the last reports of the superintendents of public instruction. Does the Senator give any reason why the teachers are not paid, the letter of the superintendent showing that a million dollars nearly is behindhand now?

Mr. COKE. The reason of that has been explained to the Senate. Perhaps the Senator has forgotten it.

Mr. REAGAN. I had not heard any complaint as to the non-payment of teachers when I sent to the comptroller for the amount of the school fund.

Mr. BLAIR. I will simply say in regard to this matter in Texas that I do not want this to degenerate into an interstate controversy. I suppose that the State of Texas is doing what it can, and I find no fault; but I do state that the Senators fail to appreciate the actual difficulties with reference to the education of their own population, and I submit these figures, these complaints, and the fact that at least twice the teachers of the State in convention have resolved strongly and earnestly for the enactment of this bill into a law on the ground that funds are necessary in Texas. I do submit those facts to the consideration of the Senate.

I was about to give the expenditure in the States which I enumerated in the year 1885–'86, being the last returns that are available to us. Those States contain over 17,000,000 population, not one-third, but nearly one-third of the population of this country; and it is a well-known fact that, relatively, population from natural causes is increasing more rapidly in the South than in the North, so that I think it is no more than fair to presume that at least one-third of the educatable population of the country is to be found in the States which I have enumerated, and the aggregate of expenditures, according to these latest returns in those States, is $11,497,574, while the total expenditure for the whole country is $111,304,927, all these returns coming from the same authority. It should be understood still further——

Mr. REAGAN. Will the Senator allow me one moment?

Mr. BLAIR. Very well.

Mr. REAGAN. I only want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that in some of the States he enumerated there are laws which authorize localities, school districts, to vote moneys by taxation for school purposes.

Mr. BLAIR. The table includes all those.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not know whether the estimates he has presented embrace what the people tax themselves for by vote in the school districts, which amounts to a very large sum of money each year.

Mr. BLAIR. It does, and I understand this table includes the entire expenditure from all sources of which returns are available.

Mr. REAGAN. If that is the table furnished by the superintendent of public instruction for the year 1884–'85, then I will state to the Senator that it does not embrace those items.

Mr. BLAIR. I understand it to embrace them, and the Senator will find it so.

With reference to the condition of Louisiana I find a quotation from Governor McEnery, which I will read, in addition to that which has already been placed in the possession of the Senate relative to the condition of education in that State. He says in an address very lately:

With an increasing population illiteracy increases in ratio greater than the increased population. And this is particularly true of this State, for every year we are drawing from the illiteracy of South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, and Alabama by the introduction of colored laborers. This illiteracy among the masses has not escaped my attention. In the address I delivered before the State Educational Society, at Monroe, in August, 1885, I said:

"We will have to go beyond the common school and the university, among the masses of the people and educate them, first, as to the necessity for the establishment of public schools, the sacrifices to be made for this purpose, and show that it is the best investment that the people can make—leading to economy in government, the lessening of crime, the creation of new industries, the accumulation of wealth, and the decrease of taxation; and educate them, secondly, to the proper understanding of the rights and duties of citizenship, the functions of government, and the appreciation of free institutions. I am safe in saying that not one-half of the voting population of Louisiana have any knowledge whatever of these subjects, yet they are eligible to the highest office in the State, sit as jurors, and determine questions affecting property, liberty, and life."

And further, to the same effect, I wish now to read from the report of the Commissioner of Education for the year last preceding, on the illiteracy of the South and the necessity of national aid. I will send this to the desk to be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TEACHERS FOR COLORED SCHOOLS.

The South also suffers particularly from the want of qualified teachers in the elementary schools. In his report to the trustees of the Slater fund, Dr. Haygood, the general agent, writes as follows:

"Many of the teachers in the colored public schools are pitiably incompetent—the statement need not be qualified by the word 'colored,' if we were considering the whole case of the public schools in the Southern States. Many of them lack not only scholarship and training, but moral character. As a rule, there is good reason to believe that they do the best they can; not a few of them do admirably well; some do their work so efficiently and usefully as to justify the belief that the colored people are capable of furnishing fit material for making teachers of the most approved quality. The defects of these colored teachers are so great as to create an urgent necessity for training better ones; their excellences and their successes are sufficient to justify the best hopes of success in the effort, and to vindicate the judgment of those who make large investments of money and service to give to colored students opportunity for thoroughly preparing themselves for the work of teaching the children of their people."

As I have before stated, the provision for training teachers continually increases, but it is far below the requirement, and only a small proportion of the well-trained teachers go into the rural districts, which, with their short terms, miserable school-houses, and utter lack of appliances, offer no inducement to competent teachers. While both races are affected by these drawbacks, it is the colored people whose welfare is most seriously threatened. In my judgment there is no graver problem before us than the adequate and appropriate training of these people, who, after years of servitude, were suddenly invested with the rights and duties of citizenship. They require a training specially adapted to their wants, a training in which the moral and industrious aptitudes shall receive equal attention with the intellectual. These conditions are well understood; the methods, the subjects of instruction, the material appliances required for the development of the colored population of the South have been fully considered, and I am satisfied that if the means were forthcoming the work would go rapidly forward to satisfactory results.

ILLITERACY IN THE SOUTH.

The fact of steady progress in the educational system of the South has given rise to the belief in many quarters that the deficiency in the means of public education which existed in that section at the close of the civil war has been very nearly overcome, and that the States in question are amply able to rid themselves of the evils of illiteracy, which made such an alarming showing in the census of 1880.

On account of this erroneous impression, which some find it for their interest to foster, it is to be regretted that we have not from all of the Southern States more recent statistics than those of 1880, setting forth the various conditions by which literacy and illiteracy are determined. In accordance with the law of Virginia, during the months of June and July, 1885, a census was taken in that State of all persons residing within the school districts between the ages of five and twenty-one years. This census enables us to form the following comparisons with the showings of the United States census of 1880:

Census of 1880.—Population 10 to 20, both inclusive: White, 205,360; unable to write, 43,688; percentage, 21. Colored, 160,338; unable to write, 101,320; percentage, 63.

Census of 1885.—Population 10 to 20, both inclusive: White, 212,524; unable to read, 26,374; percentage, 13. Colored, 136,975; unable to read, 55,368; percentage, 40.

Census of 1885.—Population 7 to 15 years of age: White, 189,382; unable to write, 72,492; percentage, 38. Colored, 145,663; unable to write, 98,132; percentage, 67.

Of the white population between 7 and 15 years of age who can not write, 29,846, or 15.7 per cent., are between 10 and 15 years of age, and of the colored population, 50,705, or 34.8 per cent. The State census of 1885 does not give precisely the same data as the United States census, inability to write having been made in the former the test for persons between 7 and 15 years, and in the latter for those between 10 and 20. It can not, however, escape notice that the proportion of illiterates between 7 and 15 years of age in 1885 is greater than the proportion between 10 and 20 in 1880; also that the number of colored illiterates between 10 and 15 years in 1885 bears to the colored population between 7 and 15 a larger ratio than that of the colored illiterates between 10 and 20 years of age to the colored population between those years in 1880. The corresponding comparison for the whites indicates a slightly more favorable condition in 1885. With respect to this census Hon. R. R. Farr, the State superintendent, says:

"The percentage of illiteracy of each class and sex is given, and affords a curious study, and admonishes us that it will take a steady and persistent fight to meet and overcome the army of illiterates which is embraced within the school period, to say nothing about those who are under the prescribed age, and who will soon require school facilities. We know of no way to generally remove the illiteracy of our adult population; as a rule that will stand as a canker in the body-politic, a source of much danger and of inestimable loss to the State. But there is every reason why the State and nation should remove the illiteracy from our young generation by furnishing ample school facilities for all the different classes and conditions of the present and future school population and then by some practicable method compel them to acquire at least the rudiments of a common education. The safety and progress of the State and nation demand this, to say nothing of humanity and religion. It is not remarkable that the percentage of illiteracy of the colored school population is so much greater than that of the white. The one is the offspring of an ancestry of illiteracy, and consequently without any opportunity of home training; the other, the descendants of an intelligent and refined people, surrounded by all those home influences which are such potent factors in the education and elevation of a people. It may be safely assumed, as a rule, that all the education, be it ever so little, that is possessed by the colored school population has been derived from one class or another of public education; and when we remember that in this State they have only had the advantage of some fifteen years' school facilities, their progress is wonderful, deserving of the highest praise, and shows conclusively that they have the capacity to acquire an education, and that all they need is fair school facilities to enable them soon to remove the burden of their illiteracy from the body-politic."

It should be remembered in this connection that Virginia is one of the most favored of the States included in the table before us. In density of population it is surpassed by two of those States only, in the amount of taxable property by four, and in the amount of school income by two. The school system has been administered by superintendents of great energy, and the teaching force includes an unusually large proportion of qualified teachers, from all of which it may be inferred that Virginia is making as rapid progress in the struggle against illiteracy as any one of the Southern States.

Mr. BLAIR. I am now willing to give way to a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business, as I understand that is desired by many Senators.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the permission of my friend from New Hampshire, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 24, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 23, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, it appears from the Journal as read by the Clerk that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HOGG] entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered. I want to say, sir, I think there is some mistake about that. The gentleman from West Virginia, as the Journal states, moved to reconsider the vote by which the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] was rejected. The Chair at the moment permitted him to do so, but subsequently, upon reflection, stated that the motion would not then be in order. Watching, as I think vigilantly, the proceedings, I failed to hear any motion upon the part of the gentleman from West Virginia that the vote ordering the previous question should be reconsidered.

The only purpose I have in making this statement is that I should have objected to such a motion if made. Gentlemen here around me did not hear the motion, and the first knowledge I had that such a motion was submitted, or was admitted, was on reading the RECORD of yesterday morning, and gentlemen will see upon an examination what it contains. I say the only object I have in calling attention to it is, that I can not be deprived of the privilege of objecting to the motion to reconsider that vote on the ground that the execution of the order of the House, in ordering the previous question, had been partly carried out, and that therefore, under well-established rules, it could not be reconsidered.

I will not make a question on the Journal if the Chair understands the rule as I do, that the mere entering of the motion to reconsider would not preclude any point of order being made upon it whenever it is sought to be acted upon. I do not want, of course, to get up any issue about the Journal, and I merely call attention to the point.

If it is true that the point of order may be made upon the motion to reconsider whenever it is proposed to call it up, I have no objection to the Journal standing as it is, although, according to my recollection and the recollection of gentlemen sitting around me, it is not correct.

Mr. REED. Either the motion was entered or it was not.

Mr. CRISP. In my opinion, and in that I think I am sustained by brother members and the clerks at the desk, it was not entered.

Mr. REED. How did it get into the Journal?

Mr. CRISP. That I can not answer.

Mr. REED. Is it on account of our having a new Journal Clerk?

Mr. CRISP. I do not know.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state its recollection to be in conformity with the Journal. The gentleman from West Virginia can state whether he made the motion or not.

Mr. HOGG. I wish to say that when the House convened on Saturday morning I asked the question which the RECORD discloses, whether it would be in order, pending the call of the yeas and nays, to move to reconsider the vote whereby the substitute of the gentleman from Iowa was rejected. The Chair answered that it would be in order to submit the motion, but that the consideration of it would be deferred until the yeas and nays had been disposed of. That motion was entered as a matter of record, not for consideration at the time the motion was made, but for future consideration and to reserve the rights of those who desired action upon that motion.

Now, the yeas and nays were called, and upon the announcement of the vote it was disclosed that there was not a quorum voting upon the question of adopting the resolution reported by the Committee on Elections. Then I made a motion to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered upon the question of agreeing to the resolutions, and the gentleman from Georgia hearing the motion said:

Pending that motion—

Recognizing the one I had just made—

I move that the House do now adjourn.

And pending the consideration of the motion which I had made the House did adjourn. That is in conformity with the RECORD. The RECORD discloses the true course of the procedure in that matter.

Mr. CRISP. It is apparent from the statement now made by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HOGG] that the Journal is wrong. That gentleman now states that he made a motion to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered. The Journal states that he made a motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered. Therefore it is apparent the Journal is not correct.

Now as to the statement of the RECORD, I know that to be incorrect where it states that the gentleman from Georgia said:

Pending that motion I move that the House do now adjourn.

I had intended to call attention to that, and have sought the notes of the reporter for that purpose. I did not say "pending the motion," because I had no knowledge of any such motion; nor had the gentlemen around me, or the clerks at the desk.

But what I wanted to emphasize is that the statement of the gentleman from West Virginia shows that the Journal is wrong. It shows that he entered the motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; whereas he now states he made a motion to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

And further, I insist that no motion that is made or entered by any member of this House can be considered as a pending motion unless it is acknowledged and stated by the Chair. The mere fact that a gentleman rises and says "I move so and so," without the Chair entertaining and stating it to the House, amounts to nothing; such a motion is a nullity. The only way whereby a motion can be considered as pending is where the Chair states, in accordance with the rules, that the gentleman from so and so makes such a motion; and in the absence of such a statement the mere remark of a gentleman on the floor that he makes such a motion is not, in the contemplation of parliamentary law, making a motion. It is not accepted; it is not received; it is not before the House. How often do we see a gentleman rise here and there and make a motion, which the Chair does not at the time entertain; and in such a case it can in no sense be construed as a motion pending before the House. According to the rule the Chair must state the motions that are made before they can be accepted by the House.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Journal is incorrect in the particular that I have referred to.

Mr. HOGG. I have before me in the RECORD the exact language of the Chair, after the motion I made to reconsider the vote by which the substitute had been rejected had been entered on the Journal. And there seems to be some misapprehension as to the motive which actuated that motion. It seemed to be thought it was made for immediate consideration, which I knew was not in order pending the vote upon the original resolutions reported from the committee under the call of the yeas and nays. Therefore the Chair, realizing that fact, understanding what I proposed by my original motion, used this language:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HOGG] made the motion, as the Chair understood, to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was rejected. That motion will not be in order until the vote on ordering the previous question has been reconsidered.

In order, therefore, to make myself distinctly understood I replied, "Then I make that motion;" not repeating the language, but following up the language used by the Chair. Both those expressions must be taken together in order to convey the intention of the mover.

Mr. CRISP. Is that the way in which the gentleman stated the motion a few moments ago?

Mr. HOGG. It is precisely the way in which I intended to do it.

Mr. CRISP. Perhaps the gentleman had his intention on Saturday, but did not carry it out. Certainly I never heard it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Georgia to make a motion to correct the RECORD?

Mr. CRISP. I merely call the attention of the Chair to what I think is an incorrect statement in the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state for the guidance of the House hereafter that a motion to reconsider is of the highest privilege and can be entered at any time even pending a motion to adjourn. It has been ordered to be entered pending the consideration of a conference report. It has been so ruled every time from Speaker Stevenson down, and by various Speakers since. It has been ruled that a motion to reconsider having only two days in which to be entered shall be entered whenever the member can obtain the floor for that purpose. But all rights as to points of order and as to the consideration of the motion, whether it is a valid motion or not, are of course reserved; and when the motion comes up in its order all points of order are reserved for the action of the Chair.

The RECORD is accurate according to the recollection of the Chair. The gentleman from West Virginia first made a motion to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was rejected. Afterward, upon a suggestion of the Chair, he modified his original proposition so as to make it a motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered, the previous question operating on both the substitute and the original resolution, and being partly executed. So that the RECORD is absolutely correct in recording both these motions, the motion to reconsider the order for the previous question having been substituted by the gentleman from West Virginia for his prior motion. When these motions come up, if they should ever come up in order, the gentleman from Georgia or any other gentleman will be recognized to make the point of order as to the propriety or validity of the motions. If there be no objection, the Journal of Saturday last will be approved. The Chair hears no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CRISP. I call for the regular order.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BRUMM. I rise to a question of privilege. I have read in the Washington Post of yesterday what purports to be an interview between a reporter of that paper and the honorable chairman of the Committee on Elections [Mr. CRISP]. I presume that gentleman has read this interview, and I take it for granted that what purports to have been said by him was actually said. I also find in that paper an editorial making certain charges. I shall ask the Clerk to read the interview and the editorial, and then I wish to say something upon this subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I submit that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] has not stated any question of privilege, and before any extract from a newspaper has been read he ought to make such a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not yet determine whether this is a question of privilege or not, under the rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But I submit that the Chair ought to be able to determine that from the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, not from any extract which may be read from any newspaper.

Mr. BRUMM. If I did not so state before, I state now that both articles I wish to have read reflect upon the personal character of a very large minority in this House in their representative capacity.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I submit to the Chair whether the gentleman has stated a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will have read the rule as to questions of privilege.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE IX.

QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE.

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions, except motions to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, and for a recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania states that he rises to a question of privilege affecting the rights of the House collectively, or affecting the rights, reputation, or conduct of members individually in their representative capacity. The Chair understood the gentleman to make that statement.

Mr. BRUMM. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I did not understand the gentleman at first as I do now.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE REPUBLICAN TACTICS—WHAT JUDGE CRISP THINKS OF THE OPPOSITION IN THE HOUSE—A DENIAL FROM MR. CARLISLE OF THE PUBLISHED REPORT THAT HE WOULD ASK TO HAVE THE CONTEST REOPENED.

"How do you account for the opposition of the Republicans to voting on the Thobe-Carlisle case?" asked a Post reporter last night of Judge CRISP, chairman of the House Elections Committee.

"Their action in that regard is inexplicable to me," responded Judge CRISP, "unless it is based wholly upon a desire to make some political capital among people who do not or will not consider the facts in the case. Mr. Thobe has been afforded two opportunities to submit his proofs, first, in Kentucky last February, and second, before the Committee on Elections on the 6th of this month. The evidence presented to the committee consists of certain affidavits, all that he asked to file. After they were filed Mr. CARLISLE was allowed one week in which to file affidavits in denial of Mr. Thobe's. He was not permitted to make any new countercharges, and filed affidavits directly in rebuttal of those filed by Mr. Thobe. After the affidavits of Mr. CARLISLE were filed, Mr. Sypher, the counsel of Mr. Thobe, was permitted to argue the case before the committee. He asked no further time. The case was then closed by consent of both Mr. Thobe and Mr. CARLISLE. The committee considered and passed upon it. Nine Democrats and two Republicans, Messrs. ROWELL and COOPER, united in the majority report. The other members of the committee, although filing a minority report, concede that the case made by the affidavits of Mr. Thobe was completely rebutted by the affidavits filed by Mr. CARLISLE. They so state in their report. The House is asked to reopen the case when the whole committee agree that there is no evidence before them or in the record which would in any degree impeach the fairness of the election."

"Is there any precedent for opening this case?" asked the reporter.

"No; there is no precedent for such action. The speech of Mr. Thobe in the House fails to show any new matter of complaint. The charges he makes are vague and general, and the names of no witnesses by whom he proposes to prove anything are cited. I believe, in the language of Mr. COOPER, 'there ought to be a period in the term of a member of the House when he can be relieved from the menace of a proposed contest—when he may be conscious that the time has elapsed for the challenging of his right to be here.' I do not believe that the House has any right to reopen a contest that has begun under the statute unless the whole evidence presented to it is such as to make it at least reasonably probable that the contestant can establish his right to the seat. The very able arguments of Mr. COOPER and Mr. ROWELL, leading Republicans, members of the Committee on Elections, gentlemen who are thoroughly familiar with the whole evidence in the case, ought to satisfy any reasonable man that there is absolutely no merit in the contest of Mr. Thobe. If there is any doubt of this in the mind of any member of the House, it must arise from the fact that he has not carefully considered the evidence in the case."

"What is the position of the Republican members who are acting with the majority?" asked the reporter.

"I can not answer you better," replied Judge CRISP, "than by quoting from Mr. ROWELL's speech:

"'The only question to be met in the affidavits of the contestant or the personal knowledge of any witness is the question of the forgeries of the returns of the precincts of Carroll County. Everything else is so much bosh. Every other allegation of personal knowledge is the allegation of immaterial fact; and we, by opening this case, shall be establishing as a precedent that anybody who has been a candidate for Congress may neglect to proceed according to the statutes, and when Congress assembles come in and file his affidavit that he believes certain things may be proven, and then that we must send out committees to investigate that question. Then there is an end of contest under the statutes, and an end of security for any member who received a certificate and comes here.' And that gives the position of the whole Democratic party in the House. Even if the case should be opened so as to give Mr. Thobe a third opportunity to be heard, and the committees should find against him, what assurance have we that he would not again ask for a hearing on the plea that justice had not been done him? Most men who have a case in court or before a legislative body have to be satisfied with an opportunity once to present their case. Mr. Thobe has twice been accorded this privilege, and neither he nor his friends have any cause for complaint at the House refusing him a third hearing.

"If the House should reopen the case it would, I think, establish a dangerous precedent which would return to torment us. No member would feel secure in his seat. Every defeated candidate would be encouraged to contest the seat of his successful opponent, and much useless expense would be entailed upon the people."

Speaker CARLISLE last night authorized a Post reporter to publish an absolute denial of the rumor that he intended to ask the House to do what Mr. Thobe desires. His own words were, "I have not contemplated such a step. The House must take its own course in the case without dictation or attempted dictation from me."

Mr. DIBBLE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIBBLE. Without going into the question whether the article just read affects the rights of individual members or their reputation or conduct in their representative capacity, I submit that this is not a question of privilege of the order which affects the rights of the House collectively; that at most it affects only the rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually—as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, a large minority of members, but still not the House as a whole.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my point of order is, that there is now pending before this House a question of high privilege, affecting the right of a member to his seat, and that until this question is settled the House can not take up and settle, contrary to objection, a question of no higher privilege than the one pending. The regular order has been demanded, and the question of privilege to the decision of which the House is now about to proceed is certainly of as high dignity as that which the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to submit, and must be decided before the other can be in order.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order.

Mr. DIBBLE. The rule covering this point is Rule IX.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read Rule IX.

The Clerk read as follows:

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity only.

Mr. BURROWS. May I call the attention of the Chair to a passage in the Digest commenting upon the rule just read? It is on page 457, and I ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

It has, however, become the well settled practice, when a member rises to a "question of privilege" based upon a newspaper publication, for the Chair to hold that such publication must assail or reflect upon the member in his representative or official capacity; that is, connecting him with alleged corrupt or improper influences as to pending or proposed legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was about to have that portion of the rule or of the Digest read, when the gentleman from Michigan rose. Now, the Chair does not see from the reading of the extract from a newspaper——

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I was simply going to state before the Chair ruled——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair suggested to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if he had anything to say, the Chair would hear him.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to say whether the point of order would have been well taken or not is not material. At that time I assumed probably the point of order may have been in order at the proper time, but not at this time. The Chair having permitted me to make my statement and having allowed to be read the article I complain of, the matter is now before the House. This privileged question, therefore, being in order, having been recognized by the Chair, it is now too late to raise the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that he listened to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to hear his statement and to hear the extract read, but did not allow the gentleman to raise the question of privilege. The Chair was about to have read that extract which the gentleman from Michigan had read, which, if it means anything, means the connection of a member with improper things pending proposed legislation. The Chair does not see that this does connect members in that way—in that gross way suggested by the rule.

Beside, the Chair is ready to rule that when a question of privilege of this kind is raised in the presence of another question of privilege of the highest order, going to the organization of this body in an effective way, it will not receive any other question of privilege until the pending one is disposed of. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRUMM. Only one of the articles was read. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has to say.

Mr. BRUMM. The Chair will hear me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BRUMM. One article was read, but the other article has not been read. The Chair has made up his mind on one article only. I call the Chair's attention to the point where it is stated we voted for political purposes, impugning the motives that we had—that we had not examined the question—which, in my judgment, is a direct charge of corruption against those who voted to investigate this case.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Is this debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sees no reason to change his ruling. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. BRUMM. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRUMM. I will withdraw the appeal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending question is on the adoption of the resolution of the majority of the committee, a quorum not having appeared on the last vote, and the roll will be again called.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 164, nays 7, not voting 152; as follows:

Mr. SOWDEN. I am paired with Mr. DARLINGTON. I voted "aye" upon this question, our pair containing a reservation that it should not break a quorum. I understand there is a quorum without my vote. Hence I withdraw it, and I want this statement to go on record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will go on record.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I would ask if there is a quorum without my vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum has voted, and the Clerk will announce the pairs, if any.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. SPINOLA with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois, until further notice.

Mr. MCCORMICK with Mr. PENINGTON, on all political questions until the 28th instant.

Mr. MCCLAMMY with Mr. NICHOLS, on the contested-election case.

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, in writing, was communicated to the House, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

The message also announced the approval of the following bill:

An act (H. R. 3318) relating to permissible marks, printing or writing, upon second, third, and fourth class mail matter, and to amend the twenty-second and twenty-third sections of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes."

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a correction of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ENLOE. In the RECORD of the 21st of January, in the report of the speech of Mr. Thobe, the contestant for a seat on this floor, I find there is a reflection upon the character of the Committee on Elections and upon the action of the committee, which reflection was not uttered by him in his speech on this floor, but was incorporated afterwards in the revision of his speech. And I wish to state that it was not only no part of his remarks upon the floor, but it goes to the discredit of this publication, which ought to be a correct record of the proceedings of Congress, that such an insertion should be permitted to stand. It is an abuse of the privileges of this body, and I call the attention of the House to it.

I ask the Clerk to read that portion of his speech from the RECORD to which I have referred. It is the part immediately following the reading of the memorial to which he alludes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I submitted that sworn statement, which has just been read, to the Committee on Elections, and it was rejected, disregarded, and returned to me by the chairman, with the following letter:

"HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
"Washington, D. C., January 18, 1888.

"SIR: The chairman of the committee received inclosed affidavit yesterday. To-day he submitted it to the committee, and was directed to return it to you with statement that so far as this committee is concerned the case referred to therein is closed.

"Very respectfully,

"CHARLES F. CRISP.

"J. H. SYPHER, Esq."

Here, then, is a flat and indignant refusal of the committee to even hear me; and they indecently rushed the report through the committee and submitted it to the House before I could reach the Capitol. If I was a criminal charged with a heinous crime I could not have been treated with less respect to my rights as a citizen by this partisan committee.

Mr. ENLOE. Now, I simply desire to say that Mr. Thobe did not use any such language, and the language he did use contained no such reflection upon a committee of this House. The Official Reporter, I understand, says the same thing; that it was incorporated in the revision.

This alleged letter of Mr. CRISP was not read in the hearing of the House; and I want to say further: I am informed that, not being a member of the House, Mr. Thobe had no right to revise his remarks in that manner, by interpolating language that was not uttered on the floor. And furthermore, I wish to say that it is an abuse that members of the House should incorporate in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD language that has not been uttered upon the floor; and I shall protest against it as often as it occurs, for this RECORD has gone to the country time and again, not as a faithful and accurate record of the proceedings and business of this House, but has been a living lie upon those proceedings. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HOGG. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Elections a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order has been demanded, which is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills.

ACCEPTANCE OF PORTRAITS OF EX-SPEAKERS.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a resolution and ask its reference to the Committee on Printing. I understand it to be a privileged resolution.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I object to that part of the RECORD which I have caused to be read, and desire to supplement that objection with the motion to strike it out and substitute what actually took place.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. ENLOE. But this is a question of privilege to have the RECORD corrected.

Mr. JONES. I wish to submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a privileged matter now pending, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 10,000 copies of the addresses delivered in the House of Representatives, on January 19, 1888, upon the presentation of the portraits of Speakers Sedgwick, Varnum, and Banks, for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I think I am entitled as a matter of privilege to have the motion submitted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Another matter of privilege is pending, however. The gentleman from Alabama states that he rises for that purpose.

OBSTRUCTIONS IN THE WILLAMETTE.

Mr. JONES. I am instructed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to report back the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Willamette River, in Oregon, one of the largest navigable and shipping rivers of the Pacific coast, by repeated freshets has so far become deflected from its original channel near the city of Corvallis and by its destruction of the banks as now seriously to threaten the near prevention of navigation at this point and the abandonment of Corvallis as a shipping mart unless timely aid be rendered; and

Whereas five sand-bars have formed in said river between Corvallis and Oregon City and are now formidable impediments to navigation, and urgent necessity exists for immediate improvement: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to inform this House what special action, if any, has been undertaken by the Government, or what is deemed specially necessary, to remedy the imminent dangers to said navigation and commerce on the Willamette River in Oregon.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to whom was referred the foregoing resolution of inquiry, introduced by Mr. HERMANN, having had the same under considerations, beg leave to report it favorably to the House, and recommend its adoption.

The resolution was agreed to.

second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

SHEEP-DIPPING POWDERS.

Mr. BAKER, of New York, also introduced a bill (H. R. 5661) to exempt sheep-dipping powders from customs duties; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS.

Mr. BAKER, of New York, also introduced a bill (H. R. 5662) to grant pensions for service in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

TWENTY-FIRST NEW YORK CAVALRY.

Mr. BAKER, of New York, also introduced a bill (H. R. 5663) for the relief of the surviving members of the Twenty-first Regiment New York Cavalry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

POST-OFFICE CLERKS.

Mr. COX introduced a bill (H. R. 5664) for the classification of clerks in first-class post-offices, and for fixing salaries of the same; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

INSPECTION OF FOREIGN STEAM-VESSELS.

Mr. COX also introduced a bill (H. R. 5665) to amend section 4400 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as to the inspection of foreign steam-vessels; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SECTION 905, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (H. R. 5666) amending section 905 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

OBSTRUCTIONS IN THE HUDSON.

Mr. MAHONEY introduced a bill (H. R. 5667) authorizing the removal of certain obstructions in the Hudson River opposite Poughkeepsie, in the State of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

INCLOSING FORT JOHNSON, NORTH CAROLINA.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, submitted the following joint resolution (H. Res. 88); which was read a first and second time:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Whereas the President in his message transmitting the report of the United States Pacific Railroad Commission to Congress January 17, 1888, after referring to a statement furnished to him showing how some of the operations of the directors of the Central Pacific road strongly condemned by the commissioners are defended by the directors themselves, says, "In view of this statement and the facts developed in the commissioners' reports it seems proper to recall the grants and benefits derived from the General Government by both the Union and Central Pacific Companies for the purpose of aiding the construction of their roads," and while clearly stating that "executive power must be exercised according to existing laws," calls attention to the fact that executive discretion is probably not broad enough to reach such difficulties, and invokes Congress in this language, to wit: "If donated lands are not yet granted to these companies, and if their violations of contract and of duty are such as in justice and morals forfeit their rights to such lands, Congressional action should intervene to prevent further consummation:" Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all further patents or approvals of lands heretofore granted to the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Central Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of their several lines of railway be withheld until a final accounting and settlement be had in pursuance of law by and between the United States and said railroad companies, and complete and ample indemnification be given by said railroad companies or their beneficiaries to secure the Government of the United States against ultimate loss.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I make the point of order that the resolution should go to the Committee on the Public Lands, as it concerns the public lands.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But it is a reference to public lands granted or intended to be granted to the Pacific railroads, and is properly referable to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the resolution should be sent to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. I make the motion, Mr. Speaker, that it be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The question was put to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I demand a division.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. Let the title be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution has been read.

Mr. DUNHAM. We do not know what it is we are voting on, and I ask that the resolution be again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution has been read in its entirety.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 50.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order of no quorum and demand tellers.

Mr. SPRINGER. Have the title again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no title. The entire resolution has been read. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. HOLMAN. To enable us to understand the resolution, I ask it be again read.

The joint resolution was again read.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I would like unanimous consent to make a brief statement of my objections to its reference to the other committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule the reference must be made without debate,

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I understand that, but I simply ask unanimous consent to make a very brief statement to the effect that this bill has already, by the action of this House, been referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and they have had it under consideration. This resolution is simply taking away from the committee that which has already been referred to it by the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is manifest that this does not belong to that committee, but to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. WEAVER. I would like unanimous consent to make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that under the former action of the House referring the President's message on this subject to the Committee on Pacific Railroads the Chair decided that this resolution should be appropriately referred to that committee.

The gentleman from Wisconsin moved that it be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and upon that the House is now dividing. The point that no quorum has voted being made the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. OUTHWAITE were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 90, noes 83.

So the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the joint resolution (H. Mr. GUENTHER. I ask the reference of that bill to the Committee on Claims, as I think it properly belongs there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that this is in the nature of an act to amend an existing law, and relates to the subject-matter referred under the rules of the House to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. While it may embody a claim, it must go, under the rules of the House, to that committee.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and ordered to be printed.

DIVISION OF IDAHO TERRITORY.

Mr. DUBOIS also submitted a memorial of the Legislature of Idaho Territory against any division of Idaho Territory; which was referred to the Committee on the Territories.

Mr. DUBOIS. Inasmuch as this is a matter of great importance to the people of that Territory, I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman, after the call is over, to make that request.

Some time subsequently—

Mr. DUBOIS. I now renew my request to have the memorial printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Secretary's Office, Idaho.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Territory of Idaho, ss:

I, Edward J. Curtis, secretary of the Territory of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete transcript of the original council joint memorial No. 1, passed at the fourteenth session of the Idaho Legislature, 1886-'87, approved by the governor January 12, 1887, as the same appears on the files of this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the Territory. Done at Boisé City, the capital of Idaho, this 9th day of January, A. D. 1888.

[SEAL.]

E. J. CURTIS,
Secretary of Idaho.

Council joint memorial No. 1.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the council and house of representatives of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Idaho, respectfully represent that

Whereas during the thirteenth session of the Legislative Assembly of said Territory of Idaho a joint memorial was passed by said Legislature, praying and asking that when the Territory of Washington is admitted into the Union as a State, that that portion of the Territory of Idaho known as "North Idaho," comprising the counties of Idaho, Nez Perce, Shoshone, and Kootenai, should be annexed to said Washington Territory and accepted as a portion of the State of Washington when admitted into the Union as such; and

Whereas your memorialists, comprising the fourteenth session of the Legislative Assembly of the said Territory of Idaho, would further represent that the grievances, burthens, and insurmountable barriers then complained of in the joint memorial to Congress, passed by the thirteenth session of the Legislature, since then have been almost entirely obviated by the construction of railroads and the opening and building of public thoroughfares through that portion of Idaho which was then sought to be annexed and made part of the Territory or State of Washington, thus making the capital of Idaho as accessible as either the capital of Montana or Washington; and

Whereas your memorialists would further represent that another effort was also made during the session of Congress to attach that portion of our Territory known as "North Idaho" to the Territory of Montana, and when admitted as a State to become part and parcel of the State of Montana; and

Whereas the original area of Idaho Territory embraced 326,373 square miles, which has since been reduced to about 86,000 square miles by the formation of the Territories of Montana and Wyoming out of her domain; and

Whereas we would further represent that by the further slicing propositions which are being agitated another scheme is being inaugurated, that when the disintegration should be consummated in favor of either Washington or Montana, the balance of what may be left of the Territory of Idaho is proposed to be annexed to and form part of the State of Nevada; and

Whereas your memorialists would further represent that our citizens, during the lapse of twenty-four years and upwards, have endured all the privations incidental to a pioneer life; their homes, whether in the valleys or in the mining camps of the mountains, have been secured and beautified under most trying disadvantages. Our mining and agricultural resources, with the aid of railroad facilities, are at present beginning to dawn with prosperity. Our population is greatly multiplying year by year, and all the material elements which make up to place us as one among the States of the Union are gradually and surely increasing. That the idea of segregating nearly one-third of the area of our fair Territory and one-third of our population was conceived and nurtured more especially for political rather than social, commercial, and substantial objects.

Your memorialists further represent that since the passage of the joint memorial, passed at the thirteenth session of the Legislature, the debt of Idaho Territory has been materially increased by the erection of a capitol building and insane asylum; that this debt was increased with the aid and consent of the members from "North Idaho," and that under the bill now pending before Congress it is proposed to segregate the Territory, but no portion of the debt or care of convicts in the penitentiary or patients in the insane asylum is to follow; that by segregating this portion of Idaho it would leave the balance of this Territory at the mercy of the Mormon element in Southeastern Idaho: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the council and house of representatives of the Territory of Idaho now assembled, That we most earnestly protest against any proposition to sever any portion of Idaho with a view of attaching or annexing to any other State or Territory, believing that any such move would prove disadvantageous to any hopes for statehood in the future, and further recognizing the fact that, after the enjoyment and occupancy of the domain for nearly a quarter of a century which Congress had once ceded to us through an organic act, now, at this late day, it would be unjust and impolitic to disintegrate the Territory in any manner or form.

Resolved, That the secretary of the Territory be, and hereby is, instructed to transmit certified copies of this joint memorial and resolution, immediately upon its approval by the governor, to our Delegate in Congress, one copy to be transmitted to the President of the United States and one copy each to the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives in Congress, with the request that the same may be presented to their respective bodies.

Passed the council January 5, 1887.

ALEXANDER E. MAYHEW,
President of the Council.

Passed the house of representatives January 8, 1887.

WM. B. THEWS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved January 12, 1887.

EDWARD A. STEVENSON,
Governor.

[Indorsed.]

I hereby certify that the within council joint memorial No. 1 originated in the council of the Legislative Assembly of Idaho Territory during the fourteenth session.

JAMES H. WICKERSHAM,
Chief Clerk of the Council.

CHARGES AGAINST THE ALASKA COMMERCIAL COMPANY.

Mr. WOODBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution introduced by me for the appointment of a committee to investigate the truth of charges made by the governor of Alaska against the Alaska Fur Company be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The resolution is as follows:

Whereas A. P. Swineford, the governor of Alaska Territory, in his report to the Secretary of the Interior for the fiscal year 1887, arraigns the Alaska Commercial Company for a flagrant and outrageous abuse of the powers and privileges conferred upon it by the Government of the United States, in the manner following, to wit:

"The fur trade of Alaska is practically monopolized by the Alaska Commercial Company, a non-resident corporation, which does not confine its operations to the seal islands leased to it by the Government, but holds and possesses most of the Aleutian chain and the greater part of the mainland as a principality of its own, over which it exercises undisputed sway and control. Clothed by the Government with a monopoly of the seal-fur trade, by which it has profited to the extent of many millions, it has, octopus-like, thrown out its great tentacles and gathered to itself about all there is of value in the fur trade of the whole Territory. It has, by the power of its great wealth, driven away all competition and reduced the native population, wherever its operations are not supervised by Government officials, to a condition of helpless dependence, if not one of absolute and abject slavery. Unhampered by a healthy competition, it offers and compels acceptance by the natives, on pain of starvation, such beggarly prices for their peltry that it manages invariably to keep them in its debt and at its mercy. In order to more effectually monopolize the trade in furs, it at one time marked and mutilated the coin of the United States and refused to receive any other from the natives in payment for goods necessary to their comfort and well-being. Its insatiable greed is such that it is not content with robbing the poor native in the price it sets upon the product of his dangerous toil, but it robs him also in the exorbitant prices it exacts for the goods given in exchange. And there is no appeal; no alternative. There are no other trading stations in all that vast section, and the natives must pay the price asked and accept that which is offered—the first a hundred per cent. advance on the amount at which the same goods are sold to the whites, and the last low enough to add still another hundred per cent. to the company's profit. As, for instance, there is no timber on the Aleutian Islands, and the native who goes out to hunt the sea-otter has no time to provide himself with fuel by gathering drift-wood from the shores, as many are able to do. He must have fuel for the winter, and the company generously takes his sea-otter skins at half their real cash value and pays him in coal at $40 per ton—coal of the same quality as that which it sells to the few white residents for $20. The native who dares to sell his furs for cash to others than the agents of the company finds that his money has no purchasing power at perhaps the only trading station within a distance of several hundred miles, and is thus starved into submission.

"While all this and much more is true concerning its treatment of the native people, instances are not lacking where it has boycotted and driven away from the islands Government officials who, intent upon the honest, faithful discharge of their duties, have incurred the displeasure or refused to do the bidding of its agents. In fact it possesses the power to compel compliance with its every exaction, and wherever it has obtained a foothold neither white man nor native can do more than eke out a miserable existence, save by its sufferance. Without mail communication other than that supplied by the corporation, which is their master, the native people of the sections thus dominated are effectually walled in by the great waters which lie between them and the most advanced outskirts of trade and civilization, and in the absence of all competition are forced to sell their furs at whatever rates the agents of the company may be pleased to offer, and accept payment in goods at prices which no community of people not entirely helpless could or would tolerate. Its paid agents and lobbyists are kept at the national capital to oppose any and every effort that may be made to promote the welfare of Alaska through such legislation as will encourage immigration and the enlistment of capital in the development of the natural wealth hidden away in her forests, streams, and mountains; its every aim and effort is in the direction of prolonging its existence and strengthening its tyrannical hold by a blocking of the wheels of progress; and to its pernicious influence is due the fact that Alaska is not to-day largely populated with an industrious, enterprising, prosperous people; that millions where there are now only hundreds have not long ere this been invested in the development of her many varied, and, as I honestly believe, incomparably great natural resources. I have positive information of flagrant violations of the law and executive orders in relation to the importation and sale of breech-loading fire-arms by its agents; its oppression and robbery of the natives is notorious; the partial responsibility at least of the Government for the wrongs to which the inoffensive native people of the Aleutian Islands and the whole of Northwestern Alaska have been and are still being subjected can not be ignored or denied.

"If it can not legally be rescinded, the lease to and contract with this company ought not to be renewed. It is not, in my opinion, necessary to the preservation of seal life or the seal-fur industry that the islands on which the rookeries are located should be leased to any corporation or individual, but if it be held that I am wrong in that regard, then I do not hesitate to aver that it would be better for Alaska, better for the Government, and, above all, far better for the enslaved Aleuts that every fur seal in Alaskan waters should be exterminated at one fell swoop than that such a blighting monopoly should be perpetuated. It is manifestly the duty of Government to protect the weak against the strong, to shield the poor and helpless from wrong and oppression; yet here we have thousands of the latter class, who by solemn treaty stipulation were guarantied enjoyment of "all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States," practically enslaved, and a professedly free and liberal Government not only creating but actually protecting their oppressions, and that, too, against a restless spirit of enterprise which, unhindered, would people the best portions of Alaska with a thrifty population and add untold millions to the wealth of the nation.

"I have said that the leasing of the seal islands is not necessary to the preservation of the industry; neither is it, as so persistently claimed, and as I was at first inclined to believe, essential that a fur-seal monopoly should be maintained in order to secure the largest revenue to the Government. Manifestly, the natives of the seal and adjoining islands have the first and best right to profit by an industry which may truly be said to have come to them by inheritance. They are not Indians, but a peaceful, honest people of much natural intelligence, and capable of transacting business for themselves. They can nearly all read and write in their own or the Russian language, and if most of the younger men and women on St. Paul and St. George are not fairly well educated in English, the fact can only be accounted for on the theory that the Alaska Commercial Company has not complied faithfully with that provision of its contract which requires it to maintain schools on those islands for at least eight months in each year.

"Instead of practically enslaving them by farming out to others that which is theirs by right of inheritance, it seems to me that the Government should secure to them at least a fair share of the profits, and that its duty is to protect and, if possible, perpetuate the seal fisheries for their benefit, and not in the almost exclusive interest of organized greed and corporate monopoly. To accomplish this it is only necessary that regulations be promulgated by the proper department prohibiting the killing of seals on the islands of St. Paul and St. George by any but natives, prescribing the number that may be killed in each year, the mode of killing, and imposing all the other restrictions now in force. It would require no greater number of agents to supervise the killing by natives than are now employed to watch and guard the interests of the Government, if as many. The skins could then be sold in open market by the natives themselves, in the presence of or by a Government agent acting in their behalf, and whose duty it should be made to collect from purchasers a Government tax of not less than $5 on each skin sold. By such a plan a much larger permanent revenue would be assured to the Government, the natives secured in the free enjoyment of their rights, and a monopoly wholly inimical to the best interests of the Territory shorn of a large part of its tyrannical power. Conceived (as there is abundant evidence to show) in corruption, born in iniquity, and nurtured and grown strong and insolent on ill-gotten gains wrung from a hapless and helpless people, this giant monopoly, which rests like a blighting curse upon the progress and welfare of this great Territory, should be shorn of its corruptly-secured, much-abused franchise with no more delay than may be absolutely necessary.

"The mortality rate as compared to the number of births furnished me by the authorities of the Greco-Russian Church indicates the gradual extinction of the native people, particularly the Aleuts on Ounalaska Island, the population of which was 1,065 in 1882; 326 deaths have since been recorded, while there have been only 158 births. During the past summer an epidemic carried off a large number of the people at Belkofsky and on the Shumagin Islands; a very heavy rate of mortality is also reported from Kenai and Bristol Bay, occasioned by pulmonary diseases, to which the natives, owing to exposure and want of proper precaution, are generally subject. In my opinion, if some effective measures are not taken to ameliorate their condition the complete extinction of the native inhabitants of the Aleutian Islands and on some parts of the mainland will be a question of comparatively short time only. A removal of the disabilities imposed by the grinding monopoly which has destroyed their every ambition, and made them reckless of lives scarcely worth the living, would give them new hope, and tend to an indefinite prolongation of their existence as a people. The civil government is powerless in the premises, having as yet been unable by reason of the absence of mail communication or means of transportation, to extend to them the poor protection of its qualified, limited, and altogether doubtful authority. To a higher governmental power, one they do not know in their present deplorable condition of abject dependence how to reach, and if they did would not dare appeal to, must they look for a redress of wrongs which would not for so long a time have been quietly endured by any people anywhere in the slightest degree less patient and helpless;" and

Whereas the foregoing statements are substantially corroborated by other officers and citizens of the Government having knowledge thereof; and

Whereas the charges therein contained involve the rights, liberties, and property of American citizens, the development and prosperity of one of the most important Territories of the Union, and the character and honor of the nation itself, the obligations of duty resting upon the Administration now in power as well as upon Congress to the American people demand that Congress investigate at once the truth of the statements hereinbefore recited from the report of Governor Swineford, to the end that if found true the extraordinary powers and privileges heretofore granted by Congress to said company be promptly rescinded and such provisions made as will protect the property of the Government and the rights of American citizens in the Territory of Alaska: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized and instructed to appoint a committee of five members of the House, whose duty it shall be to inquire into the truth of the statements hereinbefore recited, and whether the lease under which said company is now operating is conducive to the best interests of the Government of the United States, and whether it would be just and expedient for the Government to terminate the same and to take charge of the said islands and to take upon itself the care and custody of the seal life on said islands and of the waters of the Alaska Territory, and that said committee shall, when so constituted, be authorized to employ a stenographer, with full power to send for persons and papers, books, and vouchers, and report thereon with all convenient speed to this House.

SPOLIATION OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution introduced by me in relation to fraudulent practices in connection with the public lands be also printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The resolution is as follows:

Whereas the Irish World of January 21, instant, asserts the following:

"A SAMPLE OF LAND STEALING.

"The story of the way the California Redwood Company came into the possession of 64,000 acres of most valuable timber land, estimated to be worth $22,000,000, shows the kind of barefaced fraud that has been practiced upon the Government by foreign land thieves. What is known as the California Redwood Company consists of an English president and a Scotch board of directors. Some time ago these land thieves determined to steal from the American people the lands we have spoken of. It was true that bribery and perjury of the most startling kind would have to be resorted to before they could carry out their designs. They, however, cared very little for that. They had made up their minds to cheat the United States of $22,000,000 worth of land, and they were not going to be deterred by the prospect of having to go into the bribery and perjury business by the wholesale.

"They began by hiring an agent whose duty it was to get persons to make fraudulent entries, which were immediately transferred to the syndicate of foreign thieves. The consideration in each case was $50 for the 160 acres thus transferred. Four hundred men were each bribed with this sum to make entries under the homestead act, which were immediately deeded to the Redwood Company. In every case the entry included a part of the timber land that the foreign syndicate wanted to steal. Whenever there was difficulty about obtaining American citizens to perjure themselves in the interest of the land thieves, orders were given to have sham naturalization papers made out for foreigners who never intended to become bona fide citizens of the United States.

"In the county where the stolen lands are situated 309 aliens filed with the clerk of the county court their sworn declaration of intention of becoming citizens of the United States, a preliminary indispensable in order to make a land entry. Although four years have elapsed since these declarations were made, only 37 of those making them have up to date taken out their final papers. The following testimony of the keeper of a sailors' boarding-house shows the way in which the business of making false entries was conducted:

"'Marks and Beach (the agents of the Scotch syndicate) came to me and proposed that I should have some seamen boarding at my house, awaiting to be shipped, file land entries. He agreed to pay me the entry fees of twelve. I agreed, and we fixed up the business. After the twelve men, all I had in the house, had filed at the land office on numbers given by Marks, I had them go before the notary public, and they signed twelve deeds in blank. Most of these men were not citizens of the United States. I saw the men sign. Then I shipped the men off to sea as quickly as possible.'

"In this case it was not necessary to go through the formality of getting out first papers, as the alien sailors who made the entries could be easily shipped out of the way and no further inquiries would be made about them. As each of the twelve men supplied by the boarding-house keeper entered a claim for 160 acres, the Scotch syndicate obtained 1,920 acres of rich timber land for the insignificant sum of $600, their agent having given each of the sailors $50 for deeding his claim to the syndicate.

"By frauds of this kind a band of English and Scotch thieves have stolen from the Government land whose value exceeds by seven millions the amount that England was compelled to pay to the United States for the damages done by the Alabama. Judged by the standard of the Geneva award, the California Redwood Company, composed exclusively of Englishmen and Scotchmen, has done once and a half as much injury to the United States as was done by the privateer that England sent forth to drive the Stars and Stripes from the seas. When we consider that the syndicate we have been speaking of is only one of many similar English corporations that are engaged in the business of stealing our public lands, we can form an estimate of the amount of plunder gathered in by these foreign land thieves. There is enough of evidence to prove the frauds by which large slices of the public domain have been stolen by foreign syndicates. Under these circumstances the duty of Congress is plain. It should compel the foreign land thieves to restore to the people of the United States every foot of land they have stolen;" and

Whereas it is matter of common knowledge that similar frauds have been practiced upon other parts of the public domain: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands are hereby directed to examine what further legislation, if any, is needed to protect the Government from such fraudulent practices, and what further legislation, if any, is necessary to secure to the Government a reclamation of lands thus fraudulently obtained, with leave to report at any time by bill or otherwise.

Hewitt, and three others, constituting a committee appointed at a public meeting of citizens of New York, in favor of a treaty between the United States and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland providing for an arbitration of any differences arising between the two countries. The petition has been carefully and ably drawn in the representation and enforcement of the principal topics that relate to this subject; and in asking that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations I beg leave to ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks that the petition he has just presented may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the petition will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed in the RECORD.

The petition is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the undersigned respectfully represents that five of them were appointed by the mayor of the city of New York to be a committee, of which he was to be ex officio a member, pursuant to a resolution of a public meeting of citizens, to urge upon the Congress and the President the making of a treaty with Great Britain for the settlement by arbitration of differences that may arise between that country and our own; and in pursuance of this appointment they beg leave to present this memorial.

The occasion of the meeting was to receive a deputation of Englishmen who had come hither to present to the Congress and President a memorial signed by 233 members of the House of Commons, in favor of a treaty between the United States of America and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, stipulating for a reference to arbitration of all differences between the two countries which could not be settled by diplomacy. The fact of such a memorial is a signal manifestation of confidence and good-will, and the characters of those who signed it and of those who presented it require for it respectful attention. As citizens of a friendly nation we can not be insensible to this manifestation, and as lovers of peace we can not be inattentive to the direction in which public sentiment is tending among the people from whom we derived our origin. Our pride of country will not suffer us to lag behind our English brethren in the interchange of fraternal sentiments and in co-operation for the welfare of man.

The aim of the proposal is to confirm the friendship and increase the security of each nation. Not that each is not strong enough to repel all attacks, but we know by what suffering and sacrifice an attack is repelled, and therefore how wise and prudent it is to lessen the chances of its coming.

If we look beyond ourselves, it is something to consider what may be the effect of such a treaty as we propose upon the future of mankind. While it is true that if our two nations can not agree to form such a treaty no other nations can, it is also true that when once we shall have made it our example must have an influence upon other branches of the human family. If the world should see, as we hope it will, that the two great English-speaking nations have promised to live in peace with each other, and have kept the promise and prospered in the keeping, it would not be long before the spectacle would attract the attention and the sympathy of other nations, and by the force of self-interest lead them to disburden themselves of their intolerable armaments and leaving the ranks of unprosperous war take the side of prosperous peace.

It is the daily prayer of one of the churches of Christendom, "Give us peace in our time, O Lord," and a like prayer goes up from every holy temple.

War is not what it used to be in the days of our fathers. The General of our Army has lately declared, on a public occasion, that the weapons of warfare have become so destructive that they must needs cause wars to cease and oblige nations to resort to arbitration for the settlement of their disputes, or, he might have added, modern warfare will reduce mankind to the barbarism of the primeval ages.

War being an unspeakable evil, how shall a nation be prevented from attacking another for some cause, real or feigned, some grievance or some pretense? This is our answer: "By agreeing beforehand that it will not attack without first offering to submit its grievances to impartial arbitrators." This would at once put an end to simulated grievances and furnish a remedy for real ones. It would substitute the arbitrament of reason for the arbitrament of the sword. It is easy for a cavalier to say that an agreement to arbitrate made before a dispute began will not be kept when the passions become hot in its progress. This, however, can not be known until the method has been tried. Show us the instance in which an agreement to submit to arbitration the differences between two nations has been broken, and we will admit that the objection may have force.

Since the general pacification of 1815 there have been nearly sixty instances of arbitration for the settlement of international disputes, some of them involving the great questions of international right and some only the ascertainment of extent of injury. The following is a list, imperfect perhaps, but sufficiently accurate to show that the measure is not only not visionary but eminently practicable:

1. Arbitration between the United States and Great Britain in 1816 (about St. Croix River and the lakes).
2. The United States and Great Britain in 1818 (about obligation to restore slaves). Referred to the Emperor of Russia.

55. Peru and Japan (about the seizure of a Peruvian bark).
56. Nicaragua and Costa Rica (about boundary). Referred to President Cleveland in July, 1887.
57. The Berlin congress of 1878 was really a court of arbitration, held by seven principal powers, to settle the claims of all the different states in the Balkan Peninsula.
58. The Danubian commission, established in 1856, is really a standing international arbitration.

These are instances of occasional arbitration; arbitration entered into as a controversy happened to arise. Within the last two decades a strong movement has been made towards permanent agreements to arbitrate, either general, for all differences, or special, for questions of a particular character, as, for example, the interpretation of treaties.

The history of this movement is instructive. In July, 1872, a resolution, moved by Mr. Henry Richard, was passed by the British House of Commons in favor of an instruction to the foreign secretary to "enter into communication with foreign powers with a view to the further improvement of international law and the establishment of a general system of international arbitration." The example was soon followed in other countries. In November, 1873, a resolution was passed unanimously by the Italian Chamber of Deputies in favor of arbitration. In March, 1874, the Second Chamber of the Swedish Diet adopted a similar resolution. So did the States-General of the Netherlands in the November following. In January, 1875, a motion to the same effect was carried in the Belgian Chamber of Deputies and afterwards adopted unanimously by the Senate. Although the question has not yet been formally brought forward in the French Assembly, a resolution was carried there in 1878 referring a petition that had been presented on the subject to the minister of foreign affairs, "to whom," it was added, "shall be left in charge to determine the opportune moment when this idea, already tried with success, should be submitted for the consent of states whose constitution and principles are best adapted for seeking in concert its realization."

In 1878, an Italian statesman, Mr. Mancini, knowing that his government was about to negotiate or renew treaties of commerce with other countries, carried a resolution in the Italian Chamber recommending that such treaties be accompanied by a stipulation for settlement by arbitration of controversies respecting their interpretations or the consequences of their violations. He was afterwards appointed minister for foreign affairs, and himself negotiated some eighteen or nineteen treaties, each accompanied by the arbitral stipulation, one of which was concluded with Great Britain in 1883.

The Berlin congress of 1884, in which fifteen different powers were represented, held for the settlement of the relations between the different states on the Congo, contained a provision for arbitration in case of disputes between these states.

Switzerland in 1883 proposed to the United States to enter into an arbitral convention for thirty years, binding the contracting parties to submit any differences arising between them to a tribunal of three members, one to be chosen by each party and the third by those two, or, if they should disagree, by a neutral government. Regarding this proposal the President made use of the following language in his annual message to Congress:

"The Helvetian Confederation has proposed the inauguration of a class of international treaties for the referment to arbitration of grave questions between nations. This Government has assented to the proposed negotiation of such a treaty with Switzerland."

Colombia and Honduras have entered into a treaty by which they have bound themselves to submit all differences to arbitration, the arbitrator to be the President of the United States for the time being, if the parties do not agree upon a different arbitrator.

Our own country has not only shown its own disposition in favor of arbitration by the repeated agreements that we have mentioned, but by many expressions of public men. A resolution in favor of general arbitration was passed by the House of Representatives in 1874. One was introduced into the Senate in 1882. Another is now pending in the Senate.

President Grant by example and by precept recommended such a course to his countrymen. In an address to a Philadelphia society, after his return from a voyage around the world, he said, "Though I have been trained as a soldier, and have participated in many battles, there never was a time when, in my opinion, some way could not have been found of preventing the drawing of the sword. I look forward to an epoch when a court recognized by all nations will settle international differences instead of keeping large standing armies, as they do in Europe."

Presidents Hayes and Garfield did not hesitate to declare their concurrence in the same views.

These instances answer the objection that arbitration for the settlement of international disputes is not a practical measure. Other objections have been made, but we think it easy to answer them. It has been said that for a nation to bind itself beforehand to submit its disputes to arbitrators is to waive its independence. They who say this forget that the engagement is reciprocal, and that when we bind ourselves not to make war upon England, she also binds herself not to make war upon us, and that would be a great step in advance towards that peace on earth which we profess to believe is to follow the military ages, and to be demanded alike by the dictates of reason and the precepts of religion. We do not bind ourselves to submit to wrongs of aggression; we but agree not to commit the wrongs ourselves. When, soon after the close of the last war with England, we agreed with her to keep only a nominal force of ships of war on the Great Lakes, we were not shorn of our independence any more than she was shorn of hers. We agreed that it was better for us, and for all our people on both sides of the line, that the waters of these inland seas should be reserved for the white sails of commerce, without menace or disquiet from rival armaments. We bound ourselves, as great and brave nations, to do what great and brave men do in private life: walk peacefully and confidently, under the protection of mutual faith and honor.

It has been asked, Why provide against possible contention? Wait for its coming, and then, if diplomacy fail us, resort to arbitration. We answer, that this is not the way men do in civilized communities. They provide beforehand the requisite machinery for terminating disputes, because that is the best for the peace and order of society. The fact that repression is ready tends to prevent aggression. The effervescence of passion finds a vent, and an explosion from pent-up forces is prevented.

It has been said that a promise in all cases to arbitrate would deprive us of weapons of retaliation, less than war, like those threatened lately in respect of the fisheries. We answer, that it is war and war only, the great, dominant, overwhelming evil, which it is the aim of the present movement to prevent. It is the bloody conflict of arms, the human butchery, the cities bombarded, the homes decimated, the widows and children left desolate; it is these which we seek to prevent, and it is the means of preventing them that we are urging upon Congress, the Executive, and the country.

It has been said that a tribunal of arbitration would furnish no radical cure for international jealousies. Perhaps it would not. It is war, not jealousies, that the proposal of arbitration seeks to prevent. Courts of law do not furnish a radical cure, nor any cure at all, for jealousies between citizens of the same State or the same city. Whoever thought of that as a reason for abolishing the tribunals of justice?

It has been said that our experience of international arbitration has not been encouraging. This is said because the Halifax tribunal decided against us. But what about the Alabama tribunal, which decided for us? Do we measure our approval by our success? What, moreover, will our adversaries say? They lose if we gain. The objectors forget that when two engage in an arbitration or a lawsuit, one or the other must lose. But what is the loss of ten millions or a hundred millions compared with the loss of a great war to both the combatants? It has been said that the cost of the battle of Solferino would have sufficed to build a ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien.

Another class of objectors bid us to bear in mind the unfriendly feelings which the English people have frequently manifested towards us; the two cruel wars we have had with them, and the disdain with which they have sometimes, though long ago and ignorantly, affected to treat us, and would make these recollections reasons for not agreeing to arbitration with them now. To our minds these are the very reasons for providing beforehand an honorable means of settling possible disputes. We might add that we have something better to do than to brood over the hates of buried generations.

Yet even in the old days of misapprehension and distrust there were not wanting words of conciliation and promise of mutual forbearance. The first treaty concluded between Great Britain and the United States, under their present Constitution, declared that there should be a "firm, inviolable, and universal peace" between the English King and people and our people, and it provided for two arbitrations to adjust reciprocal claims of English subjects and American citizens for injuries sustained during the war. By a separate article of the treaty it was "expressly stipulated that neither of the contracting parties would (will) order or authorize any acts of reprisal against the other on complaints of injuries or damages, until the said party should (shall) first have presented to the other a statement thereof and verified by competent proof and evidence, and demanded justice and satisfaction, and the same should (shall) either have been refused or unreasonably delayed."

We know that it is one of the traditions of our Republic to avoid entangling alliances, and we do not wish to break the tradition. The treaty which we advocate creates no entanglement and no alliance. It would not bind us to help our kinsmen beyond the sea any more than it would bind them to help us. On the contrary, it would bind them to let us alone, if we let them alone. The tradition has not prevented our entering into many treaties; the statute-books are full of them. There are treaties of amity and commerce with every civilized country on the face of the earth, filled with minute regulations for the conduct of government and people, and we are at this moment engaged in daily transactions, numberless in fact, under a postal convention, concluded at Berne, in 1874, by which we have bound ourselves to twenty other sovereign states.

The people of the United States may take pride to themselves that in so many instances they have submitted their differences to the decision of arbitrators, and have done so oftener than any other people in the world. We shall thus be following only our own precedents if we propose the policy of arbitration to any of our associates in the family of nations, and more than all if we propose it to our kindred over the water, one with us in blood, one in speech, and one in free institutions.

We beg, therefore, most respectfully to ask from Congress the passage of a joint resolution, requesting the President to propose to the Government of Great Britain the making of a treaty between the two nations, for a limited period at least, providing in substance that in case a difference should arise between them respecting the interpretation of any treaty which they have made or may hereafter make with each other, or any claim of either under the established law of nations, or respecting the boundary of any of their respective possessions, or respecting any wrong alleged to have been committed by either nation upon the other or its members, or any duty omitted, it shall be the earnest endeavor of both the contracting parties to accommodate the difference by conciliatory negotiation; and that in no event shall either nation begin a war against the other without first offering to submit the difference between them to arbitrators, chosen as may be then agreed, or if there be no different agreement, then by three arbitrators, one to be chosen by each party, and an umpire by those so chosen; it being understood, however, that arbitration as thus provided for shall not extend to any question respecting the independence or sovereignty of either nation, its equality with other nations, its form of government, its internal affairs, or its continental policy.

And your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray, etc., etc.

Wells, and other citizens of the State of Florida and county of Fernando, praying for the forfeiture of the grant of public lands made in 1856 to the State of Florida for the construction of certain lines of railroad in that State. The petitioners allege that these roads have never been built in compliance with the terms of the act of Congress, that they are not now built, and that no grant has ever been made by the State of Florida to any of these corporations of the lands obtained under this grant. The petitioners further allege that they are settlers upon the public lands who have placed valuable improvements upon them, and that they are now notified by persons claiming these railroad grants that they can not have their lands unless they pay $30 an acre. They submit correspondence with the agents of the railroad company, and ask Congress to enact certain legislation for their protection. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD RECEIVERS.

Mr. CALL. I give notice, in connection with the petition I have just presented, that on Monday next, after the morning hour, I shall ask leave to address some observations to the Senate upon the resolution which I submitted on the 12th of December, and which now lies on the table, looking to such legislation as may be necessary to protect creditors in their liens on railroads under the management of receivers.

THE CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY BUILDING.

Mr. VEST. I present the memorial of Elias E. Barnes, of the city of Washington, in regard to the work being done on the Congressional Library building; and I wish to say a few words in relation to the matter before asking the reference of the memorial to the appropriate committee.

Soon after the holiday recess I offered a resolution inquiring into the cause of the delay in the construction of the Congressional Library building. As I have received a large number of communications, some of them anonymous, and others from persons of whom I know nothing, in regard to that resolution, making all sorts of charges against the architect, I wish to say that I submitted that resolution without consultation with anybody. I do not know the Mr. Barnes whose memorial I hold in my hand, and who is a contractor on the foundation for that building. I used the words of the resolution deliberately, without consultation with any human being. I happened to be passing by the site of the Library building and I was astounded to find that after some five months the foundation, even, had not been prepared. It struck me as a remarkable state of case, considering the amount of money we had appropriated and the elaborate preparations which had been made for the construction of that building, and as a public official and a citizen of the United States I felt it my duty to offer the resolution.

After the resolution was offered I had a conversation with Mr. Spofford, who is upon the commission, and with Mr. Clark, the public architect, and they gave such entirely antagonistic reasons why the work had not gone on that I was confirmed in the propriety of having acted as I did.

In response to that resolution I find a report from the Library Commission which I glanced over and which gives Mr. Smithmeyer's side of the case. In this memorial, which I have not read and which was brought to me last night by the attorney of Mr. Barnes, I presume his side of the question is given.

Without knowing anything about the merits of the question, but with full knowledge of the personnel of the commission, acquired by reason of my having served for ten years upon the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I wish to say that if the commission remains as it is now constituted the youngest man in Washington City will never see that building completed. The relations between the public architect and Mr. Smithmeyer are such that they will never agree, in my judgment, upon any proposition connected with that building.

With that remark, I simply submit this memorial, without taking any sides in the controversy, and with the view only that the building shall be completed as rapidly as possible.

I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES subsequently said: While I was absent from my seat a few moments ago the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] presented the memorial of Elias E. Barnes on the subject of cement, etc., for the Congressional Library building. The memorial was referred to the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library, and I ask that it may be printed so that it will be convenient to look at; and at the proper time I shall have something to say on the subject.

Mr. VEST. Let it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be printed, if there be no objection.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. On the 19th instant I made a report on the bill (H. R. 1213) to punish robbery, burglary, and larceny in the Indian Territory. By mistake I sent the wrong paper up to be printed. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that report and substitute the report which I send to the Secretary's desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitution will be made by unanimous consent, no objection being made.

On motion of Mr. GRAY it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Mrs. Margaret R. Jones, widow of Col. William Hemphill Jones, be withdrawn from the files, under the rules.

PACIFIC RAILWAY COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. HOAR. I desire, if this be a proper time, to call up the motion to reconsider the vote sending the President's message in regard to the Pacific railroads to a special committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the motion offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] on a previous day to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the appointment of a select committee for the consideration of the Pacific Railway Commission report.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I believe that on consideration there will be no considerable objection in the Senate to the passage of the original resolution.

My purpose in making the motion was twofold. It is known that the Judiciary Committee, a standing committee of this body, has had this subject under consideration in one way and another for a good while. Of course I should be the last Senator to question the capacity of that committee to deal with that or any other subject within its jurisdiction; but it so happens that it is a necessity for that committee to deal with the business before it without giving any hearings to persons interested. The pressure of business is so great that if the committee depart from that rule it must leave a very large part of its ordinary business unconsidered at every session.

It is exceedingly important that legislation on this subject, which is of great public interest and concern, which involves dealing with accounts and figures in ascertaining what it is in the power of these roads to do on the one side, and what would be the absolute security for the Government on the other, should be considered by a committee that can summon the parties, or their representatives, and can summon the officers of the Government and the representatives of its interests to their personal presence.

In the next place, this subject was, with the concurrence of the Senate, of course, sent by Congress to a special commission. It has been made the object of a special executive message. It would seem, therefore, eminently proper that so important a matter, involving more than a hundred millions of debt shortly to become due to the Government, should be dealt with by a special committee.

Under these circumstances I trust my honorable friend from Maryland will yield to the force of the suggestion which I have made.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, when I entered the motion for a reconsideration, it was simply under the general impression that a subject of this magnitude, like all the main questions which come before the Senate, would be much better considered by one of the standing committees of the body.

However, for the reasons stated by the Senator from Massachusetts a moment since, and for others which have come to my knowledge, I think possibly the best disposition of this question is to have it considered by a special committee. But, I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts, if he will permit the vote by which the resolution was adopted to be reconsidered, to amend his resolution so as to create a committee of seven instead of five. I understand that if the committee were so formed it would give more general satisfaction. I therefore suggest to him, if the vote be reconsidered, that there be a simple increase of the committee to seven.

Mr. HOAR. I make no objection to that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, as the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, for one I shall be extremely glad to have that committee relieved of the amount of labor that has hitherto been necessary in the consideration of this subject.

The only legislation we have so far had that asserted any rights of the Government in respect of these railways and grants, came from the Committee on the Judiciary; and it has, twice I am sure, on this subject of ending the affair in the best way possible, reported measures that, if the Senate had agreed to them, these railways would probably have accepted. The upshot of those measures, stated shortly, would have been to have given the United States a security upon every species of property that these railways have acquired, either directly or indirectly, and in whosever name or under whatever form they might stand, to have a security and a mortgage covering every possible available asset in the resource of these companies.

It provided, it is true (and necessarily, if we adopt the President's suggestion of not taking these roads at the end of seven or eight years from now), for giving a long time for payment. If accepted by the companies it would have saved the United States many millions of dollars—the precise amount I have forgotten—on a disputed question of interest on the payments that we are now making upon the coupons of the bonds of the United States, the liability to pay which the companies denied, and in respect of which there is considerable reason to fear the legal right of the United States may be somewhat doubtful. I state it with great moderation. But the committee insisted upon it that if we were to give this length of time and have this universal security, the United States must be reimbursed to a large extent—one-half, I believe, at least—for the interest upon the money that we are paying out, although the companies denied their liability to pay a single cent of it. That would have saved a great many millions of dollars.

But we have reported and reported, and the Senate has not thought it fit to adopt the measures that we have suggested, and therefore I am sure that every member of the committee will be glad to be relieved from any further labor in the business, and have the best special committee that can be devised to take hold of it and see if they can propose anything which will meet the approval of the Senate.

That something ought to be done, and done speedily, I believe; for I think that every day, instead of improving, rather injures the situation in respect of the safety of the United States with regard to the enormous sums that we have advanced. So I shall be very glad if the Senate will have a select committee to see whether they can propose anything that will be better for the interest of the United States than what the Committee on the Judiciary has endeavored to do.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I want to supplement what has been so well stated by the Senator from Vermont by simply saying that since this resolution was adopted, to which I made no opposition with my colleagues on the Committee on the Judiciary, some have supposed that it might be regarded as a reflection on that committee to take this subject away from that committee, where it has been considered very carefully, and put it in the hands of a special committee. It has been suggested that that might be considered as a reflection upon the competency of the Judiciary Committee to act upon the question. I must confess that that aspect of the case never presented itself to me until it was suggested.

As the Senator from Vermont has stated, this question was sent to the Judiciary Committee, then before a subcommittee consisting of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], and myself. We worked earnestly and faithfully to formulate a bill. It did not suit me entirely as it did not suit the views of the other members of the committee in all respects; but it was the very best measure we could at that time recommend. It came to the Senate and no attention whatever was paid to it. All sorts of reflections and insinuations were made in the press of the country about the motives of the committee in reporting such a measure. I thought then and think now that it was the very best that could be done, for the greatest calamity that could happen to this Government would be its being forced in any sort of way to take possession of these railroads. We reported a measure which saved millions of dollars to the Government, which I repeat was the very best that in my opinion could be made. The Senator from Vermont says it was treated with perfect indifference, except by the newspapers, and they maligned and abused everybody connected with that report.

Now, sir, for myself individually, I want nothing more to do with it, except to cast my vote when this special committee, which I hope will be created, shall make its report. As a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, I do not propose to serve upon any committee connected with this matter. For one, I have done all in my power to discharge my duties as I thought they ought to be discharged, and I am done with the subject, except the responsibility of a Senator in voting upon any measure that may be proposed.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to add one word, to show the importance in a matter of this kind of having a committee that can give parties a hearing.

When the measure for the extension of the indebtedness of these roads was framed, a measure was originally introduced and reported from the committee which required the roads to pay a certain sum of money yearly, beginning with a smaller sum and increasing until the whole payment should be made. That was considered on reflection too favorable to the roads, and the committee then authorized a report by which the larger payment was to be made first and the payments gradually diminished year after year.

On that being called to the attention of the representatives of the two principal roads concerned, it appeared that in the case of one, and I think it was still more so in the case of the other, that sum would entirely exhaust the receipts of the road, leaving nothing for various necessary annual expenditures. Accordingly a measure was carefully devised, which I reported to the committee in the first place, and it received their assent, which was intended to equalize the payments so that they could be made at the beginning of the period of extension instead of at the end of the period of extension alike. I was myself personally responsible for that opinion. The Committee on the Judiciary took it upon my authority, and no other member of that committee had the slightest responsibility for it, except so far as any gentleman who accepts a computation of a clerk on the authority of another, without going over it himself, is held to be responsible.

After that had been reported to the Senate, by the authority of the committee, my honorable friend from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who sits next to me, and who looks after matters pretty sharply, called my attention to the fact that the sum which we proposed should be paid annually to the United States would not be sufficient in regard to quite a number of millions of dollars to repay the indebtedness to the United States; in other words, there was an error against the Government in that calculation. I called the attention of the committee to it in private after the Senator had told me of it, and I stated in the Senate that when the bill came up a correction would necessarily be made in that particular. Well, it was not long before a large portion of the press of the country began to cast on the different members of the Judiciary Committee a charge of having a corrupt understanding with those roads in the preparation of this report. Whatever there was of responsibility for that error belongs to me, and no other human being. Whatever credit is due for the discovery of it belongs to the honorable Senator from Ohio, and no other human being, so far as I know.

If we had had, before I made that report, the presence of the representatives of the Government with a skillful accountant, and the presence of the representatives of the roads, that error never would have occurred. But the Judiciary Committee not only, as I have stated already, is compelled to do its business without giving hearings, but ordinarily it is the custom of that committee, for very good reasons which have prevailed ever since it was organized, probably, to refuse to disclose its report on any matter until the report is absolutely made to the Senate. Such a special committee as is proposed will certainly avoid any such mistake as that.

Mr. PLATT. I do not rise to oppose this motion, but simply to make an observation or two on the situation.

I should be exceedingly glad if the Judiciary Committee felt that they could continue the work which the Senate once assigned to them and consider this matter and report upon it, and I feel that the Judiciary Committee ought to do it. I judge from what has been said here this morning that the reason the Judiciary Committee declines to do it is purely from a feeling of sensitiveness on the part of the members of that committee. My very great respect for the members of that committee will probably lead me to indulge them in the exercise of this sensitiveness and to vote for the special committee; but it is unfortunate, I think.

The members of the Judiciary Committee are selected not only for their great legal ability, but for their great familiarity with public affairs and their general ability to deal with a question of this sort. I know that they have been subjected to criticisms which are unpleasant; but that falls to the lot of all Senators. In the short time I have been here, and in the few reports which I have made, I have found that the Senate not only does not accept the reports of the committee which I represent in many instances, but in a great many instances unceremoniously sets them aside. I have sometimes felt sensitive myself under such circumstances; and I have had some little criticism in the newspapers about my motives and conduct. I think it the common lot of all Senators that when they attempt to discharge their duty, and to do it conscientiously and without fear or favor of any man, somebody will arise to criticise them and ascribe to them improper motives. I simply rose to say that if the committees of this body are to refuse or decline or to ask to be excused from the consideration of matters simply because of public criticism, or even contemptuous treatment of their reports by the Senate, we can not get along with the business of the body.

It seems to me that the appointment of a special committee here is simply to create another committee to receive the criticism which might otherwise fall upon the Judiciary Committee. As I said, I do not oppose the motion, but I wanted simply in these few words to state what appears to me, to use the phrase of a distinguished man, the condition of affairs.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I desire to say, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, that I believe that committee can deal with these questions, and that the duty need not be imposed on a special committee. I feel no embarrassment myself touching the subject. I think the Judiciary Committee, if the matter is left with that committee, will do the subject full justice.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to express my concurrence with what has just been said by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE]. I feel no embarrassment, so far as I am concerned, in examining and reporting upon this important question, nor do I feel any chagrin at any criticisms which the action of the committee heretofore on this subject has received from the Senate, or the press.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the message was referred to a special committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I now move to amend, by striking out "five" and inserting "seven."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland moves to amend the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I accept that amendment.

Mr. SABIN. I ask for the reading of the resolution as it now stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the resolution was never reduced to writing, but is merely journalized upon the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the Journal entry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal entry will be read.

Mr. HOAR. It is the ordinary motion to commit to a special committee of five.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks that the motion may be read. It will be read as it appears on the Calendar.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A resolution to authorize the appointment of a select committee of five to which shall be referred the message of the President on the Pacific railroads.

"January 18, 1888—Mr. HOAR; agreed to. Motion to reconsider entered."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota desire a further statement of the resolution?

Mr. SABIN. Do I understand that there is a motion pending before the Senate now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to amend the resolution, the vote by which it was adopted having been reconsidered, by striking out "five" and inserting "seven" as the number of the special committee.

Mr. HOAR. When the President's message was read I made a motion that it be committed to a special committee of five members to be appointed by the Chair. That was the motion, and it is now pending. Now, if I may, I accept the modification to make the number seven.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands, the resolution not having been adopted, that it is under the control of the Senator from Massachusetts, the mover, to modify it.

Mr. HOAR. I so modify it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts modifies the resolution, and it will be read as modified?

The CHIEF CLERK. "A resolution to authorize the appointment of a select committee of seven, to which shall be referred the message of the President on the Pacific railroads."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the motion as modified?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand the motion for a select committee proceeds from the Judiciary Committee itself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not from the Judiciary Committee itself, but with the entire concurrence of many gentlemen who are members of that committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Judiciary Committee, I think, would like to be discharged from the consideration of the subject. It involves great questions of law which are to be considered by the special committee if appointed. I think myself that the objection is mainly that the Judiciary Committee has heretofore been criticised for its acts in reference to this question; but that does not concern the Senate. That committee, I suppose, enjoys the confidence of the members of the Senate for the diligence and ability they devote to questions of this kind, and the fact of its being taken away from that committee and referring it to a select committee may cause the impression on the country that it was because of a want of confidence in either the capacity or the fairness of that committee to deal with the question. Personally I prefer that the matter should be sent back to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal entry will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The message was read; and, on motion by Mr. HOAR,
Ordered, That it be referred, with the accompanying report, to a select committee of five Senators, to be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that this is not, in our parliamentary parlance, correctly described as a resolution; it is an ordinary motion. Rule XXII says:

When a question is pending no motion shall be received but—
To adjourn—
And among the number is—
To commit;
To amend.

Under our parliamentary practice communications from the Executive, like petitions and like communications from the heads of Departments, are before the Senate for disposition. Of course they are not before the Senate like a pending bill or resolution, and the parliamentary motions applicable to them enumerated in this Rule XXII are to refer and to amend. I made the ordinary motion to refer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so holds.

Mr. HOAR. Now, I desire to say, in reply to the Senator from Delaware, that in making the motion I did not urge or suggest any of the reasons to which he has replied. The ground upon which I base this motion is that this is a subject which must be dealt with by a committee that can give a hearing to officers of the Government on the one side and to the parties interested on the other, which the Judiciary Committee can not; and second, that having been made by the Senate a subject of such special method of consideration that it concurred in a law referring it to a special commission, and having been made by the President of the United States the subject of a special message, it in that way is properly segregated, singled out from the ordinary business of the Senate, and it is proper to give it to the consideration of a special committee created for that purpose.

I understand that the suggestions about reflections on the Judiciary Committee are merely made by individual members of the committee as a ground for their statement that they did not desire, as far as they were personally concerned, to hold on to any jurisdiction; that is all; but the ground for the motion is what I have stated.

Mr. SABIN. Is this resolution subject to amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. SABIN. I move that the reference be made to the Committee on Railroads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would state to the Senator from Minnesota that he need not resort to that. A motion to refer to a standing committee takes precedence of a motion to refer to a select committee; it needs no amendment.

Mr. SABIN. I move, then, that the President's message on this subject be referred to the Committee on Railroads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion has priority, and must be first decided.

Mr. SABIN. If this is a question of taking this subject from the Judiciary Committee I have no desire whatever to interfere with it; but if it becomes a question of business, as I understand it has arrived at that stage, I can see no earthly object in creating a special committee. We seem to have arrived at such a point in the Senate that when any subject of special importance is brought before it a special committee must be formed to take it away from the proper and regular standing committees. If there is any reflection on any side, it certainly must be upon the Committee on Railroads, which, I will say to the Senate, has ample time to give all the hearings necessary to any and all parties interested. If other committees are informed on all subjects that properly come before that committee, it may as well be abandoned.

Mr. HOAR. This is not a question which has anything to do with the jurisdiction of the Railroads Committee; it is not a question of the railroad policy of the country; it is not a question of building new railroads; it is not a question of submitting old railroads to new regulations of any character. It is a question pure and simple of securing an honest debt due the United States. If you are going to take any general committee other than the Judiciary Committee, it would seem that the Committee on Finance would be more proper. At any rate, the jurisdiction of the Railroads Committee is as far from this question as that of any committee of the body.

Mr. SABIN. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if this question was not originally before the Railroad Committee in its inception, a few years ago?

Mr. HOAR. Not this particular question. Doubtless the question of constructing the Union Pacific Railroad and the Central Pacific Railroad may have been before the Railroad Committee, because then, like every construction of a new railroad by the Government, the question was where the road should go and what should be its charter, its obligations, and so on.

Mr. SABIN. The Senator speaks from personal knowledge on this matter. I was not in the Senate at that time, but I am informed, on what I suppose to be undoubted authority, that when the trouble first arose between the Government and these railway companies it was a matter treated by the Committee on Railroads and afterwards referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, embracing, as it was supposed, judicial questions which that committee was alone responsible for and should act upon. If I am mistaken in this, I should like to be corrected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the message and accompanying reports be referred to the Committee on Railroads?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I have no preference for any particular committee in this matter, but I desire to correct the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

This subject was originally before the Committee on Railroads of the Senate in 1878. At the same time the same subject was before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. There was something of a contest between those two committees over bills introduced and referred respectively to those two committees. Each of those committees in 1878 reported a bill to the Senate; one was reported by the honorable Senator from Ohio, Mr. Thurman, and was known as the Thurman bill; the other was reported from the Railroad Committee by Senator Matthews, then a Senator from Ohio, and now an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. The bill known as the Thurman funding bill, I believe, received the unanimous assent, perhaps—but I do not know about that—of the Judiciary Committee. The bill reported by Senator Matthews received the unanimous approval, if I remember correctly, of the Committee on Railroads.

There was a contest in the Senate as to which of these two bills should be adopted, a somewhat vigorous contest. It was contended by leading lawyers upon the part of the Railroad Committee, as constituted at that time, led by Senator Matthews, of Ohio, that the Thurman bill was unconstitutional. It was alleged, again, by a great many other Senators then in this body, and I believe by every member of the Railroad Committee at that time, that as a business proposition the Thurman bill would prove a failure.

There was a vigorous contest, as I say; but the Thurman bill was finally adopted, and it became a law.

The question as to its constitutionality was raised, and it was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, as we all know, and there by a divided court, a full minority dissenting, it was declared to be constitutional. It became the law of the land, and these railroad companies owing this immense debt to the Government became subject to its operation, and what has been the result? As everybody knows, it has proved just what was prophesied at the time in this Senate by myself and others, an absolute and complete failure as a business proposition. If the bill reported by Senator Matthews at that time from the Railroad Committee had become the law of the land, we should to-day, instead of having six or seven million dollars, or whatever the amount is, in the sinking fund, have had some thirty million dollars in that fund, the whole question between the Government and these railroad companies would have been settled, and the Government would have been in fair position to recover back every cent of this immense indebtedness, although the times of payment would, of course, have been postponed to a considerable distance in the future.

I simply rose to correct the Senator from Massachusetts in the remark inadvertently made, that this subject had never been before the Railroad Committee of this body. It was there; it was thoroughly investigated by that committee, of which, I believe, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], the honorable Senator's colleague, was a member at that time.

Mr. HOAR. I did not say it had never been before the Railroad Committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to say in answer to the Senator from Minnesota that this question had never been before the Railroad Committee; that the question as to granting the original franchises had been before that committee, but not the question of the funding of the indebtedness.

Of course I have great respect, as we all have, for the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. It is composed of the ablest lawyers in this body, as we all know, but it is admitted to-day that twice heretofore they have unfortunately made very great mistakes in regard to this matter. It is conceded, I think, by everybody now everywhere that the Thurman funding act has been an absolute failure as a business proposition, looking to the settlement of this great controversy—involving so many millions of dollars—between the Government and the Pacific Railroad Companies.

As my friend from Massachusetts has just stated, he unfortunately made a mistake at the last session of Congress in the matter of computation, which he was willing, of course, to correct when the mistake was suggested to him by the Senator from Ohio.

As far as I am concerned, I do not care where this message goes; perhaps it had better go to a special committee. I have no interest in it one way on the other, except to see a final settlement of the great controversy on a basis alike fair and honorable to the Government and the companies. I have only stated this piece of legislative history in respect to the subject-matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I can not let the observations of the Senator from Oregon pass without a word or two of remark.

The Thurman bill was reported in 1878, I think at the time the Senator referred to, from the Committee on the Judiciary, receiving, I think, the substantially unanimous approval of all the members of the committee. There were some of us who thought it did not go far enough in exacting the percentages that should be paid into the Treasury from year to year; but it did contain what the railroad interest resisted here to their utmost in pushing the bill from the Railroad Committee. I do not mean that any Senator was in the railway interest, but the interest on the outside, the atmosphere, that we know is brought to bear about telegraphs and railroads and everything that is large and heavy, and they tried to compel the Senate to vote in a provision that the Thurman bill should stand for twenty years as a contract between the railroads and the United States unalterable.

That was resisted by the Committee on the Judiciary and defeated; and it was stated then and there by Judge Thurman, and the rest of us who supported him, that we did not intend to leave Congress for a single day without the authority that we asserted as a legislative power to control and direct their performances from time to time. If that bill had had no other virtue in it, if it had not put a dollar into the Treasury instead of the ten or twelve millions that it has, it would have had the virtue of asserting a legislative control over this business that the Supreme Court itself was obliged to accede to.

It does not do, therefore, to say that the Thurman bill is a failure. It is the only success that we have had within anybody's recollection in laying the hand of the law upon these great corporations and upon their influence, and I hope we shall continue to assert that right through some committee or other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the motion to refer the message and reports to the Committee on Railroads?

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon the adoption of the resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to refer the message and reports to a special committee of seven Senators.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 44——

Mr. COKE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say that I shall vote for the select committee because that seems to be the wish of a number of gentlemen connected with the Judiciary Committee. I prefer that the message should go there because I believe that is the committee best qualified to deal with it; still I shall vote for a select committee because the members of the Judiciary Committee wish it.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] on political questions. If he were present, I should vote "yea." This not being a political question, I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BECK. The Senator may vote.

Mr. MANDERSON. I shall vote, then.

The result was announced—yeas 55, nays 15; as follows:

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT BURLINGTON, IOWA.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 290, Calendar number 103, being a bill to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Burlington, Iowa. I hope there will be no objection. The bill will not occupy any considerable time, and will not involve discussion.

Mr. CULLOM. Has it been reported from a committee?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It has been reported with several amendments to which there is no objection.

Mr. HALE. I am very desirous that the Senate should proceed to consider the deficiency bill because it is important that it should have speedy passage. I will not antagonize this motion of the Senator from Iowa provided it is the understanding that his bill will not give rise to debate.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Certainly. There will be no occasion for debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 290) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Burlington, Iowa.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments. The first amendment was in line 5, section 1, after the word "maintain," to insert "if in the opinion of the Secretary of War the same be a public necessity;" in line 7, strike out "suitable place," and insert "place suitable to the interests of navigation;" in line 22, between the words "the" and "passage," insert "safe and convenient;" in line 23, after the word "kinds," strike out "for the transit of;" and in line 24, before the words "foot-passengers," strike out "for;" so as to make the section read:

That the Burlington and Illinois Bridge Company, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct and maintain, if in the opinion of the Secretary of War the same be a public necessity, a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at a place suitable to the interests of navigation at a point at or near the city of Burlington, Iowa, and to lay on or over said bridge a track or tracks for the more perfect connection of any railroad or railroads that are or shall be constructed to said river, on either or both sides thereof, at or opposite said point, under the limitations and conditions hereinafter provided; that said bridge shall not interfere with the free navigation of said river beyond what is necessary in order to carry into effect the rights and privileges hereby granted; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, the cause may be tried before the circuit court of the United States in and for any district in which any portion of said bridge or obstruction touches. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railroad trains, and for the safe and convenient passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, animals, and foot-passengers, for such reasonable rates of toll as may be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the proviso regarding wagons, animals, foot-passengers, and so forth, shall not influence the location of said bridge in its relation to the interests of navigation.

The amendment was agreed to:

The next amendment was in line 18, section 2, after the word "than," to strike out "one" and insert "two;" in line 19, after the word "hundred," to strike out "and sixty;" in line 27, after the word "of," to strike out "not less than 30 feet above low-water mark and;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under the provisions of this act may, at the option of the company building the same, be built as a draw-bridge or with unbroken and continuous spans: Provided, That if the said bridge shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans, it shall give clear head-room of not less, in any case, than 55½ feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, nor shall the spans of said bridge give a clear width of water-way of less than 250 feet, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of said river, and the main span shall be over the main channel of the river and give a clear width of water-way of not less than 300 feet: And provided further, That if any bridge built under the provisions of this act shall be constructed as a draw-bridge, the same shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a pivot over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point and with spans giving a clear width of water-way of not less than 200 feet on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and the next adjoining span or spans to the draw shall give a clear width of water-way of not less than 250 feet: Provided, That if the pivot pier of said bridge shall be constructed within less than 410 feet of the west shore of said river the span constructed west of said pivot pier may be less than 250, and said spans shall give a clear head-room of not less than 10 feet above extreme high-water mark; and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river where said bridge shall be erected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 24, section 5, after the word "permanent," to insert "and easily navigated;" and in the same line, after the word "channel," to insert "for a distance of not less than 1 mile above the bridge location;" so as to read:

And the said bridge shall be constructed with such aids to the passage of said bridge, in the form of booms, dikes, piers, or other suitable and proper structures for confining the flow of water to a permanent and easily navigated channel, for a distance of not less than 1 mile above the bridge location, and for the guiding of rafts, steam-boats, and other water-craft safely through the draw and raft spans, as the Secretary of War shall prescribe and order to be constructed and maintained at the expense of the company owning said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 6. That if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized shall not be commenced within two years from the passage of this act, and be completed in four years from the same date, the rights and privileges hereby granted shall cease and be determined.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Iowa to a typographical error, apparently, which should be corrected. It will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 3 of section 4 "passages" should be stricken out and "passage" inserted; so as to read:

Shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage of the same.

Mr. ALLISON. The text is right. That amendment is not necessary.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President——

Mr. PLUMB. I move to recommit the bill (S. 15) providing in certain cases for the forfeiture of wagon-road grants in the State of Oregon to the Committee on Public Lands. It has been suggested with some apparent force that there are amendments to be adopted in the bill to make it more effectively cover the purpose for which it was designed, and those amendments, I think, should be first considered in committee. I therefore move that the bill be recommitted for the purpose of considering it.

Mr. DOLPH. That bill was introduced by myself, and with a single amendment passed the Senate at the last session. I think the amendment of the committee strikes out one of the best provisions of the bill. If there is any prospect of restoring that provision, I am ready to consent to a recommittal. I have been waiting to call up the bill on the Calendar and have it passed. If the chairman agrees that the amendment can be offered in the Senate best, I would rather that the bill should not be recommitted, but I will not insist on opposing the motion.

The motion to recommit the bill was agreed to.

MESSENGER FOR PRESS GALLERY.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senator from Michigan to yield to me to offer a resolution for reference.

Mr. PALMER. I do not wish to keep yielding; I think my patience has been taxed somewhat.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of the Senator from Rhode Island will be read.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a special messenger, who shall attend upon the Press Gallery of the Senate, and be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools may be reprinted for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair). That order will be made, unless objection be interposed.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. PALMER. I now move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 553.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 553) to regulate immigration.

Mr. PALMER. In doing so I would ask the forbearance of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who I know has the right of way on an appropriation bill; but my remarks will not be extended, and the rest of the day is his. I think he can yield without detriment to the public service.

Mr. HALE. I can not refuse to yield to that appeal, but I give notice that at the close of the Senator's remarks I will ask the Senate to go on with the deficiency bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 553) to regulate immigration.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, in introducing this bill I desire to disclaim any intention thereby to prevent any capable, honest, industrious, law-abiding person from seeking a home on American soil.

My life has been spent among an admixture of foreign-born and native citizens. My affiliations, social, secular, and religious, have never been determined by any test of country or creed. I number among my friends many of foreign birth who are, and wherever they might be placed would be, a credit to humanity. Foreign-born boys were among the playmates of my childhood; foreign-born men and women have been among the companions of my maturer years.

The country and all of us have been better for their coming. They have added to the material wealth of the nation, and what is of far greater value, they have contributed to its moral and intellectual well-being. It is in deference to their opinions and convictions, as well as to the sentiments of the native born, that I ask that this measure or some one more efficient shall prevail.

Conditions have changed since we became a Government, and are constantly changing, necessitating legislation as evils become apparent. That which might have been desirable fifty years ago may have ceased to be so at present, and that which was never desirable in our immigration may have assumed such proportion as to call for restrictive legislation.

We have used many devices to induce immigration. Government has supplied information, which, if used, could not act otherwise than as an attraction to other peoples. States have published books showing the advantages within their borders for immigrants, and the time is not remote when their commissioners have been sent abroad to turn the incoming tide to their respective localities. It has been our fault, if fault it was, that we have welcomed indiscriminately the migrations of the Aryan race. I do not fear that we shall suffer the fate of the Briton, who invited the Saxon over to help him turn back the Picts and Scots, and then sank away under the domination of the superior race; still there are other conquests than those of force. The contest is now waging which, under the protection of law, will push the superior members of a race to the wall in the fierce competition for work wherein the inferior members, by reason of fewer wants and lower aspirations enabling them to accept lower wages, will, if no check be interposed, come out victor in the battle for bread. It will in that case be not the "survival of the fittest," but the degradation of the best. If we desire that the American workingman shall retain his superiority over the underpaid laborer of Europe, we must from time to time interpose such obstacles as will deter the influx of those who will degrade his labor by undue competition—a competition which joyfully accepts lower wages than the American laborer now receives, because it is an improvement on the wages hitherto received by the new comer, and because his wants have been repressed by his environment.

Much has been done for our country and the laborers and artisans who have created our wealth by the duties imposed on goods manufactured by foreign labor; but by that very process we have stimulated immigration, which although in the main beneficent in its operation, now threatens, if continued without selection, to aggravate evils already apparent, and to lower the standard of our people in lowering the wages of those who toil.

We are working out under the most favorable conditions a new civilization. We have a clear field with all of history to select from in law, literature, tradition, and customs. To acquit ourselves of our trust, to work out the problem of the future of America, it is absolutely essential that we scrutinize with care not only the factors we now have, but also those which are being constantly injected into our national life. We have taken the initial step, in excluding a race not homogeneous; is it not advisable to select the most desirable from our own race, instead of welcoming the dregs with the wine?

OUR POPULATION AND IMMIGRATION.

Our first census (1782) exhibited a total, in round numbers, of 2,389,000 souls, one-third of whom, it is estimated by Dr. Loring, were born on the other side of the Atlantic. Subsequent decennial numberings show our progress in population to have been constant and unprecedented, although, thus far, not beyond our capacity to sustain.

Previous to 1820 our Government made no effort to secure and preserve annual statistics of immigration, but since that date a reasonable accuracy has been observed at the principal ports of entry in customs districts and specific data obtained.

Accepting the generally received estimate of 250,000 as the number of immigrants between the establishment of the nation and the enactment of the passenger act, March 2, 1819, the official tables herewith presented show a total of 14,266,760 arrivals of actual immigrants prior to October 1, 1887, and as from the necessities of the case this can not include all those entering by sea or crossing our frontiers from Canada and Mexico, the assumption of fifteen millions in round numbers as the total accretion of population from foreign sources may be considered as a conservative estimate.

VALUE OF IMMIGRANTS.

Political economists differ widely as to the capital value of immigrants. Doctor Engel, of Berlin, director of the Prussian statistical bureau, computes the cost of raising a manual laborer to the fifteenth year in Germany at 750 thalers. Mr. Kapp, one of the commissioners of New York, in 1871, assumed the capital value of each male at $1,500 and of each female at $750, in currency. Edward Young, chief of our Bureau of Statistics at that time, basing his estimate on the producing and consuming power, instead of the original cost, finds $800 to be the average value of our immigrants. At this latter figure, which commends itself upon examination as reasonable and conservative, these 15,000,000 of adopted citizens have contributed $12,000,000,000 worth to the real wealth of the country. The estimates as to the amount of money in the possession of each immigrant at the time of landing vary from $80 to $150. Assuming the lowest figure, the aggregate cash importation would be $1,200,000,000. About 25 per cent. of the immigrants are under fifteen years of age and less that 15 per cent. over forty, leaving 60 per cent. in the prime of life, qualified for immediate service in developing our territory and forwarding our enterprises.

Vast as has been their contribution to the nation's wealth, it by no means measures their proportionate worth in the total which represents our civilization, prosperity, and power. They have digged our canals, built our railways, burrowed in our mines, reclaimed and made fruitful the wilderness. In addition, the names of Hamilton, Gallatin, Morris, Girard, Agassiz, Watson, Slater, Ericsson, Schaff, Guyot, Ingham, Moran, Draper, Parton, Asbury, and Hopkins suggest a catalogue, too long for enumeration, of foreign-born citizens eminent in the advance of statesmanship, commerce, science, invention, education, art, literature, and morals; and when the integrity and perpetuity of the Government of their choice was assailed by internal foes, they hastened to enlist under its flag and consecrate their lives and fortunes to its defense. From Bull Run to Appomattox, on weary marches, in enervating camps, in the deadly charge, in stubborn defenses, in the ranks and at the council board, their sturdy arms and loyal hearts gave generous service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair). The Senator will suspend till the Chair lays before the Senate, as is his duty at this hour, the unfinished business, being Senate bill No. 371.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that that bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside, and the Senator from Michigan will proceed.

EVILS OF UNRESTRICTED IMMIGRATION.

Mr. PALMER. Between the establishment of our Government and the breaking out of the war of the rebellion 5,293,760 aliens had landed on our shores. During the four years of strife only 546,466 were received, but since January 1, 1865, 8,426,534, or more than 58 per cent. of the total, have been added. The census enumerators in 1880 found 6,679,943 foreign-born residents, and 3,577,769 have been registered since January 1, 1881, making the present probable imported population of the United States nearly or quite ten millions of souls; but, inasmuch as, according to the Malthusian law of increase, about seventy-five years would be required to render our population as dense as that of France, there is no present numerical reason for prohibiting the influx, save possibly the crowding of the labor market. The growing disquiet of workingmen and anxiety of property-holders are not properly based upon the volume of immigration, but upon its character and distribution. An undue and oppressive competition in wages is felt at industrial centers; our charities, reformatories, and penal institutions are overtaxed, and, worst of all, there is seen a growth of classes, un-American and hard of assimilation, which menace the public peace and threaten to overturn all established law and usages.

The observation and investigation of the thoughtful and the patriotic appears to be crystallizing to a conviction that our country, with sixty millions of people and fifty billions of wealth, has passed at least beyond the need of immigration; that it is fully capable of self-support and self-defense, and, while neither completed development, strained resources, nor fear of early overpopulation require the exercise of its right of exclusion, the time has come to put in operation its right of selection. In other words, it is time for America to go out of the "asylum" business; to cease to be complacently regarded as the "Universal Colony" of the Old World; to deny the use of its shores as a dumping-ground for the vicious and delinquent human product of other nations; it should compel recognition henceforth as a land of opportunities for those, and for those only, who desire to become American citizens in the highest and broadest sense, and whose physical, mental, and moral qualifications are such as render their coming profitable to the Republic.

With us are found the highest wages, the largest liberty, and the easiest procurement of comforts and competency in the world, and we should exercise a wise discretion in sharing these advantages, to the end that they be not lessened by the acts or delinquencies of the beneficiaries.

UNDESIRABLE IMMIGRANTS.

An examination of the statistics of immigration between 1872 and the present year will show that less than 11 per cent. were skilled laborers, and more than 48 per cent. were without occupation.

| Total | 31,803 | 587,349 | 205,229 | 128,782 | 2,596,188 | 5,396,416 |

Several factors in this aggregate may well be viewed with concern. Chinese immigration has been already checked, but that of the lower grades of Slavonians, Hungarians, Russian Jews, Servians, Italians, and other races similarly unwholesome in kind, if not in degree, is increasing; while from Germany, Bohemia, and elsewhere, mingled with thousands of honest home seekers, come the fanatical followers of Bakunin, social wolves, honoring no flag, revering nothing as sacred, defying and despising all laws and rights of persons or property, whose emblem of ochlocracy is colored with innocent blood, lighted by incendiary torches, and saluted by dynamite bombs.

The introduction of large masses of foreign laborers whose standard of living is lower than ours and whose stay is designed to be temporary, may stimulate production for a time, but, if it be repeated or prolonged, must compel a lowering of the standard of life among native competitors, add a stigma to labor, and degrade its character and subsequent efficiency.

The appeal from our workingmen for "white men's wages" is more than a catch cry, and should be heeded by those who have the preservation of our free institutions in view and keeping, while the accepted aphorism that "an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure," should need small urging to secure the consent of all to the rigid exclusion of communists, anarchists, and nihilists.

DEFECTIVE, DEPENDENT, AND DELINQUENT CLASSES.

In our repressive and corrective treatment of the Mormon problem no attention has been thus far given to preventive applications at the main source of supply, although, in 1881, an eminent investigator said:

But for the steady influx of foreigners the dreadful features of the Mormon Church, polygamy and the exaltation of the church over the state, would die out in America in two generations.

Our laws have long forbidden the landing of criminals, paupers, lunatics, idiots, and persons unable to take care of themselves, but their enforcement has been left to the vigilance of boarding officers at the moment of their arrival. The last obtainable general statistics, those of the census of 1880, showed 88,246 foreign-born persons among our defective, dependent, and delinquent classes, in public asylums, almshouses, and prisons, and in this enumeration the children of foreign-born parents are classed as natives. While our imported citizens at that time constituted but 13½ per cent. of our total population they furnished more than 28½ per cent. of our insane, nearly 22 per cent. of our prisoners, more than 34 per cent. of our paupers in almshouses, and nearly 44 per cent. of the inmates of work-houses and houses of correction.

RESULTS IN NEW YORK.

In this connection I will read an extract from a very suggestive and instructive paper presented before the National Convention of Charities and Corrections at Omaha, last September, by Dr. C. S. Hoyt, the secretary of the State Board of Charities of the State of New York:

The whole number of inmates of the poor-houses and alms-houses of New York, including the insane in the asylum department of New York City, Kings and various other counties, during the year ending September 30, 1886, as reported to the State Board of Charities, was 68,529, of whom 27,075 were native and 41,454 foreign born. Estimating the present population of the State at 6,000,000, as generally accepted, with the relative proportion of native to the foreign-born population as found by the Federal census of 1880, its native population now in round numbers is 4,560,000, or 76 per cent., and its foreign population 1,440,000, or 24 per cent. Upon this basis the proportion of its native-born inhabitants who were in poor-houses and alms-houses, as indoor paupers, in 1886, was 1 to every 168 of its native population, while the proportion of those of foreign birth who were in those institutions in the course of the year was 1 to every 35 of its foreign-born population, the ratio being nearly five times greater than the ratio in the native population. We have no exact data as to the nativity of the outdoor paupers relieved in the State during the year, but careful observation and the general testimony of the officers charged with the administration of this form of public relief lead to the belief that the disparity in the ratio of foreign-born to native paupers of this class to the population was even greater than in that of its indoor paupers.

The number of insane committed to its various State hospitals for acute cases during the year 1886, as reported by the respective medical superintendents, and coming mainly from the rural counties, was 1,248, of whom 868 were of native and 380 of foreign birth, it being an excess of nearly 42 per cent. in the ratio of the insane in the foreign-born population over the ratio of the insane arising from the native population. The ratio of foreign insane as compared with the ratio of native insane in the asylums of New York City, Kings and other counties, with populous centers, is universally conceded to be much greater than in the State hospitals, but under the present system of reporting by these institutions extended and exact figures in this respect can not be given. A recent investigation into the New York City Lunatic Asylum, or Ward's Island, devoted wholly to men, showed that its extremely crowded wards contained 1,916 patients, two-thirds of whom, according to the sworn testimony of the medical superintendent, were of foreign birth, the ratio being more than three times greater than in the insane coming from the native population, or in nearly exact figures, an excess of 857 patients in the institution in consequence of such undue proportion of foreign-born over native insane, arising from the respective foreign and native populations. In the Monroe County Lunatic Asylum, embracing the city of Rochester, 60 per cent. of its patients last year, according to a recently published address of the county superintendent of the poor, were of foreign birth, while only 27 per cent. of the population of the county were foreign-born. The insane in these asylums, as well as in the other city and county asylums referred to, belong almost wholly to the pauper class, and most of them, therefore, become subjects of public relief and care through life, the burden and expense of which, under the settlement laws of the State, are required to be borne by the locality upon which they may chance to fall.

The admissions to the State Asylum for Insane Criminals at Auburn in 1886, according to the report of the medical superintendent, were 75. Of these 48 were natives and 27 foreign-born. This shows an excess of more than 75 per cent. in the ratio of insane criminals of foreign birth committed to the institution during the year as compared with the ratio of native-born insane criminals coming from the native population.

The Willard Asylum to October 1, 1886, has received 3,964 chronic insane patients since its opening in 1869; and the Binghamton State Asylum 1,292 since its opening in 1881, making a total of 5,256. Of these 3,208 were native and 1,894 of foreign birth, while the birth-places of 154 have not been ascertained. This gives a proportion of insane of foreign birth in these institutions of nearly 2 to 1, when compared with the proportion of insane in them of native birth arising from the native population. All of these insane have been paupers, chargeable to the respective counties from which they were sent, and with but few exceptions they have been and are likely to continue as life dependents upon those counties.

The whole number of convictions in its courts during the year ending October 31, 1886, for all grades of offenses, according to the report of the secretary of state, was 89,601, of whom proportionately the foreign-born were nearly three times greater than the native-born, and the records of its prisons, penitentiaries, work-houses, and jails also show an undue ratio of foreign over native born inmates.

PROPOSED RESTRICTIONS.

The design of such proposed changes in the laws regulating and restricting immigration as are found in this bill is to provide for the exclusion of dependent, delinquent, and dangerous classes through an inspection and investigation where their characters are known, instead of at the port of entry where they are unknown, and to effect this with the least possible hardship or inconvenience to desirable immigrants.

The first, third, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth sections are substantially the same as at present, with such alterations in the laws as are required to give effect to the new provisions in sections 2 and 4. Section 2 follows the form and language of section 2 of the act to regulate immigration now in force to the last clause, which is changed to read as follows:

And if on such examination there shall be found among such passengers any adult person not a citizen of the United States, and not provided with a certificate from the United States consul for the district of his residence and from which he proposes to emigrate, setting forth substantially that the said consul is satisfied upon diligent inquiry that he is a suitable and desirable person for residence and citizenship in the United States, they shall report the same in writing to the collector of such port, and such persons shall not be permitted to land.

Section 4 is as follows:

That the Secretary of State shall establish such rules and regulations and issue from time to time such instructions to consuls of the United States, not inconsistent with law or with treaty obligations, as shall enable well-disposed and worthy persons who desire to become residents or citizens of the United States to obtain certificates of character and fitness therefor from the consul of the district in which they reside, without hardship or unreasonable delay; which certificate shall contain, in addition to other specifications required by this act, or which may be prescribed by the Secretary of State, the full name of the individual receiving the same, the place of birth, age, occupation, last legal residence, physical marks or peculiarities, and all facts necessary for the identification of such individuals; but no certificate shall be granted to any convict, except those convicted of political offenses, nor to any lunatic, idiot, or any person unable to take care of himself or herself without becoming a public charge, nor to any anarchist, nihilist, or any person hostile to the principles of the Constitution or form of government of the United States, nor to any believer or professed believer in the Mormon religion, who fails to satisfy the consul upon examination that he or she intends to and will conform to and obey the laws of the United States, nor to any person included in the prohibition in the act to prohibit the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, the Territories, and the District of Columbia, approved February 26, 1885, or in acts amendatory to said act.

The first clause of section 9 of Article I of the Constitution, "The migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the year 1808," carries with it the power to prohibit immigration subsequent to that date, and the exclusion of slaves, Chinese, and contract labor has been already undertaken by Congress.

SUGGESTIONS OF UNITED STATES CONSULS.

In April, 1886, Secretary Bayard, realizing the growing importance of this question and the necessity for comprehensive data in its consideration and determination, addressed a circular letter to consular officers of the United States in Europe, instructing them to report upon the extent and character of the emigration from their several districts to the United States. The result of this inquiry was transmitted to Congress under date of February 10, 1887, and I will ask the Clerk to read from that report, on page 46, a portion of the communication of Edmund Jussen, consul-general at Vienna.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY—REPORT OF CONSUL-GENERAL JUSSEN.

In complying with your circular of April 27, 1886, I have no recent statistics to guide me, and must rely entirely upon such private information as I have been enabled to obtain, and upon the reports of the statistical bureau, published in January, 1886, and covering no later period than the year 1884.

From this report it appears that in the year 1884 Austria lost 7,215 of its subjects by emigration, of which 5,788 emigrated with and 1,427 without the consent of the government, and that in the year 1883 about the same number, namely, 7,366, emigrated from Austria. This report contains the admission that the effort to ascertain what particular foreign countries were the destination of these emigrants was quite in vain, and that inquiries in this behalf at the foreign consulates of Austria-Hungary were of no avail whatever.

The report admits further that the information published by foreign statistical bureaus is the most reliable and only source from which the Austrian Government can ascertain how many of its subjects leave their Austrian homes and to what particular country they emigrate.

An Austrian can cross the line without a passport without much difficulty, and can go on board ship at Havre, Rotterdam, or Antwerp without being asked for his papers or having his character inquired into. Those emigrants who obtain passports generally belong to the better classes and are not members of the dangerous elements. The young men who want to escape military service, the ultra-socialist, the anarchist, the men who have lost all social and business footing here, the bankrupt, embezzler, and swindler stops not to obtain permission of the government, and naturally the authorities have no sort of record here either as to the number or the place of destination of this class of emigrants.

There is no prospect, at least as far as Austria is concerned, that the emigration of these classes to the United States will ever be controlled by the authorities here to such an extent as to directly or indirectly benefit our country.

The government would, as a matter of course, prohibit, if it could do so, the emigration of all young men subject to military duty; but it is quite natural that it feels no regret to get rid of the ultra-socialist and anarchist, and that it is quite willing the bankrupt and swindler should depart for foreign countries, and that the paupers should find support away from home, and it is therefore not to be expected that the Austrian passport system will be amended in the direction of preventing these incumbrances on society from crossing the line of the Empire outward bound.

In view of these facts and circumstances, I would suggest that the only practical effort in the direction of controlling this sort of emigration to our Republic would seem to be a direct supervision by the United States consuls in their respective districts as to all emigrants desiring to leave that district for the United States. Although any Austrian may leave the Empire without the consent of his government, he can not land and settle in the United States except under certain conditions and on certain terms which the United States can prescribe. Would it, therefore, not be feasible to require by proper legislation that every emigrant landing in the United States should present a certificate from the United States consul of the district from which he emigrated, setting forth that consular inquiries as to the character, etc., of the applicant were satisfactorily answered, the extent of such inquiry to be prescribed by the instructions of the Department? The labor involved would of course be considerable, and could not possibly be performed with the clerical assistance at present allowed to consular officers, but the object to be gained would certainly be more than an equivalent for an increase of the consular expense account.

As far as Austria is concerned, there would be no difficulty in obtaining detailed information as to the character, antecedents, etc., of every subject dwelling within its borders. Although the Austrian authorities lose sight of the emigrant as soon as he crosses the line, they guard him very closely while he lives upon Austrian soil. It would, of course, be for the Department to decide to what extent and in what direction official information as to an emigrant should be regarded as conclusive, and I understand also that it will be extremely difficult to prescribe the line to be drawn between the refusal and the granting of a consular certificate or passport; but in spite of all, the question remains, what other practical remedy could be adopted to prevent the immigration of these dangerous elements in the United States?

The labor and agricultural classes of Bohemia probably supply the greatest number of emigrants to the United States, and among the Bohemian industrial laborers some of the most violent ultra-socialists are to be found. The great majority of these Bohemian laborers, both of the industrial and agricultural class, are illiterate and ignorant in the extreme. They stand in great awe of the police authorities at home. They are generally very robust and vigorous men; industrious and capable of great physical labor and exertion.

Mr. PALMER. On page 54, Henry Sterne, consul at Budapesth, in concluding his report on the Hungarian emigrants, writes what I ask the Secretary to read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

I am of the opinion that with the present condition of the labor market in the United States there is no room there at present for this class of people. I even believe that under more favorable conditions in the United States these Slovacks are not a desirable acquisition for us to make, since they appear to have so many items in common with the Chinese.

Like these, they are extremely frugal, the love of whisky of the former being balanced by the opium habit of the latter.

Their ambition lacks together in quality and quantity. Thus they will work similarly cheap as the Chinese, and will interfere with a civilized laborer earning a "white" laborer's wages.

Like the Chinese, again, they are very exclusive people, and though American institutions may go a great way towards removing this defect, it will surely require generations to make them enlightened citizens where emigrants of other nations only needed a few years. Of their habits I shall not speak, since the changed situation would undoubtedly act wonders in this respect in a short time.

Another main objection to them is that, like the Chinese, they do not intend to remain in our country, not even as long as the latter, though like some of these, also, an occasional Slovack may "stick." But to show how sincere and strong their intention is to return home when they emigrate, I will state what I have from very good authority, namely, that some of the better-to-do families give their daughters in marriage to men upon the special condition that after a reasonably lengthy honeymoon, the husband must go to America to make his fortune, when he may come back again to his wife, and while thus away they all conscientiously supply their families with the necessary means of living, thus again like the Chinese, becoming no permanent benefit to the United States, their earnings never staying in the country.

To say a last word about these "Slovacks," they are, after all, a people more to be pitied than anything else, but "charity should begin at home."

Mr. PALMER. I now ask the Secretary to read what Consul Loening, at Bremen, says on page 150 of the report.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

BREMEN.

Bremen is the principal rendezvous for emigrants, from all over the middle, eastern, and northern parts of Europe. The Turk and the Norwegian together climb up the side of a "Lloyd" steamer on sailing day, seeking new homes in America.

From this crowd of emigrants from all over the world that congregates here on the day of sailing, I have very little opportunity of personally judging their condition or characteristics; but from what I see and hear, I believe that the Bohemians, Hungarians, Poles, Italians, and poor Russian Jews, who emigrate to the United States now, are a worthless lot.

Mr. PALMER. I also ask the Secretary to read what Consul Tanner, of Chemnitz, says as to the social condition of the class who emigrate from Saxony, on page 159:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SOCIAL CONDITION.

From what I have said above it may be inferred that the social condition of the class that emigrate is very low. Many of them huddle together in one room, which is full of lice and other vermin. Cleanliness is their worst enemy, and virtue is unknown and unpracticed among them. They live on nothing but a crust of dry, dark bread, and spend all they can earn on strong liquors. Apart from such drink they live on about 7 or 8 cents per day.

The better class of emigrants that we receive are those who come under the head in the table of mechanics; but even these are not the best artisans in Germany.

Mr. PALMER. On page 185, William W. Lang, consul at Hamburg, gives suggestive information relative to the migration of the dangerous classes. I will ask the Secretary to read it.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Another cause promotive of emigration is found in the socialistengesetz (socialistic law). This law was enacted by the force of public sentiment, aggravated by the two attempts on the life of the venerable Emperor William, and deprives many, on account of their political opinions, of their privileges, and relegates them to the administrative power of the police. Under the provisions of this law a person who is suspected of socialistic views may be banished from the city where he lives. Also, by this law certain cities are placed partially under martial law, namely: Berlin, Hamburg, Leipsic, Chemnitz, and more recently Spremberg.

As other German States pursue a like course, the socialist finds himself forced to seek shelter and home in some other country. The greater number of socialists who have emigrated have gone directly to the United States. This may be stated as the only way in which the German Government exerts an influence which would encourage emigration, and, if it does this, it is indirectly.

Criminals are never banished; on the contrary, they are forbidden to leave the country until they have suffered the penalty which the law inflicts. If they escape, every effort is made to recapture them. Banishment has never been adopted by the German Government as a method of riddance of the mischievous and turbulent elements of society; even penal settlements have ever been repulsive to the ideas of the Imperial Parliament. As the bulk of German emigration goes to the United States, so also the majority of the criminals and refuse of society that leave the country find their way there.

The freedom of our republican form of government, the liberty of the press, and the right to hold public assemblies have proved to be a congenial encouragement to socialistic agitators.

An opinion prevails that leading members of the German socialistic party are going to the United States for the purpose of consolidating and molding into one solid, compact party the German socialists who have heretofore emigrated there, and who are now acting in a separate and unorganized way. A natural sequence of the unmolested condition of the socialists in America as compared with their condition in Europe and detailed in their letters from banished colaborers in the cause in America is thought to be the leading reason for the large exodus of socialists from the states of Europe to the United States.

Anarchists are merely the radical elements of the socialistic party. Every true social-democrat will become an anarchist if he follows the rules, precepts, ideas, and teachings of his party. Socialism is the blossom and anarchy is the fruit from seed sown by Barleau, Lasalle, Marx, and other eminent social-democrats. The strict police regulations of the German Government suppress anarchism by sheer force, but it may be a question pregnant with alarm that two-thirds of the social-democrats who have and are emigrating to the United States may not grow step by step under our free institutions more and more radical in their views and demands, thus becoming anarchists and the disturbers of the peace and order of society.

Mr. PALMER. In his annual report Consul-General Mueller writes (see page 326) what I ask the Secretary to read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Before, however, passing this subject, I may be permitted to refer to the ever-increasing emigration from Roumania, Galicia, and Russian provinces, which I believe to be injurious to the interests and to the development of our country. The class of people emigrating from said countries, with slight exceptions, are known to be mentally and physically neglected, if not crippled, notorious invalids, unfitted to perform manual labor or to earn their livelihood by honest work, nor is there any likelihood that they ever become educated to American citizenship. These people, grown up under the worst influences, hated, despised, persecuted, and suppressed, lack manhood, self-reliance, and ambition, are neither disposed to nor capacitated for work, and bare of almost any quality to assimilate themselves with American civilization. In the absence of the nobler instincts of life, they will ever prove a disagreeable burden to themselves and to their adopted country.

It is an open secret that organized and systematic efforts are being made in the above-mentioned countries to get rid of the poor and helpless Jews by forcing them to emigrate, by compelling them, if need be. From information I learn that this emigration will increase from month to month, soon to assume more formidable proportions, unless preventive measures are being devised—measures which will protect the United States against the exportation thither of paupers, criminals, and semi-barbarians.

Russia, Austria, Turkey, or any other country should no longer be accommodated to rid themselves, at the expense of the United States, of the degraded products of their own make.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, it will be said by some, and with a show of reason, that the means of exclusion proposed by this bill will be insufficient; that consuls will have neither the time nor the means to make an effective examination on which the enabling certificate may be based; and that, no matter how diligent they may be, many undesirable persons will be accredited. Conceding this to be true, is the attempt at selection to be abandoned entirely because, from the nature of the case, the examination can not be critically exact?

From the extracts from consular reports cited it appears that there have been many emigrants from localities coming under their supervision whose coming to us they deprecate and against whom they would discriminate had they an opportunity. Would not the enumeration of apparently defective and delinquent persons be increased by a careful examination? Are there not many emigrants now landing who would be discredited at a glance by the consul?

The examination, no matter how cursory, would make it more difficult for the paupers, idiots, and the insane to get embarkation; it would be more difficult for convicts, for their reputation would be a matter of record. It would be more difficult for polygamous Mormons and their flocks, for the converts are known and the sources of supply. As for the chronic disturbers of law and order, men and women whom adverse surroundings have educated and cruel fate has consecrated to an apostleship of the bloody hand and incendiary torch, whose hopes for humanity can see the only road to the promised land over the fallen columns of despoiled and burning cities and the embers of once peaceful homes, their exclusion would be easy, for they would avow themselves; again, under the police surveillance of other countries, these people are known and their record is kept.

Some may say, to what end should these men be excluded, when their disciples with the germs of the anarchistic or nihilistic school already developing within them are admitted and their books have wide circulation among us?

The answer, I conceive, to that objection is this: That many so imbued would, amid other and more favorable surroundings, shrink from a propagandism which had for its acknowledged agencies "poison and poniard." They would revolt from a school that had elevated the science of destruction into a system of philosophy, from a religion whose gospel is the sword and whose prophecies are read in letters of fire and punctuated by the bullet of the assassin.

This moral distemper should be guarded against as strictly as physical contagion.

It is almost certain, Mr. President, that the lamentable occurrence of the Chicago riot, tragic in its beginning and ending, where American justice, long delayed, but more terrible because delay could not abate its relentless pursuit nor avert the retributive blow, would have happened had not discontent, unmoored by false doctrines, been stimulated to ruthless acts by the infectious example of agitators from abroad. The crime was un-American. To the credit of our foreign-born citizens be it said that the martyrs to and defenders of law and order upon that fatal evening were in a great part our country's adopted sons, who knew that liberty without law was license.

I do not fear, Mr. President, that anarchy could exist for any length of time in an American city, but when we consider that five thousand Jacobins (according to Taine) kept Paris, then a city of seven hundred thousand people, a people noted for their desperate bravery, in abject fear for fourteen months, a period to which the mental condition of the inhabitants gave a name as unique as it is descriptive, the "Reign of Terror," the presence of these promoters of violence and the personal agitation of their pernicious ideas must give us pause.

The methods of the Jacobins were the same as those advocated by the anarchist and nihilist, namely, "a series of assassinations and audacious and even mad enterprises, horrifying the powerful and dazzling the people till they believe in the triumph of the revolution."

I do not contend, Mr. President, that this bill is all that could be desired; but I believe it is a step in the right direction, and a step which our people, native and foreign born, desire to see taken. I believe it will make the evasion of our present laws more difficult and compel in addition thereto, what the enlightened sentiment of our people demands, a moral quarantine.

Mr. President, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I ask that the tables of statistics which I submit shall be printed in the RECORD. I would read them but that I wish to save time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the tables printed in the RECORD, as requested by the Senator from Michigan, if there be no objection.

The tables are as follows:

PASSENGER MOVEMENT AND IMMIGRATION.

Number and nationalities of alien passengers arrived in the United States during each year from 1820 to 1867, and of immigrants only during each year from 1868 to 1886.

[NOTES.—a Prior to the year 1820 no official record was kept of the arrivals of alien passengers. It is estimated, however, that the total number arrived in the United States from the foundation of the Government to the year 1820 was 250,000. b The years 1820 to 1831 and from 1843 to 1850, inclusive, are fiscal years ending September 30; all other years are calendar years.]

WM. F. SWITZLER,

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS, January 9, 1888.

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the deficiency bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator will be satisfied to let the unfinished business be laid aside informally, temporarily, while we go on with the appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools. It is proposed to lay the bill aside informally for the consideration of the bill referred to by the Senator from Maine. The Chair hears no objection to that course.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4271) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, considering first the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations as they are reached in the reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be followed, if there be no objection.

Mr. HALE. In starting out I only wish to say that this is the old deficiency bill that failed of passage at the close of the last session of the last Congress, owing to its being sent so late to this body that it was impossible to consider it and to pass it, and secure its perfection before the expiration of the Congress. This bill has been made up, in the other branch of Congress, mainly upon the basis of the items of the bill which were agreed to in conference at the last Congress, leaving off other items which were then disagreed to by the conferees, the object being to send us a clean bill, to which little or no objection could arise, in order that it might have speedy passage. And the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate recognizing that have dealt very lightly with the bill in the way of amendment. In fact, I may say there is nothing substantial put on that the House did not incorporate in the bill. The bill, as it goes back to the House with the amendments agreed to, is not only not larger than the House bill, but two thousand dollars smaller. I ask now that the bill may be read for amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill, and, having read to line 14 on page 4——

Mr. HALE. The committee have an amendment which I offer, in line 11, page 4, in the appropriations for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, to strike out all after the word "dollars" to the end of the paragraph, as follows:

And the number of plate-printers and plate-printers' assistants may, by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, be increased to 200 and 230, respectively.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

And the number of printers' assistants at $1.50 a day may, by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, be increased to 38, and the number of printers' assistants at $1.25 a day reduced to 176.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "appropriations for the District of Columbia," in section 1, line 1, on page 11, after the word "office," to strike out "$172.70" and insert "$1,727;" so as to read:

To reimburse Frederick Douglass for record-books and general indices purchased and paid for by him while recorder of deeds, for use of his office, $1,727.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 30, under the head of "Senate," to strike out the clause from line 8 to line 12, inclusive, as follows:

For compensation of officers, clerks, messengers, etc., in the employ of the Senate for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, $14,229.08.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 16, on page 30, under the same head, to increase the appropriation "for fuel, oil, and cotton waste for heating department" from "$2,000" to "$2,894.27."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 18, on page 30, under the same head, to increase the appropriation "for furniture and repairs of furniture" from "$3,000" to "$3,249.29."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the same head, in section 1, after line 20, on page 30, to insert:

For packing-boxes, $41.83.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the same head, in section 1, line 24 of page 30, to increase the appropriation "for folding speeches and pamphlets," from "$4,500" to "$6,778.33."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the same head, in section 1, line 1 of page 31, to reduce the appropriation "for miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor," from "$5,000" to "$3,962.70."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the same head, in section 1, line 11 of page 33, after the word "Forestry," to insert the name "(C. S. Wilbur);" so as to make the clause read:

For clerk of Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry (C. S. Wilbur) from the 4th day of March to the 1st day of July, 1887, $708.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for "Government Printing Office," in section 1, line 17 of page 37, after the words "RECORD folders," to insert "proof-readers, copy-holders;" so as to make the clause read:

That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to pay 25 per cent. in addition to the amount paid for day labor to the employés of the Government Printing Office, such as compositors, pressmen, stereotypers, laborers, press-feeders, RECORD folders, proof-readers, copy-holders, and engineers, who were exclusively employed on the night forces of the Government Printing Office during the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. HALE. A further examination of this subject discloses to the committee the fact that the persons employed in the Printing Office under the names of proof-readers and copy-holders receive already for night work as much as or more than the 25 per cent., and therefore the committee recommend that the amendment found in those words be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be disagreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has an amendment to this clause, and as it has already been dealt with I suppose his amendment would be in order now.

Mr. HAWLEY. I could wish that this whole paragraph had been subjected to a more thorough examination. I do not find that either in the other House or in the Senate the Public Printer has been sent for, or any careful examination made of this matter. It was brought forward, I think, by employés of the Printing Office with entirely honorable motives to secure extra pay for night work to a certain class of employés who it was claimed did not receive it.

There is no certainty that $10,000, or what is appropriated here, will pay the debts authorized to be paid, for I think that sum is not based upon any detailed explanation by the Public Printer.

To show how the paragraph would stand if it had been amended as the committee reported, I read from a statement furnished me from the printing office by the petitioners for this change. They show that the proof-readers have been receiving $4.44 a day or 55 cents an hour, and for night work $6, an increase of $1.56.

Mr. HALE. That is, that they are already receiving it.

Mr. HAWLEY. They have already been receiving it.

Mr. HALE. So I understand.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is no reason in the world why they should be put in. This statement shows that the copy-holders' rate of pay has been $3.20 a day, and for night work $5.

Mr. HALE. That is more than the 25 per cent.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is more than the 25 per cent. The statement further shows that the floor-hands have been receiving per day, $4, or 50 cents an hour for eight hours' work, and are paid $5.66⅔ a night for night work; that laborers who got $2 during the day have been receiving $2.50 for night work. So, I can not comprehend why proof-readers and copy-holders ask to have the words in italics inserted. The committee have now stricken them out, I understand.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has noticed that we have had those words stricken out.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, the committee have just asked to withdraw that amendment. While I have serious doubts as to the wisdom of the whole paragraph, I shall not undertake to antagonize it now, because there is a measure of justice in it. At the suggestion of the Public Printer, I move to insert at the close of the paragraph the following proviso:

Provided, That in estimating the said 25 per cent., credit shall be given the Government for whatever has already been paid the said employés above the rates for day work.

Mr. HALE. I suggest to make the proviso read "for whatever has already been or is being now paid."

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, if you wish those words in, I have no objection to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] will be read, as modified.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following proviso:

Provided, That in estimating the said 25 per cent., credit shall be given the Government for whatever has already been paid, or is now being paid, the said employés above the rates for day work.

Mr. HALE. I do not perceive any objection to this amendment. I will give the history of the matter in brief, and I do so because the Senator from Connecticut has suggested that further examination might have brought out the facts earlier.

This whole subject was not one that was put upon the bill by the Committee on Appropriations; but the Committee on Printing in the last Congress brought the matter before the Senate, and the Senate incorporated the provision in the bill. That committee had made examinations from day to day, and were in consultation with the Public Printer. The Senate accepted the clause as reported by that committee, and so it was found on the bill. When the bill was reconstructed in the Committee on Appropriations the words "proof-readers and copy-holders" were inserted at the suggestion of a Senator who was a member of the committee and also a member of the Committee on Printing. As I have said, further examination by him and by me and by the committee has disclosed the fact that these proof-readers and copy-holders were already receiving as much as or more than the 25 per cent. additional for night work. Therefore the words have been struck out on my motion.

Now, the Senator from Connecticut comes in with an amendment which still further perfects the clause. It is not right that any of these employés who have had their wages already raised because of night work should get the 25 per cent. that is intended to be applied to the employés who do not get it already. The amendment which the Senator has proposed seems to cover just the point of the case, and I hope it will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the seventh line of page 39.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Maine to the language as it appears in the text in line 7, page 39:

Charles Morgan, eighty hundred and five dollars and eighty-seven cents.

Mr. HALE. That may be passed over for the present. I presume it should be $805.87; but the clerk of the committee will hunt the matter up and I will return to it.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to page 46.

Mr. HALE. If the Secretary will turn back to page 39, I will have the misprint rectified in line 7. It should read:

Charles Morgan, $805.83.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be agreed to, if there be no objection. There is a misprint of "80" for "8."

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 10 of page 48.

Mr. HALE. In the name of "J. V. Sweetting," the second "e" should be left out so as to conform to the name below. It should be "Swetting."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations to pay judgments of the Court of Claims, in section 1, line 20, of page 52, to change the name "John G. Tufts" to "John Q. Tufts;" so as to read:

John Q. Tufts, $113.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the clause beginning on line 19 of page 54, as follows:

To pay the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the Pacific Railroad, $85,396.24, being in addition to the sum of $44,800.74, appropriated by the act approved August 4, 1886, to pay a judgment in favor of said Pacific Railroad, which two sums shall be in full satisfaction of the judgment in favor of the Pacific Railroad reported to Congress in the House Executive Document No. 29, Fiftieth Congress, first session.

Mr. HALE. When the committee recommended striking out this clause, a controversy had arisen as to who would be the real beneficiaries of the appropriation; and the committee thought it better to strike out the clause until that had been settled. It has since been settled that the money should go according to the appropriation made by the other House, and therefore I ask that the amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 20, page 56.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In line 20 on page 56 there is an error apparently in the type.

Mr. PLATT. Two letters are dropped out.

Mr. HALE. It should read "$692.70."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be corrected so as to read "$692.70."

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriations to pay judgments of the Court of Claims, in section 1, line 3 of page 27, to strike out the name "Tamer" and insert "Tanner;" so as to read:

Zera L. Tanner, $692.70.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was in section 1, line 10 of page 61, in the appropriations to pay judgments of the Court of Claims, after the word "all," to strike out "one hundred and eighty-four thousand seven hundred and eighty-eight dollars and sixteen," and insert "ninety-nine thousand three hundred and ninety-one dollars and ninety-two;" so as to make the clause read:

In all, $99,391.92: Provided, That none of the judgments herein provided for shall be paid until the right of appeal shall have expired.

Mr. HALE. That amendment should be disagreed to, to conform to the amendment on page 54 to pay the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the Pacific railroads.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 24, on page 65.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On page 65, in line 23, before the word "prior," the word "and" will be inserted.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 23, on page 69.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter "F" will be inserted before "or" in line 23, to correct a typographical error.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 3, page 76, line 21, before the word "numbered," to strike out "claim" and insert "claims;" in line 22, after the words "eight thousand six hundred and forty-six," to insert "and nine thousand four hundred and ninety-five;" and in line 34, after the word "thousand," to strike out "nine hundred and forty-eight dollars and four," and insert "eight hundred and fifty-four dollars and seventy-nine;" so as to make the clause read:

For deficiency in postal revenues, 1885 and prior years, except the claims designated as A 1, A 2, and A 3, and the claims numbered 8646 and 9495 in said Executive Document No. 32, $49,854.79.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This completes the amendments reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to move, on the twenty-sixth page, at the end of line 6, under the general provisions for the Post-Office Department, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will state the proposed amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of line 6, on page 26, insert:

That the proper officers of the Post-Office Department are hereby authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of William E. Blunt, postmaster at Haverhill, Mass., the sum of $260.03, being the value of certain postal funds which were stolen from the safe inside the post-office on the night of the 31st day of October, 1883, without the fault or negligence of said postmaster.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say in support of the amendment that there came from the Postmaster-General or one of his assistants, at the last Congress, a letter certifying to the fact, showing that this loss occurred without the fault of the officer, and recommending the payment of this sum. That letter was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, the passage of this provision recommended, and the item was inserted in the deficiency bill, in this same bill which we have now before us, at the close of the last session. It was stricken out, I believe, in conference by the insistence of the other House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. HALE. I think, perhaps, that when I have explained the methods pursued by the committee in making up this bill the Senator will not seek to urge the amendment on this bill.

Whatever may be the merits of the case, and however certain this item may be to go on some future deficiency bill, it is one of the provisions upon which the conference committee came to loggerheads in the last Congress and could not agree. Therefore it was struck out by the report of the conference committee. It was not one of the items agreed to.

There is a large class of such items, and in making up this bill it was not deemed advisable to go into those old questions; but the bill is confined to items agreed upon by the conferees. Not even all of those are included, but none outside have been put on this bill. There are many of them; they will come up in other deficiency bills. There will be additional auditing and testing and scrutiny in the Departments, and then they will be presented, so that I judge no objection can be made to them either in the other House or here.

But, striving to get a bill that should not give rise to controversy, hoping, as I do, that we shall send this bill back in such shape that there will be no conference at all and no delay, I trust that the Senator will not, under the circumstances, urge the amendment any further.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask the Senator having charge of the bill a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Do I understand the Senator to say that all the items which were agreed upon by the conference committee of last year are included in this bill?

Mr. HALE. No; I have just said that not only did we not put on those items which were disagreed to, but there are some items which were then agreed to in conference committee that the other House has left out in the bill now before us, and the Senate Committee on Appropriations has not deemed it advisable to put them on in order not to raise a controversy again.

Mr. PLATT. They agreed last year to them, and why should we not insist upon them this year?

Mr. HALE. In some cases the operation of time has disposed of the items. A deficiency that might be estimated in January of last year for the general service of the Government in a particular Department up to the 1st of July, 1887, if it failed to be appropriated for, would not be needed now, because the service would have been pinched, the Department would have got along without the money, and there would now be no necessity for appropriating it. That is true in some cases.

On the other hand, the House of Representatives have left off the bill certain provisions which will have to be appropriated for soon, which they are now considering on another bill that will be soon before the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. Which items the Committee on Appropriations on the part of the Senate think are just and ought to have been provided for a year ago.

Mr. HALE. The other House ought to have put them on the present bill, but the Committee on Appropriations, of the Senate, for reasons which I can refer to later, if necessary, did not think it worth while to raise the controversy now with the other House.

Mr. HOAR. Of course, after the statement of the Senator from Maine that this deficiency bill which must be passed promptly, has been made up with that understanding on the part of the committee that has it in charge, I can not properly press the amendment upon this bill, but I shall move it either on the regular Post-Office appropriation bill or the general deficiency bill, as may seem best hereafter. I shall, therefore, not press the amendment at the present time. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to insert after line 9 on page 26 the amendment which I offered the other day, which has been printed and referred to the committee, omitting all after line 9 in the printed amendment.

Mr. PLATT. I suggest that the amendment come in after line 6.

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well; after line 6, as my colleague suggests.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 26, after line 6, it is proposed to insert:

For manufacture of adhesive postage and special-delivery stamps, $6,881.45.
For manufacture of stamped envelopes, newspaper-wrappers, and letter-sheets, $85,237.78.
For manufacture of registered-package, tag, official, and dead-letter envelopes, $17,813.49.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now, Mr. President, those items amount to $89,935.72. They are for goods furnished by a firm of my constituents, which goods the Government sold previous to last July, or shortly after; for which goods the Government has the money, and for which money my constituents are paying 6 per cent. interest at bank.

This is the deficiency bill of which the gentleman spoke. The next deficiency bill is one to cover deficiencies for the current year. My amendment belongs to this first and real urgent deficiency bill, to pay something that was due in cash before the first of last July. I trust some members of the Senate will please listen to me, because I am arguing a case of most absolute and incontestable justice.

The committee—

The committee in the other House—I believe there is no objection to my reading a document of the other House—

The committee have taken as a basis for the preparation of the bill House Executive Documents numbered 19, 29, and 32, transmitted to the present session of Congress, but in considering these estimates they have confined themselves to only such items of public expense as were provided for in the general deficiency bill as agreed upon in conference at the last session, but which failed to become a law; but all items agreed upon in said conference which are manifestly no longer necessary, because of the lapse of time or the change of condition in the public service, are either entirely excluded or so altered in their terms, etc.

I affirm that it is not true within half a million dollars. I affirm that they left out what is as much due as the President's board bill, to the extent of something like half a million.

Before the last fiscal year expired the Postmaster-General begged Congress to appropriate money so that he could buy envelopes to supply the public. Congress put that in the deficiency bill. Here is the last March bill, the bill which failed. Here in that bill are the items to which I refer. They were not so closely estimated there as they are now. I will show you that they are estimated to the cent now in the Department, and that exactly what is to be paid is known just as well now as it will be six months hence. On the forty-first page of the old bill are these items:

For manufacture of adhesive postage and special-delivery stamps, $5,000.
For manufacture of stamped envelopes, newspaper-wrappers, and letter-sheets, $137,000.
For manufacture of registered-package, tag, official, and dead-letter envelopes, $10,000.

Making a very considerably larger sum than is now asked for, because the fiscal year has closed and the exact sum due is known.

Hear, if you please, what the Postmaster-General says about this exact debt due to constituents of mine:

The amounts due for supplies of paper, adhesive stamps, and envelopes of both kinds ought to be included in one urgent deficiency bill and promptly provided, because they are properly payable during the year past on delivery of the purchased articles, and but for the considerate favor of the contractors in furnishing the needed supplies the service would have suffered. No increase in price was paid in any case, and no obligation to pay interest incurred; and the earliest possible discharge of these debts is an obligation upon the honor of the Government.

That is from the annual report of the Postmaster-General, and he requests the payment in a letter he sent to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations on this subject.

Now, understand the case. The Government would have been without envelopes for the service about the first of last May. It begged the Plimpton Company, of Hartford, Conn., to go on with the work, saying they must trust the Government. The Plimpton Company say, "Very well, we will go on; we do not expect any interest, and know we can not get the money before next December any way;" but they did think they would get it in December. They borrowed the money needed for their manufacture. They are carrying notes now to the amount of $85,000 in the Hartford banks and paying 6 per cent. interest upon them. Having done the Government a favor in furnishing a large number of envelopes, the Government having sold the envelopes and having the cash in its own drawers, they are now asked to wait for a second deficiency bill against the advice of the Postmaster-General, who says the prompt payment of this item is a matter of honor. I think I have made a clear case.

Mr. HALE. I am rather glad that the Senator from Connecticut has moved this amendment, because it gives an opportunity to state the actual condition in which the committee of the Senate found itself in reference to this appropriation and some others of the same kind of merit.

The deficiency bill failed last year because, as everybody knows, although it is large, embracing many items and needing very careful and close scrutiny, it was never reported to the other House until the 25th day of February, seven days before final adjournment. It was then considered in the other House, and three days after was first sent to the Senate, so that this body did not get it, its committee had no opportunity to examine it, to consider its provisions, to formulate proposed amendments, until four days before the expiration of the session and of the Congress. Under those conditions, working day and night, the Senate was not able to pass the bill, get it into conference, have it considered there, and passed upon finally, so that it would become a law; and it died because the Congress died.

There were many items in dispute between the two Houses which had been adjusted in conference, and that conference report, as I have said, failed to become a law because it could only be offered within an hour or less than an hour of the end of the session. But the record of all the controverted subjects existed in the committee, and when the House Committee on Appropriations proceeded to deal with this old bill, the natural course one would consider would have been either to go into all the contested items and make a new bill or to take the uncontested items and seek to pass them. The latter was the general rule adopted, but there were very marked exceptions, and the case covered by the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut is one. The case involving appropriations for the finishing of the new ships and their armament is another. The case for the appropriation covering the aqueduct, or the finishing of the tunnel through which the water is to be conveyed to us here, is another.

What reason controlled the committee in the other body or the body itself for leaving off those items of obvious necessity, has thus far failed to appear. That they are as necessary now as they were last winter, as necessary now as when they were agreed upon by the conferees of the two Houses, is apparent to every one. They are not of the class of cases to which I before adverted where time has disposed of them, because they are items that must be paid for at some time; but the House of Representatives chose to leave them off, and the Senate Committee on Appropriations was confronted, as it has long been, as it will be again during this session, now on the opening of the session, with this attitude on the part of the other body. Here are appropriations that are manifestly needed for the service of the Government which are left off, and obviously it must be on the theory that the Senate will put them on.

Then, as everybody knows who reads the papers and who follows the debates and sees the course of business, it will be said when the deficiency bill or any other appropriation bill goes back to the House that the Senate in its extravagance has added so many hundred thousand dollars to each bill; and early and late, Mr. President and Senators, we shall hear that constantly throughout this Congress, as we have heard it heretofore, and elaborate tables and memoranda and records will be made up at the end of the session in which it will be shown that extravagance, or what is claimed to be so, exists here and not there, and that this body in its extravagance, in its lack of proper economy in the management of public funds, has added to every bill.

The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate has become restive under this. It does not believe that the committee or the body should be subjected to such reproach as that, and it believes, and I believe, that the evil will never be cured until the Senate concludes, in considering these subjects for the operation and management of the Departments of the Government, to take a House bill as it is, let the Departments see where the trouble is, let them understand that where the bills originate, the body in sympathy with the Departments politically—and I do not speak of this as a political question, because it is not in the Committee on Appropriations—should provide for their wants. The restiveness that is felt there under this practice of the other body is just as great on the part of Democrats as on the part of Republicans, and I think it is so here in the body. It is not a political question, but it is a reproach urged against the Senate that it is extravagant, and the committee have concluded to take this bill from the House of Representatives practically as the House sent it here, and let the Departments see to it that hereafter their representations of the necessity for the use of money shall be made in season at the other end of the Capitol; that the House of Representatives shall be confronted with the necessity, and shall also see plainly and clearly that obvious items shall not be left off appropriation bills merely with the expectation and belief that the Senate will put them on, for so long as we go on and add these items and relieve the Departments upon the theory that the public service demands it, just so long it will be claimed at the other end that we are extravagant, increasing their appropriations, and at the close of every session we shall be confronted with the columns of figures of what we have done.

I say again that evil will never be cured; we shall never cease to be subjected to this pressure until we take a stand and say, "If you believe that these Departments can run with these small appropriations, let them try it for six months or for a year."

I have given plainly and frankly to the Senator from Connecticut the reason why this appropriation, which he has stated the reasons for so clearly, has been left off here. It is not better than certain other appropriations. There will be another bill, what is called the urgency deficiency appropriation bill, in a few days; I learn that the House committee is considering one; and, in view of the fact that the Senate Committee on Appropriations did not put these items into this bill and did not report them to this body, that the House committee is considering them, and they are likely, I may say, to be taught a lesson, and they will be on the next bill, I think it is better for good legislation, I think we shall stand better if we stick to the bill as the committee has reported it, just as the House has sent it to us. Hard as it may be in individual cases, it will be only a few days; but what little time is lost now, what hardship comes in one case—and I do not seek to make that smaller than it really is—all of us will gain in the benefit that we shall derive during the rest of the session on the numerous appropriation bills that will come before us; but if we put on now everything which has been left off, that will be expected always.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, this is, then, about the case, to state it frankly: Instead of adopting all that was agreed upon by everybody in the old deficiency bill, which bill ought to have given money enough to carry the Government through the last fiscal year, the committee of the other House has left off more than half a million of dollars. The Senator gives us to understand that the House expects the Senate, Democrats as well as Republicans, to put that on, and that they will be able then to point to the extravagance of the Senate in adding to appropriation bills. I do not care what they point to; I do not care what they say. Here is the fact that a contractor with the Government in his foolish generosity to us says, "You will not have any stamps if I do not work my mill, and I will work two months without a cent; I will borrow money at 6 per cent. interest to carry them on, and ask no interest from you, if you will try to get me paid next December as well as you can when Congress gets together." That money he is borrowing and paying interest for now. The Government has sold the envelopes and has the money in its Treasury, and now we are asked to assist the Appropriations Committee of the Senate in a little combat with the House Appropriations Committee, and sacrifice ourselves for this great, broad, general principle!

Sir, do it at somebody else's expense besides that of my constituent. Let him have his money; pay $9,000 for what you owe just as truly as you do for your shoes, your bread, and your butter. You have had our product for six months, you have sold our goods, and we are paying 6 per cent. to carry the debt now. I should like to know how you are going to reconcile my Connecticut friend to the broad principles of grand strategy that involve the carrying on of that kind of a fight with the House committee.

I sympathize with the Senator from Maine; I think I should feel a good deal as the Appropriations Committee feel. It is all very well to say that you are not going to yield and add to the bill; but I say you should pay your honest, indisputable debts if you add a million dollars to the bill.

My friend speaks of an urgent deficiency bill. No, sir; the urgent deficiency bill pertains to the probable deficiencies of the current fiscal year. So far as my item is concerned, this applies to a deficiency of last year, the exact state of which was ascertained and stated in the report of the Postmaster-General, who says it is a matter of honesty to pay it in an urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. HALE. One word, Mr. President. This is no controversy, no "combat," to use the word of the Senator from Connecticut, between the two committees. It has not assumed any phase of that kind. It is a question rather of self-respect on the part of this whole body. It is transferred from the room of the Committee on Appropriations to the Senate Chamber. Here in the very first bill that comes over we are confronted with this practice at the other end of the Capitol. Now, it is a hardship to the Senator's constituent. The case that he urges is plain, it is obvious, and we have thought in the Committee on Appropriations many times that the items which are left off appropriation bills are obvious items that nobody could object to because it is supposed that we will put them on for the reason that they are such. That is intolerable.

It is not the debatable items in many cases that are left off, but it is the items about which no man can make demur, about which no question can be raised, such as the item covered by the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, that are left off bills on purpose as we fear, that seeing how urgent they are, how undoubted the strength of their claim, the Senate must put them on. I repeat, sir, it is intolerable.

Now, it is for the Senate to decide. If the Senate takes this attitude and undertakes to carry it out there will never be a case where there will not be a hardship, there will never be a case where it will not grind somebody. I am sorry it grinds the constituent of the Senator from Connecticut; but this other practice has been grinding us ever since I have been a member of this body and a member of this committee, and there is no good reason why in considering the estimates which are made by the Departments after proper auditing and scrutiny, and after proper certification showing that there has been adjudication in the most solemn forms, these appropriations should be left off the bills that originate in the other end of the Capitol. There is no good reason why it should be so.

Debatable questions enough will arise where the two Houses will be in honest antagonism, and where the Senate will seek to put upon appropriation bills subjects that are objectionable to the committees of the House and to the entire body; but there is no sense, there is no justice, it is, I say again, intolerable that items upon which there is no dispute should be left off for no reason whatever that can be given. And every particle of testimony, every one of the reports upon which the Senate committee act being before the House committees when they consider the subjects, and all information that is at our door being at their door, it is intolerable, sir, that we should be continually confronted with such items being left off; and the Senate committee have recommended that the Senate take its stand here. It is for the Senate to decide what it will do in the matter. The committee has done its duty.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I do not see why the Senate should be dishonored by not paying a debt acknowledged to be due, because somebody else will not do its duty. How can we escape the responsibility? It seems to me it is our duty to put on all legitimate amendments. Here is a case where a debt is acknowledged and there is no question of it. I do not think we should be a party to bad faith or to teaching the public that the Government of the United States will not keep faith with its creditors and pay its debts. I would put on every claim about which there was no question, where there was an honest debt due, and I would pass the bill. If anybody else wanted to repudiate at the other end, the responsibility will not rest on us. I believe in taking a stand right now.

The case made by the Senator from Connecticut is absolutely plain; it is a shame to let the matter stand longer. The case is perfect, and it is dishonoring the Senate to pass a bill and omit that claim. Send it back to the House and let them repudiate it if they will, but not us. The country will find out who has done right and who has done wrong. All we have to do is to take care of our own consciences and do right here. I am in favor of the amendment, and I am in favor of every proposition as clearly right as that, and I hope the Senate will put it on and will stand by the bill in that form. The country is intelligent and will find out who is right and who is wrong. Because others say we are extravagant we should not be scared from doing our duty in that regard, and I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut will prevail. I want to vote for it. I hope the Senate will stand by it.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I do not know that I ought to delay the Senate any longer with this discussion, but I sympathize very much with the position which the Senator having this bill in charge has taken in this matter. I agree that the situation is intolerable, and I have felt it in past sessions and I feel it now. But it seems to me that we ought not to draw the line on this item, and I will tell the reason why I think we ought not to do so.

This is for a debt which the Government owes where it has had the material. As my colleague says, it has sold the material, not used it, got the money for it, and the money is in the Treasury of the United States, and our constituents need that money. They are not rich men; they can not afford to wait. It seems to me that we may draw the line at another class of cases when the House refuses to make appropriations for deficiencies to carry on the Government in the future. There, I think, we might take our stand. We might say to the House, "If you will not appropriate for what is necessary to carry on the Government during the rest of the fiscal year, we will accept the situation, and the Government works and the Government needs shall not be attended to;" but I do not think we ought to go so far as to say that we will not pay a debt about which there is no question, where the Government has the money; and, indeed, I think, in this particular thing the Committee on Appropriations may very fairly assume that the House overlooked it, that it made a mistake.

Mr. HALE. The same documents which have been referred to were before the House committee which were before our committee. There is not a particle of additional information here that was not there.

Mr. PLATT. But just look at it. This deficiency bill that came from the House last year included this as being an item which it was necessary to appropriate for in order to carry on the Government until the end of the fiscal year, which was June 30, 1887. Here are the three items in the old bill, which the proper Department estimated would be required to carry on the operations of the Government until June 30, 1887. That was in March, 1887. It comes over here, it is the print of the House bill which contains that, and now it can not be possible that the Committee on Appropriations in the House, having recommended that an appropriation should be made to carry on that work, and knowing, as the Senator says, that notwithstanding the failure of the appropriation it had been done, and that the Government owed for it, would deliberately leave it out.

Mr. HALE. Just what has been done.

Mr. PLATT. I do not believe that it was deliberate; I think it must have been a mistake. I should scarcely feel justified in standing here and assuming that the House Committee on Appropriations and the House itself, having estimated for this matter as one which was necessary to carry on the operations of the Government nearly a year ago, knowing that the work had been performed and that the Government owed every cent of it, and that there was no doubt about the amount that it owed, has now deliberately left it out. It is a pretty violent presumption, and I think the better way is to assume that in the haste of getting this deficiency bill over here, it is not the desire of the House and of its Appropriations Committee to refuse to pay the debts of the Government due more than seven months, that they overlooked this item, and the moment their attention is called to it they will gladly and joyfully put it in.

Mr. HALE. Several Senators have notified me of other amendments they wish to propose to this bill. It is very clear, therefore, that we shall not be able to finish it to-night.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let us have a vote.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate do now adjourn. Before putting the question on that motion, the Chair lays before the Senate the regular order, which is the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 25, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of committees for reports has been completed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. OWEN. I rise for the purpose of securing a proper reference for a bill which seems to have been improperly referred. I understand that it is not the rule that a bill improperly referred shall be sent by the committee which receives it to its proper committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would say it is.

Mr. OWEN. On the 9th of this month I introduced a bill for the erection of a public building at Logansport, Ind. By some mistake it got into the box for private bills. This morning the clerk of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds tells me that committee has not yet received it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A public bill should go through the regular channel of presentation in the House. If there be no objection, the change of reference desired by the gentleman from Indiana will be made.

There was no objection.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The resolution referred to the committee (on motion of Mr. CRISP) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections be allowed a clerk, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until June 30, 1888, at the rate of $2,000 per annum; and that the Committee on Appropriations be, and hereby is, instructed to provide for an annual clerk to the Committee on Elections for the next fiscal year in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill at the rate of $2,000 per annum.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts has had under consideration a resolution referred by the House, providing that the clerk of the Committee on Elections should be an annual instead of a session clerk, and report as follows:

By an act approved March 2, 1887, it is made the duty of the Clerk of the House to open the sealed packages of testimony in contested-election cases and cause the same to be printed and indexed. No provision is made for compensation to any clerk for the labor thus imposed. Necessarily this labor must be done during the vacation between the adjournment of Congress on the 4th of March and its reassembling in December following. Your committee learn from the Clerk of the House that he was personally engaged last spring and summer for months in reading proof from the Printing Office of the testimony in contested-election cases and preparing indexes thereto. Your committee believe that this duty should not be imposed upon the Clerk of the House without giving him some clerical assistance, and it seems appropriate that the clerk of the Committee on Elections should render such service. Your committee has prepared an amendment requiring the clerk of the Committee on Elections to do this work under the direction of the Clerk of the House, and, thus amended, the passage of the resolution is recommended.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT.

Add:

"Resolved further, That the clerk of the Committee on Elections shall, under the direction of the Clerk of the House, aid and assist in the preparation and indexing of the records in contested-election cases."

Mr. GRIMES. I think that the report of the committee explains itself, and unless some gentleman wishes to ask a question, I desire a vote upon the resolution and amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GRIMES].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to know if we are in the hour for the consideration of reports of committees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We are not. The gentleman from Georgia made this as a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the amendment again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Gentlemen about me were not aware that this was a matter for action and did not listen to the reading of the report. For one I should like to hear some explanation of it.

Mr. GRIMES. I can only ask that the report be read again. It explains itself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again read the report.

The report was again read.

The amendment proposed by the committee was agreed to, and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. GRIMES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to say that in each case the Committee on Printing conferred——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will come to order, so that the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] may be heard.

Mr. OATES. I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee what business there is before the Committee on Labor to authorize so much larger an expenditure for the printing of that committee than for many other important committees, for instance the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I was about to say that the Committee on Printing, in all these cases, conferred with the chairmen of the respective committees named in the resolution and the report, and while a limit is placed upon the amount which each committee will be permitted to expend, that limit is only fixed by our committee upon consultation with the chairman of the committee indicated and upon his statement that the amount named would be ample for his committee. It is not expected in each case that the entire amount allowed will be consumed. I move the previous question on the adoption of the report of the committee.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the substitute reported by the committee was agreed to, and the resolution as amended by the substitute was adopted.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

FORT BROWN MILITARY RESERVATION, TEXAS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for one hour for the consideration of bills heretofore reported from committees. The hour commences at twelve minutes before 1 o'clock; and the call rests with the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call up for present consideration a resolution of inquiry addressed to the Secretary of War in relation to the purchase of Fort Brown military reservation, Texas. I ask that there be some understanding between those who are in favor of this resolution, which has been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, and those who oppose it, with reference to length of debate. I would like very much to have the debate closed and the resolution acted on to-day. I wish to be perfectly fair toward those representing each side of this question, and therefore I propose that the time be divided equally. I suggest that thirty minutes be allowed each side for debate. The whole thirty minutes on the side of the committee will probably not be consumed, because, as I have said, we wish to have a vote to-day.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the resolution be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be read as a matter of course.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Whereas it appears by an act passed March, 1885, the sum of $160,000 was appropriated to enable the Secretary of War to acquire a good and valid title for the United States to the Fort Brown reservation, Texas, and to pay and extinguish all claims for the use and occupation of said reservation, provided that no part of this sum should be paid until a complete title be vested in the United States;

Whereas it is alleged that disputes have arisen between the claimants as to their respective shares of this appropriation, and that the Secretary of War has not paid any part of said amount;

Whereas by an act of Congress passed in 1873 the sum of $25,000 was appropriated for the purchase of the grounds and payment of the said Fort Brown, and in the report of General Sherman as to the sufficiency of the said sum, it is alleged that the payment of $160,000 therefor would be a fraud on the Government;

Whereas it is alleged that it will appear from the documentary evidence in the War Department, the Quartermaster-General's Office, also the evidence of officials now in Washington who have served at said post, likewise the testimony of other citizens which can be obtained, that the sum of $50,000 would be a large price to pay for said reservation, including rent for the use and occupation of the same: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to investigate the subject-matter herein named, with authority to send for persons and papers; also to inquire into and report as to what necessity exists, if any, for a military post at said point, and the cost to the United States of said post since 1865.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to withhold the payment of any part of said sum of $160,000 for the grounds and rents of the said Fort Brown reservation.

The report of the Committee on Military Affairs was read, as follows:

Mr. TOWNSHEND, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report (to accompany Mis. Doc. 70):

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution relating to the Fort Brown, Texas, reservation, have considered the same and recommend its adoption, with the following amendment: Strike out the word "directed" and insert the word "requested" in lieu thereof.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois to make some proposition about dividing the time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The time will be equally divided. I have arranged that with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN].

Mr. CRAIN. Are we to understand that the debate will close to-day?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I stated that I desired to have the debate close, so that we might take action on the resolution to day, if such is the will of the House. If the question is not disposed of to-day, it will of course go over until to-morrow, and we shall have another hour for its consideration.

Mr. CRAIN. I understand there is to be an equal division of time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to be perfectly fair toward those opposing the resolution, and will divide the time equally. For the present, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD].

Mr. CRAIN. Before the debate commences, I would like to be informed whether an amendment is in order now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Whenever the gentleman obtains the floor for that purpose an amendment will be in order. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] now holds the floor, and has yielded ten minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD].

Mr. LAIRD. There are two questions presented by the resolution: First, whether the sum of $160,000 appropriated (this sum of $160,000 under discussion was an item tacked on to the sundry civil bill in the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress without the knowledge of the House and without discussion. This bill carrying this item was approved March 3, 1885. It was to enable the Secretary of War to acquire good and valid title for the United States to the Fort Brown military reservation, Texas, to pay and extinguish all claims for the use and occupation of said reservation by the United States. See United States Statutes at Large, vol. 23, page 507) March 3, 1885, as an item in the sundry civil bill of the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress is an unreasonable sum to pay for the use and occupation of Fort Brown, Texas, from 1846 to 1886, forty years, and for the title to said Fort Brown and the reservation, in all, 358 acres of land.

Second, whether it is desirable to continue Fort Brown from this time forward as a military post.

If the House should decide that it was not desirable to continue Fort Brown longer as a military post, then so much of the item of $160,000 appropriated as was to be applied to the purchase of the site and reservation can be deducted from the principal sum, without any unnecessary discussion of the question of the value of the fee to the 358 acres of land now used or reserved by the military authorities of the United States, in which case the question would be simply what is reasonably due from the United States for the rent of the Fort Brown reservation, 358 acres, from 1846 to the present?

Fort Brown is a point on the Rio Grande River in the State of Texas. It is opposite to and about one mile distant from Matamoras, Mexico. The present site and reservation has been in the possession of the United States since 1846, when it was taken possession of as an act of war by General Taylor, commanding the army of the United States on that portion of the Mexican frontier.

The title to the reservation has never been acquired by the Government, although the question of so doing seems to have been often discussed by military officers. Formerly the prevailing opinion among them seems to have been favorable to the purchase of the site; latterly the clear weight of opinion is against its purchase at any price, and against its longer maintenance as a military post.

The nearest approach to a settlement of the purchase-price of this property on the part of the United States, which I have been able to find, is the report of the board of Army officers convened under the authority of an act of Congress March 3, 1873, the same being an act to provide for the purchase of land by the Secretary of War for the United States, in the State of Texas, for the sites of forts and military posts. (17 United States Statutes at Large, p. 614; act limited to three years from passage.)

This board of officers reported January 16, 1874, in favor of the purchase of the site and reservation of Fort Brown for a military post, and state that they are of the opinion that $25,000 is a fair valuation for the same. This recommendation is approved by General Sheridan, commanding the Army; by Mr. Belknap, then Secretary of War, and by General Grant, then President. The report of that board, together with the indorsements, is as follows:

FORT BROWN, TEXAS.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., January 16, 1874.

SIR: At a meeting of the board convened under authority of act of Congress approved March 3, 1874, held this day, the following resolution was passed:

"Resolved, That if the United States have not a valid claim thereto, the board recommend the purchase of the tract or parcel of land lying upon the Rio Grande River, adjacent to the city of Brownsville, Tex., upon which the post of Fort Brown is situated, and known as the military reservation (containing 320 acres, more or less), for the use of the United States for said military post. The board is of the opinion that $25,000 is a fair valuation for this tract."

The southern portion below old Fort Brown is of little or no value, but it is deemed advisable to include it in the recommendation by reason of its location.

The property just mentioned is in litigation, but a receiver has been appointed by the district court, who is authorized by special order to rent or sell it, and receive the moneys therefor. The land upon which the national cemetery at Brownsville is situated was purchased in this way.

An act of Congress, March 3, 1875 (vol. 18 U. S. Statutes at Large, part 3, page 391), was passed appropriating the sum of $25,000 for the purchase of this property, pursuant to the recommendation of this board, but nothing came of it, owing, so far as your committee is able to ascertain, solely to the fact that the title was so in dispute that no satisfactory conveyance could be given to the land. This act expired by its own limitation in three years after its passage.

1. The first question presented under the resolution of inquiry is, what is a reasonable rental for this property from 1846 to 1886?

In 1869 W. A. Wainwright, captain and assistant quartermaster, United States Army, reports by letter February 20, 1869, addressed to Quartermaster-General United States Army, giving it as his judgment that $1,000 per year would be a just allowance for the rent of the reservation ground at Fort Brown. In part, the letter of Captain Wainwright is a follows:

OFFICE ASSISTANT QUARTERMASTER, U. S. ARMY,
Brownsville, Tex., February 20, 1869.

GENERAL: I have the honor to hand you, per express, the papers in Cavazos' claim, received January 26, 1869, and to submit original letters in answer to my request as to the fair amount due as rent for the military reservation at this post, and my report and opinion on the same.

Abstract of valuation for rent of land on which Fort Brown (United States military reservation) is situated, at Brownsville, Tex., containing 358 acres.

| | Per annum. |
|---|---|
| John McAllen values at $1.50 per acre | $537.00 |
| Samuel P. Gelston values at $1.50 per acre | 537.00 |
| R. Dalzell | 1,000.00 |
| A. Werbiski values at $10 per acre | 3,580.00 |
| S. A. Belden | 15,000.00 |

The reports or statements of Messrs. McAllen, Gelston, and Dalzell are below what I consider a fair rental value, though from conversation with these gentlemen I am convinced that their valuation is based upon the best of reasoning, especially that of Mr. McAllen, who shows forth in his letter that he would be willing to rent his lands at the same, or less, and refers to the little value of Brownsville and its surroundings were it not for the military reservation or post at this place. From this springs a question upon which rests the whole matter of the rent of the land. It is claimed by Mr. Trainer, the agent, that my report should embrace a certain amount of money for rent per year, or so many years from the time the Government first took possession, and an increase as the town increased in size. I contend that if any difference is made in the amount of rent per year, it should be a decrease, for was it not for the military post at this place there would be no Brownsville, and it is firmly believed that a donation of 1,000 acres in as good a position as this could be had if it would be the means of retaining the post, provided the Government intended abandoning this.

From experience of one year at this post, I feel that I am prepared to say that four-fifths of the money circulated here is expended by the Government, and that when the present buildings of the post are finished and nothing is left but to take care of the property here the trade of the city will greatly decrease. The transient people, mostly Jews, will take residence at some other points, and the business will settle down to its former level. While it is the intention of this office to be just to claimants, and at the same time not forget the interests of Government, it does appear like systematic peculation to present and endeavor to collect such an account against the Government as the bill inclosed with the papers in this claim shows, being nearly five times as much as the value of the land itself. There is from the reservation line to the lagoon, on the northwest side of the reservation, 120 acres of fine land, and could it be settled that the town would increase without the reservation, same would be valuable—say, near the estimate of Mr. Belden—the remainder is nothing but sediment, a fine, soft, washy sand that is of no value whatever, and is only used for corrals and such purposes as does not require any extra soil.

By reference to a plan of the reservation and line of the Rio Grande River, in 1846, forwarded the Quartermaster-General from this office January 31, 1869, it will be seen that much of the ground has been lost, and it still continues to lose.

Action is now being taken to save as much of it as possible, but only to protect and save that which is most valuable.

The papers in this case are very voluminous, and it is not deemed necessary to lengthen this report; and, in conclusion, I would state that the sum of $1,000 per annum, it is believed, would be a just amount for the rent of the United States military reservation grounds at this post.

I have the honor to be, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. A. WAINWRIGHT,
Captain and Assistant Quartermaster, United States Army.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. M. C. MEIGS,
Quartermaster-General, U. S. Army, Washington, D. C.

In May, 1869, Captain Wainwright writes commenting on his letter of February 20, 1869, and therein explains the apparently exorbitant estimate for rent made by Mr. Werbiski, showing that his estimate of $10 an acre, supposed to be for rent, was in reality his estimate of the value of the fee in the land. This letter is as follows:

OFFICE ASSISTANT QUARTERMASTER UNITED STATES ARMY,
Brownsville, Tex., May 29, 1869.

GENERAL: I have the honor to return herewith copy of my letter to you dated February 20, 1869, with memorandum of remarks on same attached, made by you in reference to the claim for rent, etc., of the United States military reservation at this post.

In reply to your first interrogatory I would state, that the 358 acres occupied by the post of Fort Brown, and known as the United States military reservation, is a portion of the original grant known as the "Potrero Espiritu Santo," the boundaries of said grant being minutely described in "Wallace's Reports, United States Supreme Court, volume 6, Cavazos vs. Trevenie, page 773." I inclose herewith a small tracing showing the boundary of this extensive tract or grant known as the "Agostadero" or "Potrero Espiritu Santo."

Secondly. The original grant did include the city of Brownsville and this 358 acres occupied by Fort Brown, but the title to the incorporated city limits of the city of Brownsville, including this reservation, is now and has been, since 1853, in litigation; and I can find no record or information relative to this United States military reservation being in any way set apart as the share of the present claimant (Maria Josefa Cavazos), as her share of the original grant.

Since the receipt of the copy of my letter with your remarks attached thereto, I have given this case close attention. In reply to the interrogatory "What land in that region is now or was when the United States forces captured Brownsville worth $10 per acre?" I would state that there was none and is none at present, except town lots; and it is fair to presume that had not the United States Government selected this site as a military reservation and improved it as it is for permanent occupancy, it could now be purchased of the bona fide owners (if there are such) at a price not to exceed $2 per acre for fee-simple.

The United States military reservation has made Brownsville what it is, and without it Brownsville would soon be numbered and spoken of as a town that once existed. Brownsville in itself has no natural advantages, and the idea presented by the claimant, that the United States military reservation encroaches upon and thereby contracts the limits of the town is absurd; the town has and will always seek the reservation, and the benefits to be derived from it. Almost any of the lands adjoining the city can be bought for from 50 cents to $2 per acre.

In regard to my former report as to a reasonable rent to be paid for the use of these grounds per year, Mr. Werbiski informs me that he was mistaken in the intent of my communication to him; that the price he gave, namely, $10 per acre, was intended as his valuation of the premises for title in fee-simple, and not $10 per acre rent per annum.

I inclose a copy of my communication to various parties requesting their opinion, which is considered to be plain, and could not have been misunderstood.

This last statement of Mr. Werbiski will take the place of the one previously forwarded you with my report. On a further examination and consideration of the case in question, I think Mr. Samuel A. Belden may be indirectly interested in the premises, he having been, I find, a party at interest in a number of lawsuits relative to title of a number of tracts of land embraced in this original extensive land grant, and is still a heavy land-holder in this vicinity; consequently a large price for the reservation grounds would increase the value of his lands. I therefore consider that his statement should not be taken into consideration.

Mr. John McAllen is an old resident, a man of vast property and good sound judgment. I consider that his opinion should have great weight in the adjustment of this claim for rent. Mr. Gelston is also a man of extensive acquaintance; knows this frontier in every respect; is a man of much experience and excellent judgment.

These men are both disinterested parties, as also Mr. Werbiski, and all men of wealth and standing in this community.

I have the honor to be, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. A. WAINWRIGHT,
Captain and Assistant Quartermaster, United States Army.

Maj. Gen. M. C. MEIGS,
Quartermaster-General, U. S. Army, Washington, D. C.

A letter from John McAllen, a citizen of Brownsville, Tex., explaining his reason for the estimate for rent which he makes, accompanies the report of Captain Wainwright, and I make this letter, together with the one from Mr. Gelston on the same subject, a part of my remarks:

BROWNSVILLE, February 5, 1869.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your esteemed note wishing my opinion in regard to the annual rent of the land known as the Government reserve at the aforesaid post. In my opinion it is worth $1.50 per acre, as I should be happy to have the opportunity to rent to the Government the lands at Edinburgh or any other place along the Rio Grande where I am owner or agent, and should consider myself well paid at this rate or less, for, if Fort Brown had not been established where it is now, the land of Brownsville and surroundings would have been of little value.

I have the honor, sir, to be, your most obedient,

JOHN McALLEN.

Capt. W. A. WAINWRIGHT,
United States Quartermaster, Fort Brown, Texas.

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., February 16, 1869.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your communication of the 5th instant, asking my opinion as to a reasonable amount for the United States Government to pay as a rent for the lands now occupied by the Government as a military reservation at this place, etc., I have the honor to state that in my opinion $1.50 per acre per annum would be a fair and just compensation for said lands.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAM. P. GELSTON.

W. A. WAINWRIGHT, Esq.,
Captain and Quartermaster, U. S. A., Fort Brown, Texas.

Quartermaster-General Meigs, in a letter dated July 20, 1869, and addressed to the then Secretary of War, Hon. John A. Rawlins, put the just annual rent of this property at $500, and says, commenting on that sum: "If it is set at $500 a year it will far exceed any reasonable interest upon the capital which represents the value of the land; indeed, will exceed this probable total actual capital." I give here the entire letter:

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 20, 1869.

SIR: I have the honor to return the papers in the case of the claim for damages to and rent of the site of Fort Brown, near Brownsville, Tex., since its first occupation during the Mexican war, amounting to $130,416.

The case has been carefully examined, and the full abstract prepared in this office brings me to the following conclusions:

The value of the lands, some 358 acres, embraced within the reservation does not now exceed on the average $2 to $10 per acre in fee-simple.

Were the post abandoned, a new site in as healthy a locality and equally commanding the river could be purchased for from 50 cents to $2 per acre. (See report of Captain Wainwright, pages 16 and 17, report and abstract herewith.)

The claim for $50,726.20 for damages to crops, fences, etc., arising during the war with Mexico, is clearly not within the competence of the Quartermaster's Department to settle.

The just annual rent which should be paid for the use of the 358 acres, embraced within what has been called the military reserve of Fort Brown, is very small. If it is set at $500 a year, it will far exceed any reasonable interest upon the capital which represents the value of the land; indeed, will exceed this probable total actual capital.

The Attorney-General, upon the papers heretofore submitted to him, has decided that it would be safe to consider Mrs. Cavazos as the owner so far as to settle with her for rent from the 20th of November, 1853, to date.

For rents accruing before the 20th November, 1853, the other heirs have equal legal rights with her, her interest amounting to only one undivided third part of the whole tract.

But since this case was before the Attorney-General certain papers have been received, principally through Captain Wainwright, assistant quartermaster, etc., which show that legal proceedings are still in progress affecting the title to the land in question.

I recommend that the case be again referred to the Attorney-General, with request that he will advise the War Department what effect, if any, these papers may have upon the status of the case.

The assertion that a former Secretary of War, Mr. Conrad, had rendered a decision fixing the amount of rent that should be paid, seems to be disproved by the papers herewith. (See page 23 of the report and abstract.)

The assertion that a contract was at any time made, fixing the rate of rent by any competent officer of the Army, seems equally disproved. (See pages 3 and 4 of said report and abstract.)

I am of opinion that it would not be safe for the War Department, in the present status of the case, to pay rent to any one for this land, and for the payment of the rents charged for so many years past there has been no appropriation made by Congress.

The existence of such a claim was unknown to the Quartermaster-General until within a few months, and no item for its payment was included in the estimates submitted to Congress.

Out of the appropriations for the present fiscal year a rent of $500 for the current year might be paid, provided the Secretary does not, in view of the whole case, think that too much.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. C. MEIGS,
Quartermaster-General and Brevet Major-General, U. S. A.

Hon. JOHN A. RAWLINS,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

The same act of Congress which authorized the purchase of Fort Brown in 1875, and appropriated $25,000 therefor (act of March 3, 1875, vol. 18, U. S. Statutes at Large, part 3, p. 391), also authorized the purchase of Ringgold Barracks at $10,000, Fort Duncan (Eagle Pass) at $10,000, and directed the Secretary of War to accept title to the site and reservation of Fort McIntosh free. Fort McIntosh, which was so donated to the United States, is located at Laredo, a city of 6,000 inhabitants, on the Rio Grande, 125 miles above Ringgold Barracks, and has two railroads crossing at that point into Mexico.

It is understood that the sum of $10,000 paid for Ringgold Barracks included all charges for use and occupation. Ringgold is also on the Rio Grande, at what is called Rio Grande City. It is a place of considerable importance, and was occupied by the United States about the same time that Fort Brown was.

As a circumstance to be considered in estimating the value of the use of the land near Brownsville on which Fort Brown is located, it is to be remembered that the census of 1880 shows a decrease in the population of the city from 1870; and further, it appears from a letter of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury to the House of Representatives, in answer to its resolution passed in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress (see Executive Document No. 238), that there was for the year 1886 $22,438.70 of customs duties collected at Brownsville, Tex., at a cost to the Government of $42,428.50, or a cost of $1.89 in expense for every dollar of duties received.

As a circumstance reflecting light on the question of the value of the fee to the land in question and rental thereof, it appears in a statement of John D. M. Call, acting comptroller of the State of Texas, that the average assessed value of land in Cameron County, Texas, that being the county in which Fort Brown is located, for the year 1886 was 461.8 cents per acre.

2. The second proposition of the resolution has to do with the purchase of the site and reservation of Fort Brown.

This is purely a military question. The United States certainly does not want 358 acres of real estate at Brownsville, Tex., for any other than military purposes, and if it does not want land there for that purpose it does not want it at all.

In his report for the year 1882, General Sherman, commanding the armies of the United States, uses this language in reference to the post under consideration:

Fort Brown is subject to overflow, and during this year has been afflicted with yellow fever in its worst form. I advise its absolute abandonment.

Ringgold Barracks being the property of the United States, and with reasonably good barracks, should be held a few years until the extension of the railroad down the valley of the Rio Grande from Laredo will enable us to dispatch troops to any threatened point promptly, when Ringgold Barracks may also be allowed to pass away.

The strategic points of the Texas frontier are: San Antonio, McIntosh, and Duncan on the Lower Rio Grande; Fort Davis, with Presidio and Camp Rice, on the Upper Rio Grande; and Fort Bliss. (Forty-seventh Congress, second session, Ex. Doc. 1, part 2, p. 11.)

The General of the Army, in the further consideration of the subject of obsolete military posts, declares the post of Fort Brown to be obsolete, and recommends the abandonment of the same.

The following military posts are obsolete and ought to be abandoned. To accomplish this end Congress should be asked for authority to dispose of all the buildings and materials which can not be moved, and to sell the reservations, or to transfer the same to the Interior Department for sale or grant under existing laws for the disposition of the public domain, namely:

* * * * * * *

Fort Brown, Texas.

(Same document as above.)

Previous to this report, namely, February 10, 1880, General Sherman recommends the renewal of the appropriation of 1874 for $25,000 for the purchase of Fort Brown, and that it be tendered the holders of the title, and if refused, then that the post of Fort Brown, Texas, be dismantled and the garrison removed to Ringgold Barracks. He says:

Fort Brown has been held by United States troops since 1846; is located opposite the somewhat important Mexican town of Matamoras; is only important for that reason and no other.

The text of his letter is here given:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C., February 10, 1880.

Respectfully returned to the honorable Secretary of War, recommending that he submit it to the proper committee of Congress, asking a renewal of the appropriation of $25,000; that if such appropriation be made the sum be tendered the devisee of Señora Cavazos, or the real owner thereof, and if this price be refused, that the post of Fort Brown, Texas, be dismantled and the garrison removed to Ringgold Barracks.

Fort Brown has been held by United States troops since 1846; is located opposite the somewhat important Mexican town of Matamoras; is only important for that reason and no other.

There are some valuable buildings there needed for the shelter of troops, but in a military sense the site has no more strategic value than any other mile on the Lower Rio Grande.

The Adjutant-General will send a copy of this paper and indorsements to the department commander, General Ord.

W. T. SHERMAN, General.

General Sherman makes a further reference to the matter January 24, 1881, saying, "I understand that the Rio Grande is rapidly cutting away the bank" (American bank), "endangering the site of Fort Brown. This may be the reason why the owners of the ground are so anxious to sell to the United States."

The text of this letter is also given.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, January 24, 1881.

Respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War.

I understood Colonel Otis, Twentieth Infantry, recently brought to Fort Leavenworth from Fort Brown, to say that the Rio Grande River was rapidly cutting away the bank, endangering the site of Fort Brown. This may be the reason why the owners of the ground are so anxious to sell to the United States.

W. T. SHERMAN, General.

In April, 1883, General Sherman again refers to this subject, this time in a letter calling the attention of the Secretary of War to a letter from General Sheridan. He says:

General Sheridan confirms what I have heretofore repeatedly reported, that the new railroads of Texas have entirely left out Fort Brown, and that it will be unwise to buy the site or expend any money thereon henceforward.

Letter of April 25, 1883, to Secretary of War. This is indorsed by Secretary Lincoln as follows:

The views of the General are concurred in.

ROBT. T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

The following is the letter in full:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C., April 25, 1883.

This letter is respectfully submitted to the honorable Secretary of War, inviting his special attention thereto.

General Sheridan confirms fully what I have hitherto repeatedly reported, that the new railroads of Texas have entirely left out Fort Brown, and that it will be unwise to buy the site or expend any money thereon henceforward.

W. T. SHERMAN, General.

The views of the General are concurred in.

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT, April 28, 1883.

The letter of General Sheridan to General Sherman, which called forth these comments, is in part as follows:

The ground on which some of it (Fort Brown) is built is being cut out by the river, and will eventually be washed away, from present indications, and I think it would be about as well to let the washing go on. * * *

The old post has served its purpose and we should not spend any more money on it.

No money from the appropriation for the defense of the Rio Grande frontier should be spent in acquiring title to Fort Brown. This point has been left behind by Forts McIntosh, Duncan, and Bliss.

The following is the letter in full:

HEADQUARTERS MILITARY DIVISION OF THE MISSOURI,
Chicago, Ill., April 23, 1883.

MY DEAR GENERAL SHERMAN: While I did not go to Fort Brown on my recent trip to Texas, I accumulated as much information about it as I could.

There is no harbor there, and probably never will be at the mouth of the Rio Grande. Brazos Santiago is a fairly good harbor for Texas, but the present railroad system in Mexico cuts it off, and diminishes the commercial value of Matamoras and Brownsville, and Fort Brown is of importance only as a revenue-post in the commerce between those points. Two companies are sufficient there; it probably will never be a base of military operations, and it is in the yellow fever zone. The ground on which some of it is built is being cut out by the river, and will eventually be washed away, from present indications, and I think it would be about as well to let the washing go on. The ground does not belong to us, and our loss would be very little. We never get much for abandoned posts any way. The old post has served its purpose, and we should not spend any more money on it. No money from the appropriation for the defense of the Rio Grande frontier should be spent in acquiring title to Fort Brown. This point has been left behind by Forts McIntosh, Duncan, and Bliss.

I am, my dear General, yours, truly,

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General.

In a letter to the Secretary of War, of June 2, 1884, General Sheridan, referring to this matter, says:

The present site of Fort Brown is in litigation, and there is also danger of its being washed away, and while I will now consent that there should be a two-company post there, I doubt the advisability of purchasing the present site, and would prefer that in the future a new one, near Brownsville, be selected.

The letter is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, June 2, 1884.

Respectfully submitted to the honorable Secretary of War. The present site of Fort Brown is in litigation, and there is also danger of its being washed away, and while I will now consent that there should be a two-company post there, I doubt the advisability of purchasing the present site, and would prefer that in the future a new one, near Brownsville, be selected.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General.

Article V of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, executed February 2, 1848, fixes the middle of the deepest channel of the Rio Grande, or the Rio Bravo del Norte, as the boundary line between the two countries, and as a consequence, if it be decided to purchase and maintain Fort Brown this country will have to appropriate money to defend the site from the action of the river, or it may find itself in the awkward position of having purchased a site and established a military post which under the dual operation of the treaty and the river may become the property of Mexico.

Mr. Speaker, the question to be answered by the House in ordering this investigation is whether 358 acres of wild, uncultivated land, useless for any purpose, save grazing, covered with grease-wood and mesquite brush, and which doubtless cost less than $1,000, original capital, is worth in fee and rent for forty years $160,000.

The committee are willing to find a reasonable value, as an investment, for the land and allow a reasonable interest on the amount as the rental, and no more.

We see no reason why the Government should be mulcted in $160,000, either through the carelessness of Congress or the ignorance or indifference of its military officers.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, how much time is remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Forty minutes of the time remain.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Nebraska consumed only ten minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from Illinois withdrew his call for the regular order and allowed some time to expire.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I did not understand that that was to be taken from the time allowed for consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will deal liberally with gentlemen in reference to time, as there was a misunderstanding, and will assume that forty-five minutes yet remain.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield twenty-eight minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN].

Mr. CRAIN. I desire first to submit an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the resolution by striking out the following words:

"Also to inquire into and report as to what necessity exists, if any, for a military post at said point, and the cost to the United States of said post since 1865."

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT], and I hope when I shall have consumed the remainder of the time allotted to me the Chair will notify me, so as to reserve that portion for him according to my promise.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the question of an investigation of the amount to be paid for the site of Fort Brown comes up at a very late day. It strikes me as very singular that the Cerberus of the Treasury and the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, both of whom were members of the Committee on Appropriations which made this appropriation in the Forty-eighth Congress, should not then have discovered the reasons why the Government of the United States ought not to pay the amount which was appropriated by the act which they recommended and which that Congress passed. I excuse the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] because, although it is a familiar principle of law that ignorantia legis neminem excusat, he is not familiar with the facts in this case except in so far as some individual has made himself a siphon between outside individuals and the gentleman from Nebraska.

Why is it that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], when he was a member of the Appropriations Committee that recommended the appropriation for the expenditure of this sum of money, did not raise his voice in the committee in opposition to the amount, if, as he alleges, it was too large? Why is it that he did not, in consonance with that reputation which he has made for himself throughout the country as the watch-dog of the Treasury, oppose the passage of the appropriation act which provided that the owners of the site of Fort Brown should receive the sum which was recommended by the committee? Why was it, I ask further, that the gentleman who has the distinguished honor of adorning and animating the chairmanship of the Committee on Military Affairs did not, when a member of the Committee on Appropriations which recommended this item and asked the House to adopt it, oppose the measure instead of sitting silently by and permitting the House of Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress to pass without comment the item appropriating this amount for the purchase of the fort?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does the gentleman desire an answer?

Mr. CRAIN. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. While I am under obligation to the gentleman for the compliment which he has paid to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs——

Mr. CRAIN. Do not take up too much of my time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to say distinctly that my recollection is clear that as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I opposed the appropriation of the enormous sum which was proposed to be employed in this purchase.

I stood then where I stand to-day, in the belief that it was an exorbitant sum, and I have great doubt in my mind whether there is any need whatever for a fort at that point.

Mr. CRAIN. The gentleman from Illinois does not stand to-day where he stood then. He may have opposed it in committee, but to-day he opposes it on the floor of the House, and he did not oppose it on the floor of the House then.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I did not occupy then the position I do now on the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CRAIN. I suppose if the gentleman did not occupy that position now he would not take the stand he does to-day.

Nearly four years after the passage of an act, which was either recommended by the members of the Committee on Appropriations or tacitly acquiesced in, we have two members of that committee coming before this House and telling the House that the appropriation for the purchase of this property was excessive, if not fraudulent. And upon what basis does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]—who is not in his seat now, but was a moment ago, when I commenced to discuss this proposition—upon what basis does he present this resolution to the House? Sir, he presents it upon vague, general, indifferent allegations, and I will tell the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] that this question was discussed, and fully discussed, in the Senate of the United States. Objection was made to this item in the Senate of the Forty-eighth Congress, and after an extended and exhaustive debate upon the very question which is raised on this resolution the Senate coincided with the House, and the appropriation item became a law.

But, Mr. Speaker, I oppose, not the investigation in reference to the price to be paid, although Fort Brown is in my district and although the Forty-eighth Congress has appropriated this sum of money, which is pronounced to be less than the property is worth, not for the site alone, but for the use and occupation for more than forty years. I am not opposed to an investigation of this question. If by any accident, if by any negligence of the Committee on Appropriations, or of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], the Forty-eighth Congress passed a law appropriating more money for this property and its use and occupation for over forty years than they were worth, then I, as a representative of the people of this country, do not propose to stand in my place here and oppose any investigation of that question. If the price is either excessive or fraudulent, the people of this country ought not to be compelled to pay that price.

I do not oppose any investigation of the question whether $160,000 was too much or not for the fee of the property and for its use and occupancy since the year 1846, when the fort was erected by General Taylor; but I do oppose, Mr. Speaker, the extension of the rights of this special committee of investigation to inquire into the necessity for the continuance of Fort Brown. I do it, first, because the history of this country shows that such an investigation is unnecessary and useless. Suppose that the gentleman from Nebraska and the other distinguished gentlemen on the Committee on Military Affairs were to bring in a report to this House saying the continuance of Fort Brown was a necessity, and as against that I produced letters from the commanding general of the Department of Texas and the commanding general of the Army, what would the gentleman do? And I ask the gentleman from Nebraska, I ask him to answer the question now, if that subcommittee is appointed will you not inquire from the commander-in-chief of the Army and from the commander of the Department of Texas whether it is necessary to continue Fort Brown opposite the city of Matamoras? The gentleman, if he pleases, will answer the question right now.

Mr. LAIRD. I find General Sherman in his report and letters——

Mr. CRAIN. The gentleman will please answer my question. If that committee is appointed would you not call on General Sheridan and General Stanley, the commander-in-chief of the Army and the commander of the department of Texas, to testify whether it is necessary to continue that fort? Or would you act on your own judgment?

Mr. LAIRD. I would act on military authority. The military authority is against the continuance of the post. We have letters from General Sherman and others.

Mr. CRAIN. General Sherman is not in command of the Army now.

Mr. LAIRD. He was in his time.

Mr. CRAIN. I have a letter from General Sheridan, in which he asserts that the continuance of Fort Brown is a necessity. I will read it.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1888.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 9th instant, I have the honor to inform you that I have been familiar with Fort Brown, Texas, since 1854. It is situated on the east bank of the Rio Grande, near Brownsville, Tex., and opposite the Mexican town of Matamoras, and during the war with Mexico was a very important station. It is now connected by rail with Point Isabel, 22 miles distant, on the Gulf of Mexico, but has no railway connection with other points in the United States, and there are no other railroads in that section of Texas. It is the principal trading town for that region of the State, and through it much of the commerce of Northeastern Mexico finds its outlet to the Gulf. Matamoras, Mexico, has a population of about 20,000; Brownsville, Tex., of about 6,000, and between them and near the present post the changes in the channel of the Rio Grande through the action of the periodical overflows is continually liable to transfer territory from this country to Mexico, or the reverse, with all the possibilities of confusion and trouble consequent upon such conditions.

For these various reasons I believe a garrison should be maintained at Fort Brown, and most likely for a long time to come. The presence of a large force is not necessary, but it will probably always be advantageous to keep there about two or three companies for such emergencies as might arise, as, owing to its rather isolated position, troops can not readily be assembled there, and I also esteem it of great importance to continue the post as a check on smuggling, which is very prevalent along that portion of the Rio Grande.

Very truly, yours,

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General.

Hon. W. H. CRAIN,
House of Representatives.

Now, the gentleman has told us that if this subcommittee were appointed it would look to the General of the Army for information upon the question whether this post should be continued or not, and when I produce and read upon this floor with the acquiescence—nay, with the consent, because I asked the General of the Army for his consent—when I produce and read upon this floor a statement made by him officially, to the effect that it is necessary to continue the post, why, I ask, ought this House to authorize the Committee on Military Affairs to make a special investigation on the subject? I repeat what I have said, that I do not oppose an investigation in regard to the price for the fee, or for the use and occupancy, and if the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] will permit me to state the proposition that he and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] made to me— —

Mr. LAIRD. I will.

Mr. CRAIN. I have the permission of the gentleman from Nebraska to make this statement. When the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] approached me on this subject in the last Congress, I told them both that individually I was perfectly willing there should be an investigation of this charge of excess in the payment, but that I would oppose an inquiry as to the necessity of the continuance of the post, and they then made the proposition to me, both of them together, that they would strike out of the resolution the part which provides for an investigation of that question if I would agree that the other part of it should pass. To that I did agree; but, as the gentlemen know, obstacles were interposed at the other end of the Capitol which prevented the carrying out of the agreement, or quasi agreement, made between them and me. If they were willing to submit that proposition to me then, I ask them why they do not accept the amendment which I have proposed? In addition to the statements made in the letter from the Lieutenant-General which I have just had read, I have a letter from the commander of the Department of Texas upon the same subject, and I doubt not that the Committee on Military Affairs and this House will regard his testimony as competent as perhaps the best testimony that can be adduced upon this question, because I believe that the House would prefer—I say it with all due respect to the ex-military gentlemen on the Committee on Military Affairs—I believe that this House would prefer the evidence of gentlemen in the active service of their country to-day to any testimony which might be given either by civilians or by gentlemen who have made their army records in the past history of this country.

Under date of January 14, 1888, General Stanley, in command of the Department of Texas, writes as follows, in response to a letter from me inviting his opinion as to the necessity for the continuance of the post at Fort Brown:

SIR: In answer to your letter of the 19th instant I have the honor to state that the post of Fort Brown is built upon a reservation of 358¼ acres of land immediately adjoining the town of Brownsville, Tex., and situated on the Rio Grande River, by river route 65 miles and by land 22 miles above the mouth of that river. It is the most southern post of the United States, excepting Key West, Fla. It is connected with Point Isabel and ocean navigation by a narrow-gauge railroad 22 miles in length. Immediately opposite is the Mexican city of Matamoras, which is fortified with earthworks, and where the Mexican Government usually keeps two regiments of troops, and the headquarters of a brigadier-general. The post was established in 1846 by General Taylor, at the outbreak of the Mexican war, and has been occupied by United States troops ever since, excepting the interval of the civil war, when it was held as a very important post by the Confederate authorities. The improvements on the reservation consist of about forty buildings of more or less value. Of these, twelve are of brick and substantial; the remainder of frame, in fair condition, but needing repairs. Fort Brown, as a military station, is an absolute necessity, and occupies a very important point geographically and strategically on our Mexican frontier. Granting that we have no desire for Mexican territory, and hoping that we may never again have war with Mexico, the necessity for this post still remains.

There you have the testimony of the commander of the Department of Texas, in conjunction with the testimony of the Lieutenant-General of the Army.

General Stanley continues:

The nearest military post to Fort Brown is Fort Ringgold, 100 miles by land, 300 by river, and on the left bank of the Rio Grande. The frequency of thefts of horses and cattle and of crimes of violence to persons and robberies of stores and ranches on the frontier between Ringgold and Fort Brown has made it necessary to keep up two special stations with a detachment of troops at each, one at Santa Maria, 25 miles from Fort Brown, and one at Edinburgh, 58 miles from Fort Brown.

Matamoras, opposite to Fort Brown, has a population of 18,000, and is the principal city in the State of Tamaulipas, which has a population of 120,000. This State of Tamaulipas is noted for the turbulent, warlike, and aggressive character of its people. It is safe to say that one-half the revolutions that have disturbed the Republic of Mexico since their independence in 1822 have had their origin in this State. The great revolution that placed the present executive of Mexico in power had its beginning right at Matamoras and Brownsville. The central government of Mexico hold a large force of soldiers in Tamaulipas, and yet not a year passes without rebellions, robberies by wholesale, and invariably when intimidated the discomfited party flee to our side of the Rio Grande in a mood to appropriate anything they can lay their hands upon.

For these reasons alone Fort Brown must continue a military post; its facilities for transportation and the improvements already made upon the reservation make it preferable to any point on the Lower Rio Grande filling the necessary conditions.

Yours respectfully,

D. S. STANLEY,
Brigadier-General, U. S. A., Commanding Department of Texas.

I have another letter to the same effect from the commander-in-chief of the Army, dated yesterday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] has now five minutes of his time remaining. He intimated to the Chair that he desired to give five minutes to some other gentleman.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, before taking my seat I want to call attention to one other matter. In the first place, there are $75,000 worth of buildings on that site. If the reservation be abandoned, those buildings belong to the owners of the property. In the next place, there is a cemetery there; and in a letter from the commander-in-chief of the Army it is stated that 3,000 soldiers are buried there. Now, since I have been a member of this House I have seen large appropriations made here for the maintenance of national cemeteries. I have voted cheerfully for those appropriations, because I believed them to be right.

Side by side as they fell in the moss-covered dell
We have tenderly laid them at rest.
Who shall tell us to-day the blue from the gray
By the sods that lie cold on their breast?

Bloom the roses as red on the moss-covered bed
And the mocking-bird carols as free;
Droops the willow as low on friend as on foe;
Sigh the zephyrs as soft as the sea.

* * * * * *

Lightly tread o'er the grave where we've buried the brave;
Scatter roses and garlands o'er all.

Were they right, were they wrong, 'tis to God they belong;
'Tis His to reject or receive.
Ours to honor the clay of the blue and the gray;
Doubly ours to forget and forgive.

If it be true, Mr. Speaker, that we should appropriate money for the maintenance of national cemeteries where Union soldiers are buried, where Confederate soldiers are buried, does not the same reason apply to the maintenance and continuation of the cemetery at Fort Brown, where 3,000 graves attest the fact that their inmates died in the service of their country? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas has two minutes of his time remaining, which, as the Chair understands, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] proposes to occupy.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, it would be impossible in the time allotted to me, two minutes, to even briefly discuss the resolution before the House, or to make any statement in connection with the same going into the merits of the case. The whole discussion appears to have turned on the question whether we shall maintain a military post at Fort Brown regardless of the equities involved in the bill, which passed this House in the Forty-ninth Congress, in connection with the military reservation at Fort Brown, or whether the parties from whom the land was taken are entitled to a just compensation for the same or not.

Briefly, the facts are substantially as follows: General Taylor, under the direct orders of the Secretary of War, about the year 1845, took possession of 360 acres of land, upon which the present Fort Brown is erected. Under the direction of the Secretary of War condemnation proceedings were begun on the part of the Government in the courts of Texas, and an award was made in favor of the owners of the land for about the sum of $40,000.

After this award had been made the legal authorities of the Government endeavored to have the award set aside as being excessive; and this application was refused by the court before whom the appeal was made.

Over forty years have now passed and the Government has remained in possession of the land taken under these condemnation proceedings, and not one cent has ever been paid by the Government under the award. During this long period the original owners of the land have been paying the taxes upon it, as I am informed, and have been subject to other expenses. It was not till the Forty-ninth Congress, after a careful hearing before the committees of the two Houses and a full discussion of the merits of the case in the Senate and in the House, that a bill to compensate the original owners for the land so taken was passed. It was not till after the passage of this bill, appropriating the sum of $160,000 to pay the original owners, that any adverse claimants appeared as owners of this property.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] be allowed five minutes additional, not to be taken out of the hour.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I stated at the opening of the debate that I would like to have action on this resolution to-day. If the hour can be extended, I have no objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]. If there is to be an extension, let it be understood that the hour be extended ten minutes—five minutes for the opposition and five minutes for the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the hour will be extended ten minutes. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. And it was only after the bill to compensate these owners had passed the Forty-ninth Congress that adverse claims as to the title were raised. The proper law officers of the Government admitted that these adverse claimants had only a shadow of title to the land in dispute, but declined certifying to the Secretary of War that the title of the parties from whom this land was taken was absolutely perfect, and required the original owners of the land to remove these shadows of claims upon it. By legal proceedings taken in the courts of Texas during the year 1887 the title of the original owners was declared absolutely perfect, thereby removing the only objection that the Attorney-General had to certifying the title of the land in the parties from whom it was taken; and on the day just prior to the meeting of the present Congress the Attorney-General certified to the Secretary of War that the title proposed to be conveyed by the original owners or the heirs or assigns of Cavazos was a perfect title.

The resolution introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and which has now been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, and which is now under consideration, looked merely to the question of whether the amount appropriated by the last Congress was an equitable and just sum for the land so taken. I do not understand that the gentleman from Indiana raised the question of whether the present occupation of Fort Brown was a military necessity to-day or not. The Government has been in undisputed possession of this tract of land for over forty years. It has expended large sums of money in the erection of forts and Government buildings. They have never paid one cent compensation to the owners of the land taken for this purpose; and as I have said, during this long period the original owners or their heirs or assigns have been subject to a large expenditure of money in their efforts to procure a just compensation for the lands so taken and in other incidental expenses in connection therewith.

But after the lapse of thirty or forty years, when military emergencies had ceased to exist that required this land to be taken for military purposes, after an award had been made by what we can not but infer an impartial jury, where not only the Government but the owners of the land were heard, certain Government officials have directed ex parte examinations and reports to be made as to the value of this property, and it is upon these ex parte examinations and reports, very largely, that the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana has been introduced, claiming that the amount authorized to be paid under the bill which passed the Forty-ninth Congress is in excess of the value of the land taken.

Now, Mr. Speaker, taking the amount of the original award in favor of the owners of this property, allowing 5 per cent. interest on the amount so awarded, and adding thereto the taxes and other expenses that these claimants could justly ask the Government to pay, the amount of money that they would be entitled to to-day would be fully three times the amount provided to be paid them under the bill which passed the last Congress; and at this late day is the action of the last Congress to be reconsidered by this Congress, and are these claimants to be kept out of their just dues?

What can any investigation possibly show or prove that is not now known? The low valuation put upon this land by the Government experts, or a fair rental for same during the time the Government has occupied it, including a reasonable rate of interest and other expenses to which the original owners have been subjected, and which should be paid by the Government, would exceed the sum appropriated at the last Congress of $160,000. In my judgment, the sum of $160,000, covered by the bill passed in the last Congress, is not in excess of the amount to which these claimants are justly entitled.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I merely want to say that these arguments upon the part of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] seem to be based upon a wrong impression of the facts as they exist. They seem to be laboring under an apprehension that the committee has already made an investigation under the orders of the House. That is not the true condition of affairs at all. The only question before the House is this: Is there a sufficient statement of facts presented to us to warrant the House to order the investigation? After that investigation is made the remarks of the gentlemen may be appropriate; but it is certainly premature now to discuss the merits of the question.

The only question presented is as to the probability of the truth of the information, which would warrant the House in making the investigation so as to prevent a fraud from being practiced on the Government, and also in order to ascertain whether it is proper to abandon or keep up what might be demonstrated to be an entirely useless post.

I yield now five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know that I shall want that much time.

Allusion has been made to the action of the Committee on Appropriations in connection with the subject of the pending resolution. I was a member of the Appropriations Committee which first considered this matter. It came to the attention of the committee by a bill which Mr. Ochiltree, of Texas, introduced on the 17th day of April, 1884, and which proposed to appropriate $160,000 as payment for this property. The committee referred that bill to the War Department, and the War Department reported that $160,000 should be paid.

It will be remembered that this property was occupied as far back, I think, as 1846, and if I am wrong in that some one will, I hope, correct me.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Government took possession of the property in 1846, but no purchase was ever made.

Mr. RANDALL. There never was for many years any one to give a clear title to the property. However, in 1884, the question came up, and the Committee on Appropriations by a majority vote placed in the deficiency bill not $160,000, as recommended by the War Department, but about $121,000, and I think the reduction to that sum was based upon the ground that the United States was not bound to pay any interest or anything whatever in this connection during the four years of the civil war. The House approved, and the proposition went to the Senate.

Mr. CRAIN. How much did it appropriate?

Mr. RANDALL. I can give the gentleman the exact figures. I have them here.

Mr. CRAIN. The round numbers will answer.

Mr. RANDALL. The exact figures are $121,684.

Mr. CRAIN. So that the Committee on Appropriations admitted that the property was worth that much?

Mr. RANDALL. A part of the committee.

Mr. CRAIN. Well, the majority?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; it passed the committee.

Mr. CRAIN. And the House adopted the same view, did it not?

Mr. RANDALL. The House passed the item in that shape, but the Senate rejected it. It got into conference, and the committee of conference on the part of the House receded from the amendment, and from the payment of anything, if I am correct in my recollection.

It again appeared the second time in the Forty-eighth Congress, second session, and the committee again passed it, and so did the House.

I am able to say, by reference to the record of the Appropriations Committee, that my own vote was recorded against it.

Mr. CRAIN. But the committee was for it?

Mr. RANDALL. The committee was for it. I thought the price was excessive, and that was the ground of my opposition to it. It went to the Senate and the Senate amended it by reducing the sum to $75,000, which was the amount reported by the Senate committee to the Senate. And that reduction I remember very well was induced by the fact that the then Secretary of War, Mr. Lincoln, agreed to the view which I have suggested, that the amount was excessive and that he could buy the property for $75,000. That is my present recollection.

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly; for if I am wrong I should be glad to be corrected.

Mr. CRAIN. Of course I know the gentleman would not willfully mislead the House, but I will read a letter from the then Secretary of War, addressed to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, May 3, 1884.

SIR: Acknowledging the receipt of the telegram of yesterday's date requesting that the information called for by letter from the Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, of the 22d ultimo, in relation to H. R. 6625, "A bill to appropriate the sum of $136,000 to pay the owners of the Fort Brown reservation in Texas for rents due thereon by the Government from 1846 to 1884," be furnished to-day if possible, I have the honor to state that the Quartermaster-General of the Army, to whom the subject was referred, reports under date of the 30th ultimo, as follows:

"In the opinion of the Quartermaster-General the rental value of the site of Fort Brown from 1846 to 1866 was at least equal to $2,500 per annum, which for twenty years makes a sum of $50,000. There is no question in his mind that from 1866 to date the value of the rental, considered relatively to prices paid for similar property in the State of Texas, was and is at least $3,600 per annum, which for eighteen years gives a sum of $64,800, or a total sum of $114,800. The difference between this calculation and the sum named in the bill, namely, $21,200, is a fair, equitable amount to offset deferred payment and the natural differences of opinion that arise in determining values of this land. It was alleged in 1873 and 1874 that the property was taxed at or about $1,000 per annum. Estimates of the value of this site have varied from $25,000 to $75,000."

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

Hon. S. J. RANDALL,
Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think the Secretary in his letter, which the gentleman has just read, controverts the position that I think, as well as my memory will permit, he took before the committee of the Senate that $75,000 was an adequate sum.

There was added to the proposition the proviso of which I have a copy here:

That no part of this sum shall be paid until a good title is vested in the United States and the full amount of said sum shall be paid directly to the owners of the property.

There was a controversy as to the parties to whom the money should go, and therefore the Senate made the provision that it should go directly to the owners of the property; that is, those persons who would give title. When that proposition was amended by the Senate committee it was after a discussion, as the gentleman states, and the original sum, $160,000, was inserted by the Senate. That has never changed my mind on this subject, because I argued in the committee and everywhere else that this amount was excessive, and therefore I shall vote for any proposition which looks to the equitable fixing of a price for this property. I concede the owners ought to be paid rental.

As to the other question, whether the Government of the United States now needs this property or not, I am not so competent to give advice to the House as I am on the first branch of the subject. But I conceive the Military Committee of the House, in conjunction with the military officers of the Government, might have that discretion given them.

The gentleman from Nebraska has just handed me a letter signed by General Sherman, and asks me to read it.

Mr. CRAIN. That has been read already.

Mr. LAIRD. Oh, no; this is different.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the House will adopt the recommendation of the committee. It is the safe course to pursue. If there is any fraud in this matter let us develop it. I do not know that there is any fraud, but simply believe the price is excessive; and I hope the House will permit an investigation in that direction.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to yield three minutes of that time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. CRAIN. I should like to have two minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can only yield for a question.

Mr. CRAIN. Then I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will yield for a question, but not for a speech, as I have only eight minutes left. I am willing, however, that the time shall be extended.

Mr. CRAIN. Then I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRAIN. I wish to know how it is that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has so much time? He obtained unanimous consent to extend the time of the gentleman from Nebraska ten minutes, of which the gentleman from Nebraska occupied five minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] five minutes. Now, he claims eight minutes more.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let the Chair make a statement as to the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair undertook to divide the extension of the time equally, and has been doing so.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Of my eight minutes I yield three to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no embarrassment in this matter in consequence of any purchase made by the Government. The land was never bought by the United States. The military forces of the United States took possession of it in 1846, and have remained in possession ever since, except during the late war. An attempt was made years ago to condemn the land for Government use under the laws of Texas, but the proceeding from some cause was a failure.

In the closing hours of the Forty-eighth Congress this sum of $160,000 was appropriated by way of an offer for the land if a good title could be given. If a good title could be given at any time in the past to the land it was only within a very recent period.

In 1875 the sum of $25,000 was appropriated to purchase the land, which was then deemed the full value of it. The gentleman from Texas is mistaken in assuming that there have been any laches or negligence in this matter on my part or of any member of the Committee on Appropriations. The bill passed appropriating the $160,000 in the closing hours of the Forty-eighth Congress on very unsatisfactory statements.

Mr. CRAIN. As is usually the case with the deficiency appropriation bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is something very unusual, I think; but it occurred in this instance. A portion of the members of that committee resisted the measure, among them myself.

In the next Congress, the Forty-ninth, as soon as the facts could be ascertained, I introduced in the House a resolution, the same as the one pending, and reintroduced it this session, and it has been pending here substantially from the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress to the present.

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman permit me one moment?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRAIN. Did you not propose to me in the last Congress to accept the amendment which I have offered to-day?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not say that I did not. I would not like to put my memory against that of the gentleman from Texas; his memory might be more reliable than mine. I do not recall the fact, but I wish to have it stand as he puts it. I would not question his recollection of the fact.

But I think both questions should be considered. The first is as to what is a fair value of this land. The Government, if it retains the land, should pay a fair value, with interest on that value. I am confident from the information I have that the $160,000 is beyond all measure in excess of the value of the property, taking rents and all into account, and that matter should be investigated. But the other question, whether the property should be retained as a military post, is one which should be inquired into notwithstanding the opinions which have been expressed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask the House to allow me two minutes more.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am willing that the request of the gentleman from Texas shall be granted if the time be extended two minutes on the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked for an extension of the time for two minutes on each side. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CRAIN. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] fully understood the nature of my proposition. I agree with him that it is right that there should be an investigation of the question whether we are paying too much for this site or not; but my amendment simply proposes that the committee shall not undertake to investigate the question of the necessity for the continuance of the post, because the only evidence, or the best evidence, upon which they could determine that question is already before the House, in the nature of letters from the Lieutenant-General commanding the Army and from the major-general commanding the Department of Texas, and both those officers state it is absolutely necessary that the post should be continued.

Mr. RANDALL. We have nothing to fear there.

Mr. CRAIN. No, we have nothing to fear, but, as a retrencher and reformer, I am opposed to appropriating the people's money for the purpose of enabling a committee to investigate a question which is settled in advance.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has six minutes left.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON].

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, as has been already said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], the safe thing to do in this case is to investigate. There appears to have been a very excessive appropriation for the purchase and quieting of the title of the Fort Brown reservation. I heard the present Lieutenant-General of the Army say, in the room of the Committee on Military Affairs, that, from the best information he had, he supposed this property was not worth to exceed $25,000; and, in the light of the letters read by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD], and the statements made upon this floor, it seems to me that there is but one proper course for the Congress to take, and that is to investigate before they pay their money. It is not now a question whether we will abandon Fort Brown or not. The question is whether we will further inform ourselves before we pay over $160,000 of the people's money. I have been asked, "How in the world did this ever get into the sundry civil bill in 1885?" Well, I do not know how it got in, but I know one thing, the Military Committee is not responsible for it.

Mr. RANDALL. It got in by a vote of the House, against my opposition.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, it got in by a vote of the House. It went from the House to the Senate. The Senate Committee on Appropriations recommended an amendment which will be found in the RECORD of March 3, 1885, page 2350, reducing the amount from $160,000 to $75,000. The chairman of the Senate committee, Mr. ALLISON, urged the adoption of that amendment. It was opposed, as will be seen by reference to the RECORD, by Senator COKE, of Texas, and by Senator Maxey, of Texas:

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the committee will not be concurred in. I make no objection to the proviso. I simply object to striking out $160,000 and inserting in lieu thereof $75,000.

Again he said:

I submit that the amendment of the committee should not prevail, and that the sum of $160,000 should be paid for this land.

Mr. Maxey said:

I submit the question in the hope that the Senate will not concur with the action of the Committee on Appropriations. My point, as was made by my colleague, advises only non-concurrence in the striking out of $160,000 and the insertion of $75,000.

Mr. ALLISON said:

After what has been said by the two Senators from Texas, I shall occupy only a moment. As the Senators from Texas say, this is an old matter. In the first place, it has no business on this bill. It is purely a private claim, and it is a private claim that so far as I know has never been considered by any of the standing committees of this body. * * * What I object to is that this question comes in here from the House of Representatives this year on an appropriation bill for the purchase of the property at $160,000, when last year it came in the same appropriation bill for rent at $121,000. * * *

I submit to the Senate that the proposition to pay $160,000 for the property with no further information than we now have respecting it would be an unjust payment from the Government of the United States to the persons who have been claiming this property from 1853 to 1879.

* * * * * * *

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. I will modify the amendment of the committee. I do not want even by implication to say that we are obliged to pay $75,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, in line 2027, striking out "$160,000" and inserting "$75,000."

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—15.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Allison, | Chace, | Hoar, | Plumb, |
| Blair, | Dawes, | McMillan, | Sewell, |
| Cameron of Pa. | Edmunds, | Miller of N. Y. | Wilson. |
| Cameron of Wis. | Harrison, | Mitchell, | |

NAYS—20.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Brown, | Hampton, | Jones of Nevada, | Vance, |
| Call, | Harris, | McPherson, | Van Wyck, |
| Coke, | Jackson, | Mahone, | Voorhees, |
| Fair, | Jonas, | Manderson, | Walker, |
| Gibson, | Jones of Florida, | Sawyer, | Williams. |

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I wish again to impress upon the House that the only question now is as to whether an investigation shall be made or not. The investigation will not be an expensive one, because the officers of the War Department, who will be called upon to testify, are in the city, and they will doubtless be the main source of information on the subject. Besides that, there are other persons now in the city from Brownsville who are cognizant of all the facts, gentlemen who have been residents of the town for many years.

I will say further, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on Military Affairs have no great desire to investigate this matter.

All they wish is that the House may have an opportunity to protect the Treasury from what is regarded by many good men as a fraud about to be perpetrated upon it. This resolution did not originate with the Committee on Military Affairs; it was introduced in this House and referred to that committee, and we have simply responded to the resolution by saying that there does seem to be a state of facts sufficient to warrant an investigation. General Meigs, who investigated the value of this property in 1869, reported that a fair rental for the property would not exceed $500 a year. In addition to that, officers who have been quartered at Fort Brown have told me that, in their judgment, the property was not worth more than $25,000. Now, Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

Mr. CRAIN. I do not object to investigation. All I object to is an investigation as to the necessity for continuing the post.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then we are all agreed.

Mr. CRAIN. Yes; except as to my amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I ought to have stated that the majority of the committee have authorized me to say that they are in favor of permitting the gentleman from Te as to offer his amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the resolution by striking out the following words:

"Also to inquire into and report as to what necessity exists, if any, for a military post at said point, and the cost to the United States of said post since 1865."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] demands the previous question on the bill and the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent that the hour be extended until this resolution is disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that arrangement will be made. The Chair hears no objection. The first question is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN].

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CRAIN, there were—ayes 36, noes 129.

Mr. CRAIN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now ask for a vote on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was read as follows:

Strike out in the first line of the resolution the word "directed" and insert "requested."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI AT MEMPHIS.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 2927) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.

Mr. DUNN. Let the bill be read and a statement made, subject to objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] reserves the right to object.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Kansas City and Memphis Railway and Bridge Company, a corporation created and organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Arkansas, its successors and assigns, be, and the same are hereby, authorized and empowered to erect, construct, and maintain a bridge over the Mississippi River, from or near the town of Hopefield, in the State of Arkansas, to or near the taxing district of Shelby County, commonly known as the city of Memphis, in the State of Tennessee. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railway trains, and, at the option of the corporation by which it may be built, may be used for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and for foot-passengers, for such reasonable rates of toll as may be approved from time to time by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroad or public highways leading to the said bridge, and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States.

SEC. 3. That the said bridge shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans. The two middle or channel spans thereof shall not be less than 600 feet in length in the clear, and no span shall be less than 450 feet in length in the clear. The lowest part of the superstructure of said bridge shall be at least 65 feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, and the bridge shall be at right angles to and its piers parallel with the current of the river. No bridge shall be erected or maintained under the authority of this act which shall at any time substantially or materially obstruct the free navigation of said river; and if any bridge erected under such authority shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, obstruct such navigation, he is hereby authorized to cause such change or alteration of said bridge to be made as will effectually obviate such obstruction; and all such alterations shall be made and all such obstructions be removed at the expense of the owner or owners of said bridge; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river caused or alleged to be caused by said bridge, the case may be brought in the circuit court of the United States within whose jurisdiction any portion of said obstruction or bridge may be located: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers, or to exempt this bridge from the operation of the same.

SEC. 4. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any one of them, desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War, upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

SEC. 5. That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said companies or corporations shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawings of the bridge and a map of the location, giving, for the space of 2 miles above and 2 miles below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at extreme high and low water, the direction and strength of the currents at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built; and should any change be made in the plans of said bridge during the progress of construction, such change shall be subject to approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved, and the right to require any changes in said structure, or its entire removal, at the expense of the owners, whenever Congress shall decide that the public interests require it, is also expressly reserved.

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, on satisfactory proof that a necessity exists therefor, to require the company or persons owning said bridge to cause such aids to the passage of said bridge to be constructed, placed, and maintained at their own cost and expense, in the form of booms, dikes, piers, or other suitable and proper structures for the guiding of rafts, steam-boats, and other water-craft safely through the passage-way, as shall be specified in his order in that behalf; and on failure of the company or persons aforesaid to make and establish such additional structures within a reasonable time, the said Secretary shall proceed to cause the same to be built or made at the expense of the United States, and shall refer the matter without delay to the Attorney-General of the United States, whose duty it shall be to institute, in the name of the United States, proceedings in any circuit court of the United States within whose jurisdiction such bridge or any part thereof is located, for the recovery of the amount so expended by the Government and all costs of such proceedings; and all moneys accruing from such proceedings shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 8. That if the construction of the bridge hereby authorized shall not be commenced within one year from the time this act takes effect, and be completed within four years after the same date, then this act shall be void, and all rights hereby conferred shall cease and determine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DUNN. I desired to reserve objection until the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PHELAN] had made a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection will be reserved.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I can meet the objection of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] by reference to a letter which may either be read or, by unanimous consent, published in the RECORD—a letter addressed to me by General George H. Nettleton, president of the Kansas City, Springfield and Memphis Railroad Company, who will be one of the chief incorporators of this bridge. In this letter he incloses a circular letter addressed to all the roads centering at Memphis, offering each of them equal and fair participation in the construction and management of this bridge.

Mr. DUNN. In order to facilitate an understanding of this matter, I will state that I have always insisted that any new charter for a bridge at that point should contain a provision securing to all roads centering there the right to participate fully in the construction, ownership, and management of the bridge, so that no one railroad company should have a monopoly in this matter. As a provision of this kind does not appear in this bill, I have desired the gentlemen from Tennessee to place upon record a statement which shall satisfy the House that this right has been secured to the roads interested. In my judgment, the right ought to be secured by a provision in the bill; but the gentleman, as I understand, says an arrangement has been made which is satisfactory to all the roads interested. I make this statement that the House may judge for itself as to the sufficiency of this security.

Mr. PHELAN. I will state that the representatives of the various roads appeared before the Committee on Commerce and gave their full consent to the passage of this bill as in nowise affecting them injuriously.

Mr. WEAVER. All the roads?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes, sir. I will state further that the public at Memphis has had full information as to this bill, and it has been heartily indorsed by the Merchants' Exchange, the Cotton Exchange, by the business men of that city, and by the people on both sides of the river.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DUNN. Let the document to which the gentleman has referred be read.

Mr. RANDALL. It occurs to me that there should be in the bill some provision covering the point raised by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. PHELAN. I will state to the gentleman that this bill has already been passed once by the Senate, and has twice been approved by the Committee on Commerce of this House. In it all interests are protected, and the roads concerned are themselves satisfied.

Mr. RANDALL. I think parties who have heretofore objected held similar rights under an act of Congress.

Mr. PHELAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. The parties objecting heretofore were parties to whom, according to my recollection, a charter had been granted. I think the agreement which the gentleman from Tennessee has stated should be incorporated in this bill, so that no monopoly may be created.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DUNN. Let the letter to which the gentleman has referred be read, before objection is withdrawn, because it is the very essence of this matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

KANSAS CITY, MO., January 17, 1888.

DEAR SIR: In reply to the following question, asked in yours of the 8th instant, "Are you willing for the roads east of the river each to name an incorporator and to have the privilege of subscribing to what part of the capital stock of said company?" I send with this a copy of form of letter prepared by me to be sent by the treasurer of the Kansas City, Springfield and Memphis Railroad Company to each of the railroad companies terminating at Memphis, which I think will satisfactorily answer your question.

As soon as I learn that the letters have been sent out I will inform you.

I have received several letters from Mr. Van Benthuysen, copies of which I have sent to Colonel Learnard.

Very truly, yours,

GEO. H. NETTLETON,
President.

Hon. JAMES PHELAN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

---

OFFICE OF THE KANSAS CITY, SPRINGFIELD AND MEMPHIS RAILROAD COMPANY,
Boston, Mass., January —, 1888.

In 1883 this company completed its railroad to the city of Memphis, Tenn., and since that time all its passenger and freight cars to and from that point have been transferred across the Mississippi River by ferry. The management has for some time felt that the increased traffic on its road demanded better facilities for transfer than boats could furnish, and realizing that this need would constantly grow more urgent, and as this company is at present more largely interested in the matter than any other, it has during the past year obtained from the State of Arkansas a charter for a railway and bridge company, and has caused surveys, borings, soundings, and estimates of the probable cost of a bridge and approaches to be made, and has also taken steps to obtain the consent of Congress to the building of such bridge.

It having been suggested that it would be for the interest of all the railroad companies entering Memphis to participate in the ownership and operation of such a bridge, the management of this company hereby invites the co-operation of other railroad companies referred to in its construction and in obtaining the consent of Congress thereto. The following is, in brief, an outline of what has occurred to us as the proper basis of a scheme to carry out the purpose of the subscribers:

First. The necessary funds to be provided by issuing bonds and a small amount of stock. Each company interested in the enterprise to subscribe and pay for an equal amount thereof, the latter to be secured by mortgage on the property.

Second. Each associate company to be entitled to representation in the directorship of the bridge company.

Third. All companies using the bridge to pay tolls therefor, which shall be fixed by the directors of the bridge company so as to amount as near as may be to a sum sufficient to pay the interest on all the bonds outstanding and all the expense connected therewith, and for the maintenance and repairs of the bridge.

If at the end of any six months the amount of tolls falls short of the sum required for the purposes above specified, then the associate companies shall pay to the bridge company on demand the amount of such deficit, each company paying to the bridge company on demand the deficit in the same proportion as that in which they may have contributed to the earnings during said six months.

If the amount of such tolls exceeds the sum so required, the excess shall be repaid to the associate companies in the same proportion as above, it being the intention that the tolls shall amount to no more than is needed to pay the ordinary expenses of maintenance and interest on the cost of construction, and that any surplus interest shall be redistributed to the companies (members of the bridge company) furnishing the traffic which produced it.

It is proper to state that the surveys and estimates referred to were under Mr. George S. Morison, civil engineer, of New York City, who estimates the cost of the bridge and approaches at $2,000,000, which interest during construction and land at Memphis would probably swell to $2,500,000.

If your company desires to participate in the enterprise, I shall be glad to have you so state at an early day.

A copy of this invitation has been sent to each of the following companies:

Louisville and Nashville Railway Company, Louisville, New Orleans and Texas Railway Company, Mississippi and Tennessee Railroad Company, Little Rock and Memphis Railroad Company, Chesapeake, Ohio and Southwestern Railroad Company, Memphis and Charleston Railway Company, Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham Railroad Company, Missouri Pacific Railway Company.

Yours, very truly,

—— ——,
Treasurer.

To —— ——, ——.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DUNN. I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that he obtain unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill, and then prepare a short amendment providing that all the companies named shall participate in the construction and use of this bridge on the terms stated in the communication which has been read. If such a provision were incorporated, the bill could no doubt pass at once. I do not desire to obstruct the passage of a proper bill, but I do not want to consent to the passage of a measure which does not protect the public interests in the commerce which is to pass over that bridge. When those interests are saved I am content.

Mr. PHELAN. If the gentleman, having the power under the rules of the House, insists on that, I will yield.

Mr. DUNN. I hope the gentleman will not consider it in that light. I have simply made a suggestion to him, and if he understands the rules of the House he will know that, having unanimous consent to consider a bill, it must then be disposed of.

Mr. PHELAN. Will there be unanimous consent to consider it?

Mr. DUNN. That is what I suggest.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask, then, for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no objection, and the bill is before the House.

Mr. DUNN. If the gentleman will prepare the proviso himself——

Mr. PHELAN. No; I will let the gentleman from Arkansas prepare the proviso, and when he has submitted it I will ask a vote of the House on it.

Mr. DUNN. I call for the reading of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PHELAN, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 2927:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2927) to authorize the Kansas City and Memphis Railway Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., having had the same under consideration, respectfully report as follows:

This bill contains substantially the same provisions contained in the bill introduced in the House of Representatives on May 24, 1886, and reported with amendments on July 17, 1886. The amendments made by the Committee on Commerce to that bill have been incorporated into the body of this bill. The only points of difference between the amended and reported bill of July 17, 1886, and the present are as follows: "The Kansas City and Memphis Railroad and Bridge Company" has been changed to "The Kansas City and Memphis Railway and Bridge Company."

The second section of the bill of July 17, 1886, contains the following words, which follow the words "post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States," namely, "or for passengers or freight passing over said bridge."

In section 4 of the bill of July 17, 1886, which refers all matters at issue in regard to the use of the bridge to the Secretary of War, is the following proviso, namely:

"Provided, That the provisions of section 2 in regard to charges for passengers and freight across said bridge shall not govern the Secretary of War in determining any question arising as to the sum or sums to be paid to the owners of said bridge by said railroad companies for the use of said bridge."

These two clauses simply negative each other, and are stricken out. The words in section 2 are useless and would make it impossible to construct and operate the bridge, and the proviso in section 4 is merely added in order to destroy an impossible condition or limitation.

The report upon the bill as originally introduced in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, July 17, 1886, says:

"The bill, as introduced, contains provisions similar to an act of Congress approved February 25, 1885, authorizing the Tennessee and Arkansas Bridge Company and the Tennessee Construction and Contracting Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Memphis, in the State of Tennessee. By provisions of that act a bridge not less than 65 feet above extreme high-water mark, with continuous spans, two of which should not be less than 500 feet in length in the clear, and none less than 300 feet in the clear, was authorized.

"In the amendments presented by the committee to the present bill it is required that any bridge constructed under the provisions thereof shall be of continuous spans, the two middle or channel spans to be not less than 600 feet in length in the clear, and none to be less than 450 feet in length in the clear.

"The bill contains all the safeguards which it has been deemed prudent to incorporate in this class of legislation and such as were and are embraced in the act of February 26, 1885, authorizing the construction of a bridge at this point.

"The only objection urged to the passage of the bill is that two bridges should not be erected at this point, and there being already provision for one, no other should be authorized. As against this objection it is said that the parties holding the prior charter have no interest in the city of Memphis or any of the lines of railroad running to or from the same; that they have no approaches and no right of eminent domain by which to acquire same; that they have no money with which to construct and have taken no visible steps towards the construction of the same, though they have had eighteen months in which to begin. Your committee has not undertaken to settle these respective claims. There is and can be no doubt but that the interests of commerce demand the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi at this point, and that the same should be constructed at an early date.

"The question is, who can, will, and ought to construct the same. The parties seeking the present charter are the only ones interested directly in the construction of the bridge. The Kansas City and Memphis Railroad and Bridge Company asking the present right is practically identical with the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf, and the Kansas City, Springfield and Memphis Railroad Companies, which own and operate the line from Kansas City to Memphis, 487 miles in length, and tributary lines in Missouri and Kansas, a total of over 800 miles. They are also constructing on the east of the river a line from Memphis to Birmingham, Ala., a distance of about 250 miles.

"In view of these facts, your committee are of opinion that the present applicants should not be denied the right to construct a bridge simply because other parties had previously been granted a right. The policy of those who have no interest in the construction of a bridge, receiving and holding a charter, to the exclusion of those who need and desire it, is not a good one, and certainly such a charter should not be permitted to stand in the way of those who desire to construct the same in the interest of commerce."

Since this report was made the line from Memphis to Birmingham, Ala., has been practically completed. In addition to this, since the above report was made, a new line of railroad from Bald Knob, Ark., on the Iron Mountain Railroad, has been constructed to a point opposite Memphis. Other roads are under survey, their construction being in a large measure dependent upon the building of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis.

At the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress this committee made a unanimous report in favor of the amended bill of July 17, 1886. When the bill was under consideration during the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, representatives of the Tennessee and Alabama Bridge Company and the Tennessee Construction and Contracting Company appeared before the committee and gave positive assurance that they intended to build, that negotiations for the necessary funds had been entered into and would be successful, that traffic contracts had been made for the transportation of freight across the bridge, and that if the bridge were not in process of construction before the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress the said companies then holding the grant of charter would not further oppose the granting a charter to another company. On the strength of these representations several members of the committee signed a minority report, in which they say:

"Without passing any opinion on the statements made before the committee, we desired, instead of the bill reported by the majority of the committee, to have a bill which should allow the bridge company now having the authority of Congress to build a bridge a reasonable time in which to show their ability and determination to construct a bridge, with the provision that if it failed to do so, then the Kansas City and Memphis Railroad and Bridge Company should be authorized to build a bridge at that place.

"It seemed to us unjust not to allow a reasonable time to the present bridge company to construct a bridge. And it seemed to us, also, that it would be unjust to the Kansas City and Memphis Railroad and Bridge Company to subject that company to unreasonable delay in building a bridge."

At the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress the bill of the previous session was again reported to the House, but was obstinately opposed by the friends of the outstanding charter, and they were again successful in preventing its passage. Nearly a year has elapsed, and the holders of the outstanding charter have done nothing to redeem their pledges. The conclusion is natural and reasonable that those now holding it are unable to raise the money necessary to build a bridge, and that their intentions are more speculative than practical. Congress can not be justly asked to retard a great work of general necessity in aid of a speculative scheme.

The committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. DUNN. I now move the following amendment:

Provided, That the railroad companies whose roads now or may hereafter reach the taxing district of Memphis, Tenn., shall have the privilege of participating in the construction, ownership, and control of said bridge on the terms and in the manner set forth in a letter of invitation addressed by the Kansas City, Springfield and Memphis Railroad Company to the Louisville and Nashville Railway Company, the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas Railway Company, the Mississippi and Tennessee Railroad Company, the Little Rock and Memphis Railroad Company, the Chesapeake, Ohio and Southwestern Railroad Company, the Memphis and Charleston Railway Company, the Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham Railroad Company, and the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, dated January —, 18—.

Mr. PHELAN. I should like to say in opposition that the amendment is immaterial and may be harmful; that the construction the court would necessarily put on that language is that those roads not included would necessarily be excluded. As I have drawn the bill all the roads constructed or being constructed are permitted to come in under its provisions.

Mr. DUNN. I understood the letter of invitation to be addressed only to those which are constructed or being constructed.

Mr. PHELAN. Also to those yet to be constructed.

Mr. DUNN. I ask the amendment be changed in its phraseology to conform with the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman modifies his amendment as he has stated.

Mr. ENLOE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas how it is possible for a company in process of construction, or one not even yet organized, that may in the future come to Memphis, to be expected to participate under the terms of that letter?

Mr. PHELAN. That is just what I have asked.

Mr. DUNN. The simple way would be to allow the roads to ask for an assessment of what their share would have been had they existed at the time the bridge was built, pay it in to the other roads, and become thereby participants to that extent. Of course the amount could be easily ascertained.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, now so far as the amendment is concerned, it is rendered absolutely immaterial and useless by the language of the fourth section of the bill before the House; and with the permission of the House I will read that section:

SEC. 4. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any one of them desiring such use, shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War, upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

I defy human ingenuity to draw any amendment which will more thoroughly protect the rights of all participating roads, whether they are now established or may be established in the future, than is there presented in the use of that bridge. In other words, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas is immaterial and has no foundation even in a supposition of a possible evil yet to arise.

I hope the House will not adopt that amendment.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, one word in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee. The section he has read is one which has been incorporated in all railway-bridge bills passed by Congress. All railroads have a right to run over and across the tracks of other roads. That is a necessary part of the law of interstate commerce and its regulations. All bridges that are authorized by law to be built are open to all trains which may reach them on any roads, on the terms fixed by the company happening to own the bridge, and subject to the regulations fixed by the proprietary company.

The difference here is that all the roads being joint owners and joint participants in the regulation and control of the bridge can, as partners in that concern, secure their rights better than outside parties simply desiring a right of way and the privilege accorded to other companies to use the bridge. All will understand the difference in that important respect.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. DUNN. Certainly.

Mr. PHELAN. Do not the letters which have been read fully cover the point in so far as that right is concerned? And does the gentleman know the name of one single road, or the representative of a single road, in operation to-day with its terminus at Memphis, which has requested him or anybody else to object to the passage of such a bridge bill before this House?

Mr. DUNN. I do not know of any, and certainly no one has asked me to object. I am acting now, I will say to the gentleman, upon this question as I have ever acted, in what I conceive to be the public interests as affected by these bridge bills.

That bridge must be common to all the commerce of the Southwest. It ought not to be in the hands of any one railroad company which can so regulate the use of the structure as to place all rival and competing companies at some measure of disadvantage if it sees proper to do so. I want to go as far as possible to secure in this bill the public interests as involved in that matter. I understand and know that it is a very easy matter for the railroad companies to come to an agreement. That letter, with the obligation which it carries if carried into the bill, will secure all roads, and if they see proper to participate they can. If they do not, the other company can go on and build the bridge.

Mr. PHELAN. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM].

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I am not interested at all in the construction of this bridge, nor have I any constituents who have any interest in it. But last Congress I reported a similar bill, which was under my charge during the session, and I think the House should have a clear understanding of the trouble over the construction of this bridge at Memphis before action is taken here.

The authority was first granted to another corporation, the Tennessee and Arkansas Bridge Company, to build the bridge. That company was composed of individuals who had no special interest in the construction of the bridge, except in as far as they might be benefited by the tolls to be assessed upon those who used it. In other words, they were not a railroad company which would have had use for it for the passage of trains.

When this present bill came before the Committee on Commerce, the incorporators of the measure came forward and objected to the passage of the bill, saying that only one bridge was needed; and serious objections came from the company holding the old charter. The bill passed over the short vacation, the old company promising that if they did not do something towards the construction of the bridge before the next session of Congress no further objection would be made to its passage. Nothing was done during the vacation. It was claimed that nothing could be done except during low stages of water. Nothing was done, however; but the same objection was made during the short session as was made during the preceding session of Congress, the old company still interposing its opposition. Nothing has been done, I am informed, by that company since that time. The only company that is directly interested in the construction of this bridge is the company which owns the road from Kansas City to Memphis.

Mr. DUNN. The gentleman is incorrect. Will he allow me to correct him? There are a number of railroads interested.

Mr. BYNUM. There are a number of surveys, but the only line that crosses the Mississippi River at Memphis is the Kansas City, Springfield and Memphis, which is a line running down to Birmingham, Ala. There are a number of other lines which terminate at Memphis on this side of the river, and one which terminates on the other side, but none cross the river. None of these railroad companies have ever come forward and uttered a word of objection to the passage of this bill. They have never come forward and asked to be incorporated in this bill. They have never come forward and asked any measure of relief whatever. I think I am stating the question fairly, with due deference to all interests, when I say that the only objection comes from the company holding the old charter.

Mr. DUNN. Let me ask the gentleman from Indiana if the parties representing the Memphis and Charleston, and the Memphis, Arkansas and Kansas City Railroads had not a bill in the last Congress?

Mr. BYNUM. I do not know as to that, but when this bill was considered before the committee they never came forward to a single member of the committee to utter a word of objection. They never appeared to ask any amendment to be adopted to this bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PHELAN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER. The impression of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] that there has never been any objection to this bill is not altogether correct; and the error into which he has fallen calls for some explanation.

There are other railroads interested in the traffic which crosses the Mississippi River at Memphis, to an extent quite equal to that of the Kansas City and Memphis Railway Company.

The Memphis and Charleston Railroad Company, which runs for two hundred miles through my district, having its western terminus at Memphis, on the Mississippi River, is controlled by the same interests which are now constructing the Memphis, Arkansas and Kansas Railroad, the eastern terminus of which road will be at Memphis, thus forming a continuous line of railway communication (almost an air line) from the Southern Atlantic coast to the State of Kansas, and the connecting lines of railroad thence to the Pacific Ocean.

It is manifest that the people of my district would be placed at a great disadvantage if the railroad traffic and travel through their homes to the great West and Northwest were subjected to discriminations and exactions from which the traffic and travel from other localities were free. To prevent the possibility of such discrimination and exaction, on the first call of the States in Congress, I introduced bill H. R. 2014, which I hold in my hand, authorizing the Memphis, Arkansas and Kansas Railway Company and the Memphis and Charleston Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis. This would have made a continuous line of the two railroads whose interests are identical, and would have protected the interests of my constituents—the object I had in view in proposing the measure. Subsequently the bill now under consideration (H. R. 2927) was introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PHELAN].

Negotiations were entered into by parties controlling the various railroads centering in Memphis, resulting in an agreement that the railroads desiring to unite in the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi at Memphis should be privileged to do so upon absolutely equal terms with the parties interested in the bill now before the House.

I have two telegrams dated January 18, one stating that the understanding is that the Kansas City people promise that all companies shall be admitted to participate in the construction and management of the bridge if their bill is passed. This telegram also says:

In that event we would unite in support of their bill, but before doing so we desire confirmation of this agreement.

The other telegram, subsequently received, says:

The understanding is perfect, and will assist in passing the bill desired by Kansas City people.

The bill desired by the Kansas City people is the one we are now considering, and the gentlemen who send these telegrams control the Memphis and Charleston Railroad and the Memphis, Arkansas and Kansas Railway, and they have a deeper interest in traffic and travel over the Mississippi River at Memphis than those connected with any other company or corporation.

It being evident from the telegrams to which I have called attention that the railroads mentioned in the bill introduced by myself—and consequently the interests of my constituents—are fully protected, and deeming it of the utmost importance to the rapidly increasing commerce and manufacturing industries of the localities affected that the bridge at Memphis be speedily constructed, I withdraw all opposition to the bill and beg to urge its immediate passage.

Mr. PHELAN. I move the previous question on the amendment and the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. DUNN, it was not agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PHELAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES H. GILBERT.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2067) for the relief of James H. Gilbert, and that it be put upon its passage. The bill has a unanimous report of the Committee on Claims of this Congress and of the last Congress.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $408 to James H. Gilbert, of Chicago, Ill., the same being balance due him on salary as deputy collector and clerk in charge of inspectors at Chicago custom-house.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none; and the bill is before the House.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. LAWLER. I introduced a matter into the House before the committees were appointed relating to the tax on oleomargarine. I ask now that it be taken from the table. It was placed on the table merely because the committees had not been appointed. I desire to have it referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HATCH. I object, and demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri demands the regular order.

Mr. HATCH. I object to the request of the gentleman from Illinois, but withdraw the demand for the regular order.

CONSOLIDATION OF CUSTOMS DISTRICTS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 5875) to authorize the consolidation of customs collection districts in certain cases, and to provide for the compensation of certain collectors and surveyors of customs; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE AT LEXINGTON, MO.

Mr. WARNER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2578) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo.

Mr. RANDALL. I think there must be some mistake about this. The bill does not appear on the Calendar.

Mr. WARNER. It was reported on Monday, and possibly it may not have been put on the Calendar. It was ordered to be taken up with the other bill by the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not appear on the Calendar.

Mr. WEAVER. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] whether this is the usual form of bill, and whether it has received the approval of the Secretary of War?

Mr. WARNER. The bill contains all the usual provisions. It has been reported back by the Committee on Commerce with the statement that it meets all the necessary requirements, and a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Is the report unanimous?

Mr. WARNER. It is a unanimous report.

Mr. WEAVER. Let the report be considered as read, then.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] asks unanimous consent to take up this bill and consider it now. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT COB POINT BAR.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1523) for the establishment of a light-house at Cob Point Bar, at the mouth of the Wicomico River, and that the bill be now taken up and passed. This bill comes here with a unanimous report of the Committee on Commerce of this Congress; it was so reported to the last Congress, and it has been twice recommended by the Light-House Board.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have the bill read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the establishment of a light-house at or near Cob Point Bar, at the mouth of the Wicomico River, in the State of Maryland.

The committee recommended the following amendments:

Strike out the words, "there be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the establishment of," and insert the words "be established" in line 6, and, at the end of the bill, add "at a cost not to exceed $15,000."

As amended the bill will read:

Be it enacted, etc., That a light-house be established at or near Cob Point Bar, at the mouth of the Wicomico River, in the State of Maryland, at a cost not to exceed $15,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendments proposed by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COMPTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES H. YOUNG.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2467) to amend chapter 191 of the private acts of the Forty-ninth Congress, concerning James H. Young, and that it be now put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. RANDALL. Let us hear it read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 191 of the private acts of the Forty-ninth Congress of the United States is hereby amended so as to read as follows: "That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James H. Young, formerly captain of Company L, Fifth Regiment Kansas Cavalry Volunteers."

SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall take effect from the date of said amended act.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts what is the nature of this bill.

Mr. LONG. Its only object is to correct an error of designation in the bill of last year. In the bill of last year Mr. Young was described as of Company I, Sixth Kansas Volunteers. He did serve in that company and regiment, but his disabilities were incurred as captain of Company L, Fifth Kansas Cavalry Volunteers.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is that all the change?

Mr. LONG. That is all the change.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent that the title of the bill be changed by inserting after the words "Forty-ninth Congress" the words "passed in the second session thereof."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection the title will be so amended.

Mr. LONG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ZEB WARD.

Mr. LANHAM, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 68) for the relief of Zeb Ward; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JURISDICTION OF COURTS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the House Calendar and put on its passage the bill (H. R. 1204) conferring civil jurisdiction in certain cases arising in the Indian Territory on the United States courts which now or may hereafter exercise criminal jurisdiction over said Territory.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RYAN. I do not understand the character of the bill. Let it be read, the right of objection being reserved.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the courts of the United States which now or may hereafter exercise criminal jurisdiction over the Indian Territory, or any part thereof, or over any Indian reservation, under the provisions of any statute of the United States, shall have and exercise civil jurisdiction also within the limits of the judicial district in which said courts are held: Provided, That this act shall not be so construed as to vest said courts with jurisdiction over controversies between Indians.

SEC. 2. That all original mesne and final process issued by any United States court which now has or may hereafter have criminal jurisdiction in the Indian Territory shall extend to and be extended in said Territory in like manner as in the district from which the process issued.

Mr. ROGERS. The report of the committee on this bill is very short, and I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. The report will be read.

The report (by Mr. ROGERS) was read as follows:

This bill was reported favorably from the Committee on the Judiciary in the Forty-ninth Congress, and passed the House of Representatives. It in no way violates any treaty, and only goes to the extent of authorizing such civil jurisdiction in the Indian Territory as the courts may rightfully exercise under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

The committee recommend its passage.

Mr. ROGERS. As appears by this report, this bill has been twice considered and favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee of this House, and was passed by the House in the last Congress. Unless some further explanation be desired, I ask that the bill be at once put on its passage.

Mr. PETERS. I wish to ask the gentleman whether this bill simply extends to civil cases the jurisdiction of courts that now have jurisdiction of criminal matters in the Indian Territory.

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly; that is all.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DULUTH, RAINY LAKE RIVER AND SOUTHWESTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the House Calendar and put on its passage now the bill which I send to the desk; and, before the question is put upon consideration, I ask that the report, which is brief, may be read.

The bill, as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Indian Affairs, was read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1584) granting the right of way to the Duluth, Rainy Lake River and Southwestern Railway Company through certain Indian lands in the State of Minnesota.

Be it enacted, etc., That the right of way is hereby granted, as hereinafter set forth, to the Duluth, Rainy Lake River and Southwestern Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota, for railroad purposes, through the lands in Northern Minnesota set apart for the use of the Bois Forte band of Chippewas by treaty dated April 7, 1866, commonly known as the Bois Forte Indian reservation, and through the unsurveyed lands belonging to the United States adjoining the southern boundary thereof; also through the Red Lake unceded Indian lands in the State of Minnesota, and through the unsurveyed lands belonging to the United States adjoining the northwestern boundary thereof.

SEC. 2. That the line of said railroad shall extend from the city of Duluth, by the most convenient and practicable route, in a northwesterly direction, through the counties of St. Louis and Itasca, to the mouth of Rainy Lake River, south of the "Lake of the Woods," and at or near the boundary post on the highlands opposite to what is known as the Forte Louise reserve, on the Canadian side; thence northwesterly to or near the mouth of War Road River, thence southwesterly or westerly through the counties of Beltrami, Kittson, and Marshall, in the State of Minnesota, to the Red River of the North.

SEC. 3. That the right of way through the said Bois Forte Indian reservation and Red Lake unceded Indian lands, and the unsurveyed lands thereto adjoining, hereby granted to said company, shall be 75 feet in width on each side of the central line of said railroad as aforesaid; and said company shall also have the right to take from said lands adjacent to the lines of said road material, stone, earth, and timber necessary for the construction of said railroad, also ground adjacent to such right of way, for station buildings, depots, yards, machine-shops, side-tracks, turn-outs, and water-stations, not to exceed in quantity 300 feet in width and 3,000 feet in length for each station, to the extent of one station for each 10 miles of its road, except at its point at the mouth of Rainy Lake River aforesaid, in which case said company shall have the right to take 80 acres for station buildings, depots, yards, machine-shops, side-tracks, turn-outs, and water-stations, and other purposes.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the amount of compensation to be paid the Indians for such right of way and lands, and provide the time and manner for the payment thereof; but no right of any kind shall vest in said railway company in or to any part of the right of way herein provided for until plats thereof, made upon actual survey for the definite location of such railroads, and including the points for station buildings, depots, yards, machine-shops, side-tracks, turn-outs, and water-stations, shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and until the compensation aforesaid has been fixed and paid; and the surveys and construction and operation of such railroad shall be conducted with due regard for the Indians and in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may make to carry out this provision.

SEC. 5. That said company shall not assign or transfer or mortgage this right of way for any purpose whatever until said road shall be completed: Provided, That the company may mortgage said franchise, together with the rolling-stock, for money to construct and complete said road: And provided further, That the right granted herein shall be lost and forfeited by said company unless the road is constructed and in running order within two years from the passage of this act.

SEC. 6. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and publication.

The report of the Committee on Indian Affairs (by Mr. NELSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1584) granting the right of way to the Duluth, Rainy Lake River and Southwestern Railway Company through certain Indian lands in the State of Minnesota, beg leave to report as follows:

This railway company proposes to build a railroad extending from the city of Duluth, Minn., to a point on the international boundary where the Rainy Lake River empties into the Lake of the Woods, and thence in a southerly direction to the Red River of the North, on the boundary line between Minnesota and Dakota.

The course of the road is mainly through a vast and unsettled wilderness, valuable chiefly for its timber and minerals, both of which, for want of such a road, are now wholly inaccessible, especially from the American side of the boundary line. The most valuable part of the timber is on the southern slopes of the Rainy Lake River and its tributaries rising in Minnesota. This timber can now be floated by water down the Rainy Lake River into and through the Lake of the Woods, and thence down the Winnipeg River to Rat Portage, on the Canada Pacific Railroad, in the province of Manitoba, and this is undoubtedly the course this timber will take unless proper railroad facilities are soon furnished.

The western terminus of the proposed road is in the center of the upper part of the fertile Red River valley, an almost boundless prairie, thickly settled and rich in agricultural resources, but practically void of timber.

The chief minerals along the proposed line of road are rich and highly productive iron ores, which are not available for industrial purposes till brought to the lake shore at Duluth.

The main purpose and occasion for the proposed road is to carry easterly to the lake shore at Duluth the great wheat crop of the upper Red River valley and the valuable iron ores referred to above, and to carry the wood, lumber, and fuel, so abundant along the line of the road, to the people of the Red River valley, who are greatly in need of the same, thereby supplying their wants, and preventing the timber from being diverted to Canada.

The proposed road will run through the "Bois Forte" Indian reservation, in the northeastern part of Minnesota. This is a small reservation of 107,509 acres in area, and supposed to be occupied by some seven hundred Indians, who have but fourteen dwelling-houses, and 25 acres under cultivation on the reservation. In fact, the reservation is of little or no value for agricultural purposes, and the Indians live chiefly by hunting, fishing, and the gathering of berries, and roam all over the vast uninhabited expanse in Northeastern Minnesota.

The course of the road will also run through the northern half of the Red Lake reservation in Northwestern Minnesota. This "reservation" is unceded Indian territory, covers an area of 3,200,000 acres, and is occupied by about eleven hundred semi-civilized Indians, who live around the shores of Red Lake in the southern half of the reservation, and who do a little farming, but live mainly by hunting, fishing, logging, and the gathering of berries.

The object of this bill is to give the right of way through said reservations and through adjacent unsurveyed public lands to said railway companies.

So far as granting of right of way through the public lands is concerned, the provisions of the bill may be considered as surplusage, as this right exists and is conferred by chapter 152, volume 18, Statutes at Large, page 482, to as full an extent as in the bill.

In respect to the right of way through the Indian reservations the bill, when amended as hereinafter stated, is in all its details substantially like chapter 130, page 402, and chapter 336, page 545, volume 24, Statutes at Large—acts passed by the Forty-ninth Congress giving rights of way to certain railway companies through certain Indian reservations in the Territory of Montana.

These acts met the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and were carefully and deliberately considered by Congress. There is nothing in the condition of these Indians and the country affected by this bill that could require or would suggest a fairer or juster mode of procedure. Those acts of the Forty-ninth Congress to which reference has been made have in practice been found to work well and satisfactorily to the Indians, as in both instances the rights of way have been long since secured and the roads are already built.

In order that the company may not speculate in this right of way, and may be required to speedily construct the proposed road, and in order that this bill may conform to the two acts cited above, your committee recommend that section 5 be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That said company shall not assign or transfer or mortgage this right of way for any purpose whatever until said road shall be completed: Provided, That the company may mortgage said franchise, together with the rolling-stock, for money to construct and complete said road: And provided further, That the right granted herein shall be lost and forfeited by said company unless the road is constructed and in running order within two years from the passage of this act."

And that the bill when so amended do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, unless some gentleman desires to ask a question, I think it is unnecessary for me, in view of the reading of the report, to enter into any explanation.

Mr. SPRINGER. Has this bill been reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir; unanimously.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is on the Calendar of the House.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NELSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN J. BROWN.

Mr. SHAW, by unanimous consent, reported back favorably from the Committee on Claims the bill (H. R. 21) for the relief of John J. Brown; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CAPT. JOHN BURKHART.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar for present consideration a bill which passed both Houses of Congress at the last session, but failed to reach the President in time for his approval, and which has been again reported favorably by the Committee on War Claims at the present session.

Mr. REED. Is this a private claim?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a bill proposing to pay a gallant officer two or three hundred dollars for service rendered by him for which he has never received pay. The bill, as I have stated, passed both Houses at the last session, but failed to reach the President.

Mr. REED. This is one of the claims which the United States Government owes?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; one which ought to have been paid long since.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2112) for the relief of Capt. John Burkhart.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John Burkhart, late captain of Company F, One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteers in the late war, out of any money appropriated for the pay of the Army, the pay and emoluments of second lieutenant of said company from the 25th day of January, 1865, to the 1st day of March, 1865, and also the pay and emoluments of captain of said company from March 1, 1865, to the 1st day of August, 1865, and also the sum of $64, being money expended by him in the transportation of 51 enlisted men of said company from Brookville, Ind., to Sunman, Ind., by stage; deducting from the sum found due him as the pay and emoluments of second lieutenant and captain of said company for the periods above specified the sums of money that have been paid to the said John Burkhart for military service, either as a private or otherwise, rendered by him during the periods above specified.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. STEELE. I shall have to object to the consideration of this bill unless we be allowed to offer an amendment providing similar relief in the cases of all other persons who performed services of the same character on commissions issued in violation of law. This officer, it appears, was commissioned in violation of the statute of March 7, 1863, and in violation of General Order 183, War Department, June 30, 1863. Now, if an amendment be allowed providing that all officers or acting officers who performed similar services under similar conditions shall be paid, then I shall not object to the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. My colleague [Mr. STEELE] is the last gentleman I should expect to raise objection to the passage of a bill of this kind. This bill passed the House last session by unanimous consent, and was also passed by the Senate, but failed to reach the President in time for his approval. The amount involved is only three or four hundred dollars, I think. This gallant soldier was not paid for services which he actually rendered. I hope my colleague will not throw any obstacle in the way of so meritorious a measure.

Mr. STEELE. In order that I may secure the co-operation of my eminent colleague in favor of a general law covering cases of this kind, I shall have to object to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] objects to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think my colleague really intends to object to a bill of this kind, involving the just demands of a soldier.

Mr. STEELE. The necessity for this bill can only arise from the want of a general law on the subject, the passage of which I desire to secure.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will co-operate with my colleague in favor of such a general law if one can be made applicable, or any other just measure in the interest of the Union soldiers. I have uniformly supported all such measures. But I do not think he can afford to object to this bill.

Mr. STEELE. Well, I will try it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

SALE OF NEW YORK INDIAN LANDS, KANSAS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask, by unanimous consent, to discharge the House Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1406) to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That those persons, being heads of families or single persons over twenty-one years of age, who have made settlement and improvement upon, and are bona fide claimants and occupants of, either in person or by tenant, the lands in Kansas which were allotted to certain New York Indians, and for which certificates of allotment, dated the 14th day of September, 1860, for 320 acres of land each, were issued to thirty-two of said Indians, shall be, and hereby are, authorized and permitted to enter and purchase at the proper land office, at any time within one year from the passage of this act, said lands so occupied by them, in tracts not exceeding 160 acres, according to the Government surveys, at $1.25 per acre, payment to be made in cash at time of purchase; and the moneys arising from such sales shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, in trust for and to be paid to said Indians, respectively, to whom said certificates were issued, or to their heirs, upon satisfactory proof of their identity to the Secretary of the Interior, at any time within five years from the passage of this act; and in case such proof is not made within the time specified, then the proceeds of such sale, or so much thereof as shall not have been paid under the provisions of this act, shall become a part of the public moneys of the United States.

SEC. 2. That any lands not entered by such settlers at the expiration of twelve months from the passage of this act shall be offered at public sale, in the usual manner, at not less than $3 per acre, notice of said sale to be given by public advertisement of not less than thirty days; and any tract or tracts not then sold shall be thereafter subject to private entry at $3 per acre.

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendments of the committee were read, as follows:

Lines 15 and 16, first section, strike out "one" and insert "two," and strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifty."

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the report of the committee be read.

Mr. PERKINS. I think all that is necessary will be to allow me to make a brief statement. The report of the committee is very long.

Mr. RANDALL. All objections are reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That fact will be noted.

Mr. PERKINS. The report in this case is long, and, Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House I will make a brief statement, and if then it is desired to have the report read it may be done.

In 1838 negotiations were had with New York Indians, in the States of New York and Wisconsin, looking to their removal west of the Mississippi River. A reservation containing 1,824,000 acres of land was reserved for them in what became the Territory of Kansas and what is now the State of Kansas. The treaty which was entered into with these Indians gave them five years to go there. But few availed themselves of that right; in fact it is claimed, with consistency, that none of these Indians availed themselves of that right. On the other hand, it is claimed that a few Indians did avail themselves of their right.

In 1858 the then Secretary of the Interior decided these were public lands; that the Indians had not gone there to avail themselves of the benefits accruing to them under the treaty, and hence they were public lands. That was in 1858, and settlers were then going into Kansas from Missouri and other States adjacent to it, and from the North and East, and settling on this and other lands. The condition of these lands was brought to the attention of the Secretary of the Interior, and he held, as I have already said, that these were public lands, as the Indians had not applied for them under the treaty.

Then in September, 1860, he issued his proclamation opening these lands to settlement. At last, a few Indians, some thirty in number, suggested to the Secretary of the Interior that they had applied under the treaty, and were entitled to protection. The Secretary of the Interior ordered two commissioners to go to Kansas and investigate the facts. They found upon investigation thirty-two Indians had gone there in time to entitle them to the provisions and benefits of the treaty.

Here, Mr. Speaker, as you will remember, is a tract of 1,824,000 acres of land. These commissioners found that only thirty-two Indians had gone in time to avail themselves of the treaty. Under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs allotments were made to these Indians. They were permitted to make their selection within the boundaries of that reservation, and in almost every instance they selected land already occupied by settlers. Yet these commissioners, under the order of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, allowing allotments to be made to these thirty-two Indians, recognized their right to make their selection anywhere they pleased within the boundaries of the reservation. They were given allotment certificates for the lands which they had selected, but these Indians from that time to this have not been in possession of those lands, but they have been occupied by white settlers.

None of these Indians have ever been able to get control or possession of them, the settlers claiming the Indians did not go there in time to entitle them to the benefit of this treaty. But the Department found these thirty-two Indians had gone there in time, and hence the allotment certificates were issued to them. These lands have never been in their control or in their possession. The white settlers have occupied them all the time, cultivating them, making their homes there, doing what they could to improve these lands to make support and subsistence for themselves and families.

Now, this bill is introduced for the purpose of giving to the settlers an opportunity of getting title to the land, and also giving to the thirty-two Indians something for their claim. Thus far they have never been able to get anything, and neither have they gotten the lands. As an amicable adjustment, therefore, of the controversy between the settlers and the Indians, this bill is proposed.

The same bill was reported in the Forty-seventh Congress by the Committee on Indian Affairs. In the Forty-eighth Congress it was also reported by the same committee, and again by the Indian Affairs Committee of the present Congress, and there never has been a controversy between these parties on any feature of the bill except as to how much these settlers should pay. That has been the only question that has ever caused any confusion.

Mr. WEAVER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PERKINS. With pleasure.

Mr. WEAVER. To whom do the proceeds of this sale inure?

Mr. PERKINS. The proceeds are to be paid into the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of these allottees, or their heirs, upon their identification to the Secretary of the Interior, and they are given five years in which to do this.

Mr. WEAVER. You mean the thirty-two Indians?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir; or to their heirs where the Indians themselves have died.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, it is unnecessary to continue this controversy, as I shall be obliged to object to the consideration of this bill to-day.

CAPTAIN JOHN BURKHART.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. STEELE] withdraws his objections to the bill which I asked consent a few moments ago to have considered in the House.

Mr. STEELE. I will withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill has been already read.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill as reported by the committee directs this money to be paid by the Secretary of War. I wish to amend by making it the Secretary of the Treasury. There is an additional amendment proposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk had better read the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the third line of the bill strike out the words "Secretary of War" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury." Also, in the same section, in the sixth line, after the word "money," strike out the words "appropriated for the pay of the Army" and insert "not otherwise appropriated."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RALPH T. MOSES.

Mr. SOWDEN. I rise to submit a report from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the following resolution—"Resolved, That the Doorkeeper be authorized to employ Ralph T. Moses as assistant folder in the seal-room of the House, at a compensation of $2.50 per diem for the present session, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House. Compensation to take effect from December 5, 1887"—having considered the same, respectfully report the following substitute, and recommend its adoption:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper be authorized to employ Ralph T. Moses as assistant folder in the seal-room of the House, at the rate of $2.50 per diem during this present session, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I shall not object to that, but would like to inquire when the committee is going to cease having the House force increased?

Mr. SOWDEN. In answer to my friend from Pennsylvania, I will say that under this resolution the force of the House will not be increased, because the same party was provided for by the resolution of January 20, 1886, first session of the Forty-ninth Congress (see RECORD, page 786); also in the second session of the same Congress by the resolution of January 31, 1887, which will be found on page 1204 of the RECORD.

The Doorkeeper says that it is absolutely necessary to an efficient discharge of this portion of the public service that this person shall be so employed; and therefore I demand the previous question upon the adoption of the substitute.

The previous question was ordered; under the operation of which the resolution as amended by the substitute was agreed to.

Mr. SOWDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN SNODDY.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. 2974) for the relief of John Snoddy, and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to adjust and settle the claim of John Snoddy, postmaster at Big Springs, Tex., for money-order funds, amounting to $220, remitted by him to the postmaster at Dallas, Tex., January 22, 1887, and which said funds were stolen in transit by train robbers.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LANHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN HUMES.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. 365) granting a pension to John Humes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the pension laws, the name of John Humes, father of George W. Humes, deceased, late a private in Company E, Second Maine Cavalry Volunteers, Eliza Humes, the mother of said soldier, who was pensioned by act of Congress May 8, 1886, having died August 11, 1887.

Mr. DINGLEY. The report is very brief and will explain the bill. I ask that it be read.

The report was read, as follows:

That Eliza Humes, mother of George W. Humes, late a private in Company E, Second Maine Cavalry Volunteers, was pensioned by special act, May 8, 1886, as the dependent mother of said soldier; that said Eliza Humes died August 11, 1887, and that the present applicant is the husband of said Eliza Humes, deceased, and the father of the soldier, George W. Humes. The same facts which led to the granting of a pension to the mother of the soldier, now that she is deceased, apply to the father, who is eighty-one years of age and in needy circumstances. The evidence of dependence was fully set forth in the report of the committee of the Forty-ninth Congress, and it seems unnecessary to reprint it.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out all after the word "volunteers," and with this amendment recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DINGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BOSTON NAVY-YARD.

Mr. MORSE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby requested to appoint a board of naval officers to consider the practicability of selling a tract of land adjoining the navy-yard at Boston, Mass., known as the navy-yard coal wharf, consisting of about 131,712 square feet, and to estimate the value thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HERBERT. What is this about?

Mr. MORSE. It is a mere inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. McADOO. I desire to have the resolution again read.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. HERBERT. Has that been referred to the committee?

Mr. MORSE. As I have said, it is a mere resolution of inquiry.

Mr. HERBERT. I think it ought to be referred to the committee.

Mr. MORSE. I will amend it so that the answer shall be sent to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Alabama object?

Mr. HERBERT. I do; but I have no objection to the resolution being referred.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. STEELE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 72) relating to the invitation of the British Government to the United States to participate in the international exhibition at Melbourne, to celebrate the founding of New South Wales.

REPORT OF MILITARY ACADEMY VISITORS.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to present the report of the Board of Visitors of the Military Academy at West Point for the past year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] withhold his motion for that purpose?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, in presenting the report of the president of the Board of Visitors to the Military Academy, I desire to ask present action on the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The high character of the distinguished president of the board must add much weight to the suggestions contained in the report.

They are made by a man whose philanthropic generosity is not limited by the boundaries of municipalities, States, sections, or peoples, but extends beyond oceans, to races foreign to us in language, customs, and ideas; a man whose purpose in life is to do good to mankind, and to help the weak and the lowly.

The recommendations of such a man upon the subject treated of in the report can not be too widely disseminated.

The report was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The resolution submitted by Mr. WHEELER was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be directed to print for the use of the House of Representatives 5,000 extra copies of the Report of the Board of Visitors to the Military Academy for the year 1887.

Mr. WHEELER. That is the same number that was printed last year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask the present consideration of this resolution. It is the usual number printed for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which has been read.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think it should go to the Committee on Printing. That is the usual course. We can not have control over the printing unless through our committee. There have already been complaints by the Public Printer that the House has been imposing too much on him.

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] will observe I have submitted the proposition in the form of a resolution, limiting the expenditure proposed to $500.

If the expense to be incurred exceeded that sum, I should have submitted a joint resolution. It is not often that we have reports from a gentleman like Mr. George W. Childs, whose grand sympathetic heart and bank account are always tuned to the same music, but as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] insists that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Printing, and as the chairman of that committee assures me it shall be reported back very promptly, I will interpose no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made to the present consideration of the resolution. In the absence of objection, it will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion of Mr. STEELE was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. MANDERSON. The bill reported favorably with certain amendments by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] is what is kown as the Grand Army pension bill. There will be, I know, a very large call upon members of the Senate for copies of the bill as amended by the committee, and as the expense will be very trifling, I move that 1,000 copies of the bill as proposed to be amended be printed in document form for the use of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Additional copies?

DANIEL B. LUCAS.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution to pay Daniel B. Lucas, of West Virginia, compensation for expenses incurred in contesting the seat of Hon. CHARLES J. FAULKNER in the Senate, to report it favorably without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid to Daniel B. Lucas, of West Virginia, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, as compensation for expenses incurred in contesting the seat of Hon. CHARLES J. FAULKNER in the United States Senate, $1,000, the same to be in full for all claim for such expenses, and also for any claim to salary as Senator.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the resolution at the present time.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

DISTRICT STREET-RAILWAY TAXES.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] on the 11th instant, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution and the adoption of the substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The original resolution will first be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, directed to inquire whether the street-railway corporations of the District are paying a fair proportion of taxes, regard being had to the value of their franchise and property and the amount of their earnings; and also whether a just tax upon the gross earnings of said companies is not, in the public interest, preferable to the present system of valuing and taxing such property.

And the said committee may, in prosecuting such inquiry, send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and employ a stenographer; said committee to report by bill or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the committee as a substitute will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, directed to inquire whether the street-railway corporations of the District are paying a fair proportion of taxes, regard being had to the value of their franchise and property and the amount of their earnings; and also whether a just tax upon the gross earnings of said companies is not, in the public interest, preferable to the present system of valuing and taxing such property. In the prosecution of such inquiry said committee may send for persons and papers, administer oaths, employ a stenographer, and may report by bill or otherwise. The necessary expenses of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection to the present consideration of the resolution, the question is on agreeing to the amendment reported as a substitute.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to call your attention, as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the attention of the Senate, to the fact that a very much more convenient form of resolution is to provide that the committee to whom any investigation of the kind is committed, or any subcommittee of their number, shall be a committee to inquire, etc. That makes the subcommittee itself a committee of the Senate for that particular purpose, and gives the subcommittee the power to administer oaths and to send for persons and papers without requiring always the presence of a quorum of the full committee.

I suggest that the resolution be modified in that way. Of course I have no special interest in this particular investigation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution was introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. SPOONER. I shall be glad to have the modification made as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed modification will be stated.

Mr. SPOONER. Add after the words "District of Columbia" the words "or any subcommittee thereof."

Mr. HOAR. If the Secretary will allow me to look at the resolution, and the Senate will pass over the matter for a moment, I will suggest the point where the words should be inserted.

Mr. MANDERSON. As to the resolution that is under consideration, I hope that the scope of the inquiry may be enlarged. I see the proposition is to ascertain whether these corporations are paying their proper proportion of taxes. I should like very much to see an inquiry whether it is possible that the street railways of Washington may not by some process be compelled to make a quicker transit, and in lieu of the present slow methods of locomotion adopt a more improved method leading to rapidity by the use of cable tramway, or by the use of the electric motor. Certainly it is a very great evil that so much time should be consumed in going from one part of this city to another. The fact is, these corporations are not keeping pace with the march of public improvement in that direction, and I for one would like very much while this inquiry is being made that that subject-matter should also be included by the committee.

I suggest also, as to the matter of taxing, that not only are the methods pointed out by the resolution usual in the taxing of street-railway companies, but it is not unusual that an income should be raised by a license tax upon each car, which seems to be a very proper method for them to pay their proportion of the public expense. I should like very much to see the resolution enlarged in that direction, if it meets with the approval of the mover of the resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. It will be a sufficient reply to the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska to bring to his attention the fact that at the last session of Congress the entire subject of steam and street railways in the District of Columbia and their operation was referred by the Senate to a select committee. That committee has made commendable progress, and will be ready in due time, I think, to report upon that subject.

Mr. MANDERSON. I was not aware of that fact.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the resolution be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution as proposed to be amended will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it is hereby, directed to inquire whether the street-railway corporations of the District are paying a fair proportion of taxes, regard being had to the value of their franchise and property, and the amount of their earnings; and also whether a just tax upon the gross earnings of said companies is not, in the public interest, preferable to the present system of valuing and taxing such property. In the prosecution of such inquiry said committee, or such subcommittee, may send for persons and papers, administer oaths, employ a stenographer, and may report by bill or otherwise. The necessary expenses of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest instead of the words "any subcommittee" to say "a subcommittee thereof."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that the resolution as read is an amendment reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and the amendments submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts, the Chair supposes, must be voted upon to incorporate the words he proposes in the report of the committee. The amendments proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "Columbia," in the second line of the resolution, it is proposed to insert the words "or a subcommittee thereof."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to this amendment?

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 18, after the word "committee," it is proposed to insert the words "or such subcommittee;" so as to read:

In the prosecution of such inquiry said committee, or such subcommittee, may send for persons and papers, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I should like to see the resolution enlarged so as to instruct the committee to inquire whether the street railways of the city of Washington should not be required to furnish cars to accommodate the public and allow every person who pays fare to have a seat, and not be crowded, as the passengers frequently are, like pigs in a pen. I should like to see some inquiry made in that regard.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Kentucky evidently was not in his seat a moment since, when the Senator from Wisconsin explained that a select committee was raised by resolution at the last session of Congress especially charged with the investigation of the whole subject, and that committee has it under investigation at the present time.

Mr. BECK. I was not in when the statement referred to by the Senator from Tennessee was made and did not hear it. For several years I have been endeavoring to see if we could not have some arrangement made whereby cars in the city of Washington could be provided so that passengers might be comfortably seated instead of being crowded as they have been, but as that matter is being investigated now, I have no suggestion to make in regard to the pending resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the amendment as amended?

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BECK (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1657) for the relief of William Bayard, a citizen of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1663) authorizing the Little Rock and Alexandria Railway Company to build certain bridges in the State of Arkansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 1664) for the erection of a public building for a post-office and United States land office at the city of The Dalles, Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 1665) granting a pension to Theresa B. Hoffman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 1666) to regulate the salary and provide for the payment of the expenses of the district judge of the United States for the district of Minnesota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA.

Mr. BUTLER. I present a substitute for Senate bill 185, to enable the people of Dakota to form a constitution and State government, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States. The bill was reported by the majority of the Committee on Territories on the 23d instant, and I offer this substitute on behalf of the minority of that committee. I ask that it be printed and placed upon the Calendar to accompany the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute will be printed and placed on the Calendar.

FOURTH INTERNATIONAL PRISON CONGRESS.

Mr. BROWN. The Fourth International Prison Congress is to meet in 1890 in St. Petersburg. The Russian Government brought the matter to the attention of our Government, and the President at the last session of Congress sent a special message to Congress recommending the appointment of a delegate to represent this Government in that congress. No final action was taken, however; no appropriation was made for it. The matter was again brought to the attention of the Secretary of State by the Russian minister during the present session, and a joint resolution was introduced authorizing the appointment of a delegate, and making an appropriation of $3,000 to bear his expenses. That resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and they authorized me to report it favorably, which I did a few days since. I now, at the suggestion of a member of the Committee on Appropriations, as the best way of securing action on the matter, submit the substance of the joint resolution, to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, so that they may consider it as an amendment to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill when it shall reach the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

VENEZUELAN CLAIMS CONVENTION.

Mr. QUAY submitted the following resolutions; which were considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate, if not in his judgment incompatible with the interests of the public service, any correspondence between the Government of the United States and the Government of Venezuela in regard to the exchange of ratifications of the claims convention of December 5, 1885, between the United States and Venezuela, and also any correspondence between the Secretary of State and owners of Venezuelan certificates of award, or their attorneys, since December 5, 1886.

And further resolved, That the President be requested to inform the Senate whether ratifications of the aforesaid claims convention have been exchanged with the Venezuelan Government, and if not, what has prevented such exchange; also whether the funds which have been received from the Venezuelan Government on account of the Caracas awards have been distributed, and if not, upon what ground such distribution has been withheld; also what amount is in hand applicable to the payment of the said awards, and how the same is invested.

WARM SPRINGS INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of the report made to him by Special Agents Gordon and Martin, of date December 29, 1887, under instructions from the Department of date October 7 and 8, 1887, directing them to investigate the north boundary line of the Warm Springs Indian reservation in the State of Oregon, and to report what line heretofore surveyed would nearest conform to the treaty; also that such copy of report be accompanied by a tracing showing the several lines of survey referred to in such report.

ACTION OF THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] upon a previous day.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. CHANDLER January 23, 1888:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to inform the Senate what plans, designs, drawings, or specifications of ships or marine engines have been purchased or procured in foreign countries by or on behalf of the Navy Department, and from whom they have been obtained, and to state what plans, designs, drawings, or specifications so purchased or procured have been adopted, in whole or in part, for vessels or engines now under contract or construction; and also to transmit to the Senate a statement of the cost to the Government of each of such plans, designs, drawings, and specifications, and also an account of all expenditures made by the Navy Department since March 20, 1885, under the appropriations for information from abroad, and for emergencies and extraordinary expenses arising abroad.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MORGAN. Was the resolution offered this morning?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was offered on a previous day, and laid over under the rules and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to it.

The resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution, submitted by Mr. CHANDLER January 23, 1888:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to transmit to the Senate a statement of the changes made from the original plans of the Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, and Dolphin in addition to those specified in a communication from the Navy Department to the House of Representatives of February 11, 1885 (constituting House Executive Document No. 220, Forty-eighth Congress, second session), and in a communication from said Department to the Senate of May 24, 1886 (constituting Senate Executive Document No. 153, Forty-ninth Congress, first session), together with the cost of such additional changes in each case; and that the Secretary be directed also to furnish the Senate with copies of all documents and correspondence on file in said Department written since March 5, 1886, in any way concerning the aforesaid vessels, which are not contained in the annual reports of said Department, including all reports of boards and of commanding officers and engineer officers, and all log-books kept while the vessels have been in motion since said date, and all the evidences of settlements and payments made since said date by the United States, and of any unsettled claims on account of said vessels; and that the Secretary be directed further to state the present condition of the Atlanta, Boston, and Chicago, and the reasons for the delay in their completion and reception into active service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know that I have any objection to the information asked for in the resolution, but it seems to me from the scope of the resolution that it ought to go to the Committee on Naval Affairs, to be examined by that committee. Unless there is some good reason to the contrary, I shall make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection, Mr. President.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution, submitted by Mr. CHANDLER January 23, 1888:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to transmit to the Senate information concerning all naval vessels, and machinery and armor for the same, and all naval ordnance and gun metal for constructing or furnishing which contracts have been made by the Navy Department since March 4, 1885, as follows:

1. Copies in the case of each contract of the advertisement and of the written or printed conditions and rules for tests and inspections upon which proposals were invited.
2. A schedule of the proposals received and awards made.
3. A copy of the contract made.
4. A statement showing the time within which the contract was to be performed, and the present condition of the work, and the payments made thereon, with copies of the reports and correspondence upon which each payment was made. And that the Secretary be directed also to inform the Senate whether or not, since said contracts have been made, any of the terms or conditions of any of them have been altered, or any agreements have been made for changes in the quality of material or work, or any of the stipulations or rules for tests and inspections have been relaxed or varied; and, if so, to state the circumstances and causes of any such alteration, change, or variation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BUTLER. I see that the resolution only goes back as far as 1885. I move to amend the resolution by striking out "1885" and inserting "1880."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I have not the slightest objection to having laid before the Senate the information which the honorable Senator seems to desire. As a matter of fact, the whole of it has already been laid before the Senate precisely as this resolution calls for information concerning ships and contracts since March 4, 1885. I do not suppose that the Senator really wishes to duplicate upon the records of the Senate any information; and therefore I think the amendment is objectionable, and objectionable only for that reason.

The resolution as it stands without the amendment, calls simply for full information as to the action of the Navy Department since March 4, 1885, in reference to naval vessels and new naval ordnance, and is designed to give to the Senate all the information on that subject properly available in addition to what is contained in the reports of the Secretary of the Navy.

If the Senator will introduce his amendment in a separate form and will state to the Senate that there is any information which he desires to obtain that has not already been forwarded to Congress and printed, it will give me pleasure to vote for the resolution which he offers.

I am also entirely willing that the resolution which I have offered, with the amendment proposed by the Senator, should be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and let the Committee on Naval Affairs consider how far this inquiry should be made; for I certainly am anxious for all the light that can be given by the present Secretary of the Navy, not only concerning the transactions of the Department since March 4, 1885, but also concerning all its transactions in previous years.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from South Carolina will not insist upon his amendment for this reason: Much of the information that is called for by the original resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire has already been laid in one form or another before the Senate; but it will be a very convenient thing for the committees having these subjects specially in charge and for Senators to have it all in one document together, in considering the subjects that we have to introduce; and the sooner we get that the better.

Therefore I would be glad to see this resolution go through without referring it to the Naval Committee, in order that the Secretary of the Navy may at once have all the subject-matter treated by it put into one document, which he will transmit to us, I have no doubt, very gladly.

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand the Senator from Maine to concur in the amendment I have offered?

Mr. HALE. I do not see the necessity of that information on the particular subject that we are considering. I would have that information, if necessary, as a separate thing. The Senator did not catch what I said, I think, on this particular part of the subject covered by the resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire. I said that it would be better to have that in one document by itself; that the Secretary would be glad to send it in; that it will cover many papers which he has already sent us, but we shall get it all together, treating upon this new construction since the dates which are given in the resolution.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not the slightest objection to the information being called for, and I have no doubt the Secretary of the Navy will be very glad to furnish it; but it seems to me that if we are going to get the information in regard to one set of contracts it would be very desirable to have the information relating to all of them. While it is true, perhaps, as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, that we have received the information as to the contracts made prior to 1885, yet, in order to pass intelligently upon them, it would seem to me that they ought all to be embraced in the same report. I shall therefore insist upon my amendment.

I desire not only the information which is called for in the form presented by the resolution, but also the information which would be embraced if my amendment were adopted. I can see no earthly objection to its coming in in that form.

I did not intend to ask that the pending resolution should go to the Committee on Naval Affairs, but to permit it, as far as my vote would do so, to be put upon its passage at once.

I trust the Senator from New Hampshire will recognize the propriety of embracing the additional information which my amendment will bring.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have said that I shall vote for the Senator's proposition covering the years between 1880 and 1885 if he will put it in a separate resolution and will state that the copies of contracts and copies from the records of the Department which he desires have not been previously transmitted to Congress and are not already in print and accessible to Congress. I undertake to say that four-fifths of all the documents which would be sent in in answer to the resolution as amended, concerning the period between 1880 and 1885, have already been transmitted to Congress and are now in print on the records of the Government and accessible to every one, while I also desire to say that the information called for by the resolution concerning the contracts since March 4, 1885, is not now in print and has not been transmitted to Congress, and probably nine-tenths of it is not at this moment accessible to any member of the Senate; and that is the distinction between the two propositions.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina will be adopted. Congress, I have no doubt, will be very well instructed if we can have before us in a connected statement, in one document, the whole history of the contracts which have been made since the Government has entered upon the construction of war vessels of iron and steel, showing the progress we have made from 1880 to the present time. I submit to the Senator from New Hampshire that if he desires Congress to have this full information it can only be had by having in one statement from the Secretary of the Navy the history of these transactions.

Mr. President, it is perfectly well known that since 1880 we have made very great progress, not only in the designs of these ships and in the material of which they are constructed, but in the construction of the vessels themselves; and while the greater portion of the information that is covered by the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina from 1880 to 1885 has been transmitted to Congress, it has been in such a fragmentary way that it is almost impossible to get an idea of the whole history of these transactions. I therefore trust the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BECK. The amendment covers contracts made prior to 1885.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes. Unquestionably the vessels contracted for between 1880 and 1884 are not yet completed. In point of fact they were taken out of the hands of the contractors and put in charge of the Government, and no intelligible and connected statement of the whole transaction can be made unless it covers the period between 1880 and 1885.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have already stated the only objection I have to extending the call as desired by the Senator from South Carolina. I have not the slightest objection to having printed in one book all the contracts that have been made for guns, ordnance, or naval material since 1880. The objection I see to having the resolution passed in the amended form is, first, what I have stated, that all the contracts between 1880 and 1885 have been once printed, and nearly all the other documents that would be called for during that period have been already printed, and it would be useless and a needless expense, as it seems to me, to print them again. But if the Senators think otherwise, and the Senate thinks otherwise, I have nothing to say.

The only other objection that I can think of would be that the amendment might serve to delay the answer to this resolution; but in order that Senators may be gratified and may see the exhibit from 1880 to 1888, and may have these documents all reprinted in connected form, if they desire it, I, so far as I am concerned, withdraw all opposition to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now ask unanimous consent of the Senate to have the resolution which has been referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs recalled from that committee and acted upon at the present time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the resolution to which he alludes was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs may be reconsidered. Is there objection?

Several SENATORS. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read for information.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to transmit to the Senate a statement of the changes made from the original plans of the Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, and Dolphin in addition to those specified in a communication from the Navy Department to the House of Representatives of February 11, 1885 (constituting House Executive Document No. 220, Forty-eighth Congress, second session), and in a communication from said Department to the Senate of May 24, 1886 (constituting Senate Executive Document No. 153, Forty-ninth Congress, first session), together with the cost of such additional changes in each case; and that the Secretary be directed also to furnish the Senate with copies of all documents and correspondence on file in said Department written since March 5, 1886, in any way concerning the aforesaid vessels, which are not contained in the annual reports of said Department, including all reports of boards and of commanding officers and engineer officers, and all log-books kept while the vessels have been in motion since said date, and all the evidences of settlements and payments made since said date by the United States, and of any unsettled claims on account of said vessels; and that the Secretary be directed further to state the present condition of the Atlanta, Boston, and Chicago, and the reasons for the delay in their completion and reception into active service.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not the slightest objection to that resolution passing at once provided the Senator from New Hampshire will consent to a similar amendment to it to that which I offered to the former resolution, so as to embrace the entire history of these vessels. I see that this resolution only calls for the correspondence since a certain period of 1886. I should like to have all the correspondence relating to the construction of these four vessels from the inception of their building to the present time.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator whether he has read this book which I hold in my hand, sent in a year ago in answer to a call on this subject?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, life is too short to read all the books that are sent in.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest this explanation for the Senator's benefit, that on the 5th of March, 1886, the Senator from Maine submitted a resolution, which was agreed to, calling for all information up to that date, which was sent to the Senate and is here printed.

The resolution which I now offer is a resolution that calls for similar information concerning these ships since that date, and the answer when printed as a supplement to this book will contain exactly what the Senator says he desires to read, but the first chapter of which I discover he has not yet had time to read.

Mr. BUTLER. Perhaps I have been very derelict in not reading the first chapter of that very interesting document, and I plead guilty; I have not read it. I should like very much, however, to have an opportunity of glancing over it before consenting to the passage of this resolution in its present form. I therefore suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that he allow the resolution to lie over until to-morrow, until I can have that opportunity.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not understand the Senator to want it to lie until he reads this book.

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution has been referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The pending question is on the reconsideration of the vote by which it was referred.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent. Does the Senator from South Carolina object to it, after having amended the other resolution?

Mr. BUTLER. I object. I think it had better go to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire insist on his motion to reconsider?

Mr. CHANDLER. No; I withdraw the motion.

ISAAC D. SMEAD & CO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] on a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. DAWES January 23, 1888, as follows:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with a detailed statement of the entire amount paid by the District government to Isaac D. Smead & Co. from the date they commenced work for the District to the present time, giving in connection with each payment its amount, date, kind of work done, and designation of the building in which it was done; also to report whether there was any competition or whether any proposals were invited for said work before contract was entered into therefor, and, if so, to furnish specific information in regard to the same.

The resolution was agreed to.

CŒUR D'ALENE RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] on a previous day.

The Secretary read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. MITCHELL January 23, 1888, as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that the present area of the Cœur d'Alene Indian reservation, in the Territory of Idaho, embraces 480,000 acres of land; that there are, according to the statistics in the Indian Bureau, only about 476 Indians in the tribe now occupying such reservation, or more than 1,000 acres to each man, woman, and child; that Lake Cœur d'Alene, all the navigable waters of Cœur d'Alene River, and about 20 miles of the navigable part of St. Joseph River, and part of St. Mary's, a navigable tributary of the St. Joseph, are embraced within this reservation, except a shore-line of about 3½ miles at the north end of the lake, it being alleged that this lake and its rivers tributary constitute the most important highways of commerce in the Territory of Idaho, and are in fact the only navigable waters, except Snake River, now used for steam-boat navigation in the Territory; that all boats now entering such waters are subject to the laws governing the Indian country and all persons going on such lake or waters within the reservation lines are trespassers; and

Whereas it is further alleged that the Indians now on such reservation are located in the extreme southwest corner of the same, around De Smet Mission, near the town of Farmington, in Washington Territory, where the land is good for agriculture; and it being further alleged that all that part of such reservation lying between Lake Cœur d'Alene and Cœur d'Alene River and that part between the Cœur d'Alene River and St. Joseph River is a territory rich in the precious metals and at the same time being of no real use or benefit to the Indians: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate as to the extent of the present area and boundaries of the Cœur d'Alene Indian reservation in the Territory of Idaho; whether such area includes any portion, and if so, about how much of the navigable waters of Lake Cœur d'Alene, and of Cœur d'Alene and St. Joseph Rivers; about what proportion of said reservation is agricultural, grazing, and mineral land, respectively; also the number of Indians occupying such reservation; also on what portion of such reservation the Indians now thereon are located; also whether, in the opinion of the Secretary, it is advisable to throw any portion of such reservation open to occupation and settlement under the mineral laws of the United States, and if so, precisely what portion; and also whether it is advisable to release any of the navigable waters aforesaid from the limit of such reservation.

The resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

INDIAN MARRIAGES.

Mr. DAWES. Yesterday a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 928) in relation to marriages between white men and Indian women was withdrawn, and the bill was laid on the table in order that the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] might look at it. He is now present, and I should like to have him state what action he desires.

Mr. COKE. I have examined the bill, and I see that it covers the point which I wished to provide for. I have no objection to it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill then stands passed by the Senate and will be returned to the House of Representatives.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. 365) granting a pension to John Humes—to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 1204) conferring civil jurisdiction in certain cases arising in the Indian Territory on the United States courts which now or may hereafter exercise criminal jurisdiction over said Territory—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (H. R. 2927) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.

LIGHT AND FOG-SIGNAL OFF CAPE HATTERAS.

Mr. FRYE. This morning there was laid before the Senate a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting one from the Light-House Board touching the establishment of a light and fog-signal at or near the outer shoal off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina, and the order made was that it be printed. It is necessary for the Committee on Commerce to have these papers to use to-morrow morning. Therefore I ask that that order may be reconsidered, and that the papers and chart be referred to the Committee on Commerce without printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The Senator from Maine asks the Senate to reconsider the vote whereby the papers which he has mentioned were ordered to be printed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FRYE. I now move a reference of the papers and chart to the Committee on Commerce without printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The papers will be so referred.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 290) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Burlington, Iowa.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 339) for the relief of J. E. Pilcher; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A concurrent resolution for the printing of 2,500 copies of the annual report of the health officer of the District of Columbia; and

A concurrent resolution for the printing of 43,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1886–'87.

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If there is none, the order of morning business is closed.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4271) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. HAWLEY, on page 26, after line 6, to insert the following:

For manufacture of adhesive postage and special-delivery stamps, $6,884.45.

For manufacture of stamped envelopes, newspaper-wrappers, and letter-sheets, $65,237.78.

For manufacture of registered-package, tag, official, and dead-letter envelopes, $17,813.49.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this amendment and the situation which brings it before the Senate were pretty thoroughly discussed yesterday, and I do not now desire to occupy any further the attention of the Senate. That discussion disclosed to Senators the attitude which has been taken by the Committee on Appropriations and the reasons therefor, and, as I said last night, the committee has discharged its duty and the matter is left with the Senate. It is for Senators to decide, under all the conditions and circumstances, whether this amendment, covering subject-matter that should be appropriated for and speedily, ought to go on this bill. I leave it to the vote of the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I am fully in sympathy with the Senators from Connecticut in the position they have taken in reference to this amendment. I, however, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, agreed to the policy which has been presented by the Senator from Maine, and shall therefore vote with the committee.

At the same time that the claim presented by the Senators from Connecticut is full of merit and ought to be paid, and it is a reflection upon the Congress of the United States that they should hesitate to pay it, I want to say to the Senate that there are other claims of like character, and situated, if not precisely like this claim in reference to this bill, in such a situation in my opinion that they are quite as much entitled to the consideration of the Senate.

One of my constituents has a claim; it is not $80,000, it is $50,000. It was put into this deficiency bill last year and into the deficiency bill of the year before, and I am not quite certain that it was not in a deficiency bill the year previous to that. It originated in 1884 upon a contract entered into by the United States with one of my constituents to manufacture heavy guns, cast-iron guns, his being the only establishment at that time in the United States which was capable of manufacturing those guns, and that has gone down under the policy which is oppressing the citizens of Connecticut in the manner represented by the Senators from Connecticut. He also appealed from year to year to Congress to pay what was his due upon that contract, and failing to get it he has been obliged to borrow money to pay the interest upon his expenditure under that contract, and in consequence of the failure of the Government to keep its part of the contract the contract itself has expired, and the unfinished work is on his hands. The result is that he has come to a position where he is unable to borrow money to pay the interest. He is in a worse condition than the constituent of the Senators from Connecticut.

The proper Department has appealed to Congress at both ends of this Capitol to pay that money. It is admitted that it is due him. It has been put into at least two or three deficiency bills, but the committee of conference on the part of the House, pursuing the policy which struck at the claim of the constituent of the Senators from Connecticut, succeeded in the conference against my constituent's claim as they did not succeed with the conference in the last Congress in reference to the claim of the constituent of the Senators from Connecticut. That is the only difference; this has had the misfortune to be stricken out in conference three times because the committee on the part of the Senate did not hold on to it quite as strongly as they did in the last Congress to this claim of the constituent of the Senators from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. This was never stricken out. Nobody ever asked to have it stricken out.

Mr. DAWES. I say mine has been stricken out three times, and that is the difference between mine and that of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire if ever on any occasion while the subject has been before the Committee on Appropriations, there has been any difficulty in obtaining a provision in an appropriation bill to pay members of Congress? Have they not paid themselves, whether they paid others or not?

Mr. DAWES. I am not discussing that question or anything having relation to it. I am stating a fact which I supposed would reinforce the Senators from Connecticut by stating the condition of other claims.

I know this was not stricken out the last time, but I do not see that that affects the merit of it so much as the persistency of our committee of conference. I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut, although I am bound to stand by the Committee on Appropriations myself, because I have concluded that in the long run it would be the best policy to adopt in reference to all these claims.

Mr. CULLOM. May I ask the Senator, as he states that he will vote with the committee, but hopes the amendment will be adopted, is it the hope of the Senator that all other amendments which will be presented by different Senators of like character should be adopted and added to this bill also?

Mr. DAWES. I shall be entirely frank before I sit down.

Mr. CULLOM. I want to know how broad the Senator is going to make his rule.

Mr. DAWES. I think that every honest claim against this Government, especially of the character of that represented by the Senators from Connecticut, for work and services done for this Government, ought to be paid, and ought to be paid promptly.

I was of opinion, and I am still of opinion, that if we could intimate to the other House, and adhere to it, that they are to consider these claims in the same light that we are bound to consider them, in the end it would be better.

My constituent came here as the constituent of the Senators from Connecticut did, and appealed to this committee to put his claim in again, while his furnaces are stopped and his workmen are scattered; but when he was informed by the committee that this bill was to be taken as it came from the House he went away, hoping that in the next deficiency bill he would be more fortunate.

Now, all I have to say is that there is not a word that can be said against the claim, or the justice of it, presented in this amendment. If it is adopted I shall feel as if I ought to offer the amendment that my constituent is interested in; although, listening to the policy as concluded upon by this committee, I have not put it in order by offering it in advance as an amendment, and so a single objection could throw it out. If that is done I shall say to my constituent when he comes here again that he would be more fortunate if he would put the advocacy of his claim in the hand of the Senators from Connecticut than he would if he intrusted it to any effort of mine to secure payment.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask my colleague before he sits down what there is in the attitude of the conferees on the part of the House which gives us any reason for supposing that this gentleman will be more fortunate than the others.

Mr. DAWES. I was not on the committee of conference, and therefore can not speak as to that point.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have that question answered by some one.

Mr. PLATT. I rose for the purpose of asking the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], who is on the Appropriations Committee, if it does not interrupt him too much, to tell us, judging from past experience, when we shall be likely to get to the consideration of another deficiency bill here in the Senate?

Mr. DAWES. I think we shall put these just claims into any deficiency bill when it comes up, and when the Senate puts them in, a conference committee will do the best they can in their struggle with the House, and two-thirds of them will go out, and there will be little opportunity to distinguish which third ought to remain and what two-thirds ought to go out. That is my experience, which has been somewhat extended.

Mr. PLATT. But we have been waiting now about ten months to get this deficiency bill passed; and when it will be passed does not depend so much on this body as it does on another body.

Mr. DAWES. I am aware of that.

Mr. PLATT. But the question I asked was, when we should be likely ever to get at another deficiency bill.

Mr. DAWES. And whether you will get the deficiency bill or the regular appropriation bills through in proper shape or not by following the policy adopted by the committee is for the Senate to consider. The Senators from Connecticut should understand that the position taken by the Committee on Appropriations does not reflect upon the justice of their claim, nor does it reflect upon the justice of the claim of which I have spoken; but it is a question whether the Senate shall surrender its judgment of what is due to the creditors of the Government to any policy outside, or whether it shall take a stand which in the end will bring co-operation rather than antagonism.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, it appears that this trouble grows out of the desire of somebody to make a very economical showing to the country. Nobody is questioning the honesty of this claim. It is a debt admitted to be due. It occurs to me that it would be a good idea for those who are so anxious to show economy to abstain themselves from presenting their claims against the Government for a while, and I would suggest as a remedy for this if the Democratic House or the other House or anybody wants to repudiate an honest debt because they want to make an economical showing, postpone the appropriations to pay the salaries of members of Congress. I do not see why they can not wait just as well as this constituent of the Senators from Connecticut or the constituent of the Senator from Massachusetts. They will not be any more likely to go into bankruptcy. Suppose we should fail to pay all the officers of the Government getting over $2,000 per annum. They can better afford to wait than many of the people who are being destroyed by the delay of Congress.

I would suggest that the Senate can make a pretty good showing by requiring some of the higher officers of the Government to wait. They can afford it better than the poor men who have been doing work for the Government. Then we shall get down to the discussion of the legitimate question whether the Government shall be honest or dishonest, whether it shall pay its debts or not. If anybody is to trust the Government, let those who have the power to wait, like members of Congress, wait awhile. I think there should be no appropriation to pay members of Congress who do not come here and act honestly.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine if the items contained in the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut have been examined by the committee and found to be just and due, but the payment withheld simply to await the necessary appropriation. Is that the state of the case or not?

Mr. HALE. Appropriations covering these items were estimated for last year. They were examined then. It was seen plainly that they covered the necessities of the Post-Office Department, that in essential particulars it could not do its business to the satisfaction of the public without these appropriations. In the Senate that proposition was maintained, and when we got into conference committee these items, which meet the assent of the Senator from Tennessee, were agreed to by both House and Senate conferees, and had the bill passed then these items would have gone in for the very reason suggested in the Senator's question, that they were needed. Now the Department comes in and shows that so great was the need that it went on and used the material, had the service performed, and yet against all that the other branch has left all these items off. The Committee on Appropriations, in leaving them off, attempt to raise no question about the items, about their necessity, about the importance of appropriations to cover them; no such question arises anywhere.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator's answer is perfectly satisfactory to me, and I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. I thought it very likely the vote would be taken immediately this morning, and I would not trespass on the Senate a moment longer but for the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], and I will make my statement now just as brief and clear as I possibly can.

Earlier than last February the Post-Office Department found that such was the extraordinary increase in the demand for adhesive stamps and envelopes that the appropriation for the previous year, which seemed to be very reasonable under the reduced price of these things, was going to run out and the Government would be without stamps and envelopes of some classes somewhere in May, absolutely without them, unable to answer the demand from a single post-office in the United States. Under the circumstances they said to my constituents, the manufacturers of these articles, "If you will go on and supply us as usual we will have you paid as soon as we can in December; but understand, we can not make any bargain; the law forbids it; you will have to do it on trust entirely."

My constituents made over $90,000 worth of articles, and for their goods, stock, and so on, borrowed the money at bank. The Government took those stamps and envelopes, sold them all in the market in the usual course of business, and has the money in its pocket. The Postmaster-General now says that this is a debt of honor, and but for the considerate favor of these contractors the Department would have been out of all those necessary articles. Here we are in the latter part of January, eight or nine months after they furnished these articles for which the cash on delivery was due.

The Cabinet is not at fault at all, in my judgment. My constituents are out of the money and the Government has the money in its own pocket, and the Postmaster-General in what I read yesterday says what I have told you, that but for the considerate favor of the contractors, the Department would have been out of these articles. I know personally that my constituents are carrying $85,000 in bank and paying 6 per cent. interest upon it for this simple, straightforward debt of common decency. It is not to be stigmatized as a claim, for that carries the idea with many members of Congress that it is a thing to be put off, of course.

If the Senator from Massachusetts should abandon any of his constituents, it is not my fault. I am not going to abandon mine. He says that he has a constituent who has not been paid for three years. That is the case of a contract for certain guns. It is a different thing and has got into the category of claims and ought to be considered before the Committee on Claims, perhaps. I do not know anything about that and I will not prejudice it. I only talk about this one claim, and I say it will be a damaging spectacle if the Government of the United States, after having begged a private citizen to help them out and go in debt for that purpose and pay interest for that purpose, should, having put the money into its own pocket, now, after the recommendation of the Postmaster-General, and after this has been in one deficiency bill, refuse to put it in again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I have some committee amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order of the Senate, amendments of the Committee on Appropriations are first to be received.

Mr. HALE. There are two other amendments that come under the same class as the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut, and adopted by the Senate, items of necessity that were agreed to in the old conference, and as the Senate has adopted the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut I will offer the others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed will be read.

To pay construction and armament of the steel cruisers Chicago, Boston, and Atlanta, namely: under the Bureau of Ordnance, $175,000; under the Bureau of Navigation, $2,500; under the Bureau of Construction and Repair, $40,000; and to reimburse the appropriation for construction and repair 1888 for amount expended therefrom on these cruisers, $43,691.25; in all, $261,191.25.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senate will not adopt that amendment. It is no deficiency whatever. There is no parallel between that amendment and the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut. In the case of the Senator from Connecticut, the amendment was put in the last deficiency bill, which failed during the last session, and it was put in because it was a deficiency which would exist before the 30th day of June last. That bill having failed, the deficiency was absolutely created. The work was done; the Government of the United States received the benefit of it. Now, this amendment was put into the deficiency bill last year, to be expended between that date and the 30th day of last June. It has not been expended. Not one cent of it, not a dollar of it, has been spent. It is a prospective deficiency, to be spent between this and the 1st day of next July, and I protest against it being inserted here. It is not a deficiency in any sense of the word.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator who has charge of this bill, whether this amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations is substantially an amendment which was in the deficiency bill that failed, and which was agreed to by the conference committee?

Mr. HALE. I have stated that that is the reason why I have offered it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like also to inquire whether or not this appropriation is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy as an appropriation which it is desirable to have made in this deficiency bill?

Mr. HALE. Not only that, Mr. President, but it is enforced very strongly by the Secretary of the Navy, who desires it to be incorporated in the first bill coming before the Senate, because the work on these ships is hung up.

Now, the Senator from Missouri says that this appropriation does not stand as well and as strong as that covered by the amendment which the Senate has just adopted. The situation was precisely the same last winter.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is true of last winter, but not now.

Mr. HALE. Last spring they were precisely the same. The need for these ships, that all of us have been interested in for years, to be finished, both in hull and in equipment, is just as great as the need of the Post-Office Department. We are all desirous that they should be finished. I should be glad to live long enough to see the day when one of these new ships will be found putting its nose into foreign waters and showing that it is to sail about the waters of the globe. Last spring the Navy Department submitted the estimates and showed the necessity for this as a deficiency to be expended during the fiscal year. The bill failed.

In the case of the Post-Office Department, the Postmaster-General took upon himself a risk that the law did not permit him to take. He was by law called upon to say that if Congress has not appropriated the money for these stamps, these envelopes, and these other materials, it is my duty to let the service suffer, and not spend the money, but wait until Congress appropriates it, because the law is specific and directs no expenditure beyond the appropriations. The Postmaster-General went on to expend the money for the sake of the service. The Secretary of the Navy might have done the same thing, but he did not.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I explain a moment? The Postmaster-General did not expend a dollar. The situation was perfectly understood by my constituent; he knew that he was throwing himself on the mercy of Congress. The Postmaster-General explained to him, and he knew that if he went and made another envelope for the Post-Office Department his right to compensation would be in the nature of a claim.

Mr. HALE. When I say "expended the money" I mean that he followed out the contracts for the materials and took and used them in the service. He might have said, "I can not do it because Congress has not appropriated." The Secretary of the Navy, though these ships were waiting for the final money to complete them, said, "I will follow the mandate of Congress; I will not spend this money; I will not go on; I will not put the contractors to the obligation of expending money, but I will wait, and when that bill is taken up again I have no doubt these things will be agreed to and they will go onto this bill;" and they ought to go onto this bill if the other goes on. The necessity was just as great, and this Department ought not to be punished because it conformed to the law and did not carry out the contract and furnish the material. These vessels remain hung up, and will; it may not be a matter of very many days; but if one of these items goes on the others ought to go on.

There is another item I shall move, and that is for the water supply here, which we are all interested in, suffering because of the want of money.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Maine. Are not all the items in the bill reported by the committee matters of actual expenditure for the fiscal year 1887 and for prior years?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BECK. Now, this proposition is to insert into this bill money for expenditures to be made in the fiscal year 1888, between this and the 1st of next July. Ought it not to come in the regular deficiency bill for this year and not as part of a deficiency bill providing for the expenditures of prior years?

Mr. HALE. Not by any means, because the operation of the passage of time has been, as the Senator will see in a moment, that hundreds of the items here that we have put into the bill come to just that condition he has stated; they will be expended in the year 1888, because that is the only time they can be, and the work will go on.

Mr. BECK. But they are for obligations created before this bill was postponed last year.

Mr. HALE. This was an obligation created before.

Mr. BECK. Is there not a bill now that we are expecting every day which will contain these items?

Mr. HALE. That I do not know.

Mr. BECK. That I understand is the case.

Mr. HALE. I do not know that. I presume if we postpone these items one after another, and select one item and put it on and do not select others now, in time they will get on; but I protest against the injustice of selecting out one of these items and putting it on and then not putting on the other when the needs are just as great in the one case as in the other.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, there is a very decided difference between these items and the general run of items which enter into this bill, and I for one shall vote against putting anything else on this bill, because I want this bill to go through at the earliest possible moment. This bill will relieve more actual necessity than any appropriation bill passed by Congress for years. There is not a neighborhood in the United States that has not got from one to a dozen old soldiers in it who are waiting, praying, hoping that this bill will get through at the earliest possible moment in order to relieve their absolute, pressing necessities.

There ought not to be a moment's delay in passing this bill. There ought to be nothing put upon it that will result in any controversy whatever with the other House. Every day's delay that the Senate contributes to it will make it criminally culpable in the minds of these people. Here is a matter for war-ships and guns and armament of old ironclads of one kind or another lying on our coast that we can appropriate money to repair and complete and so on. If we go into that and get into a controversy about it with the other House, such as we have had heretofore, this bill may be delayed for weeks, and for what? Simply because we are not willing to avail ourselves of the proper opportunity for making these appropriations.

This bill is necessary to meet the negligences and shortcomings of the last Congress. Perhaps the House of Representatives did not put into it all that ought to have been put in; I do not think it did; but at all events it sent a bill here which provides for undoubted claims and meets a crying need. It was the duty of the Senate, as I think, to have taken it up and passed it without adding to it or subtracting from it, or at all events without doing anything that would contribute one moment's delay to its becoming a law.

We do know—not officially perhaps, because we can not know such things officially—that a bill is pending in the Committee on Appropriations of the other House known as the urgent deficiency bill, of a kind that has become rather common in the legislation of the past few years, and which is expected to be brought in at the early days of every session of Congress, to provide for things which can not wait until the regular deficiency bill is reached.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call attention to the fact that this bill has now been in the Senate twelve days since it passed the House.

Mr. PLUMB. That is a reason why there ought to be no further delay.

Mr. HALE. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that it remained in the House for six weeks before it was sent to us.

Mr. PLUMB. I am not going to apportion the responsibility. I admit, and not only admit but claim, that the House of Representatives is responsible for this delay. I only hold that we shall not put ourselves in a position to share any portion of the responsibility, as we shall do if we put on other items, especially items such as the Senator from Maine has moved. We shall have another deficiency bill here within ten or twelve days probably. If I remember aright the assurance was given in the House of Representatives when this bill was under consideration that in a few days another such bill would be reported.

Mr. COCKRELL. The general deficiency bill for 1888.

Mr. PLUMB. We have had information that the House committee was considering that bill, and that it is liable to come before us at any moment. That will be a bill which perhaps will not contain appropriations of as urgent a character as those we are considering now. It certainly will not represent claims which ought to have been appropriated for at the last session of Congress; it will be for deficiencies of an anticipatory kind, just such as is proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

This bill ought to pass. I do not say anything about the twelve days it has already been here, but those twelve days ought not to be added to by an additional twenty-four hours.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I am not urging the Senate to put upon this bill any item which will occasion controversy between the Senate and the House of Representatives, or between the Senate committee of conference and the House committee of conference. I am only calling the attention of the Senate to the fact that this amendment, moved by the Senator from Maine, who has charge of this bill, is to put a clause upon the bill which was upon the deficiency bill that failed at the last Congress, and which was agreed to by both conference committees; and I now ask the Senator in charge of the bill, or the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, if he will allow to be read the letter from the Secretary of the Navy requesting that this appropriation may be made upon this deficiency bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read, if there be no objection.

Mr. HALE. I send the letter to the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 14, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I inclose copies of the correspondence between the Department and Mr. Randall, chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House, which will show that an item imperatively required by this Department failed insertion in the deficiency bill which is now in the Senate. The item was in the bill at the time that it failed last year. It is imperatively required. The ordnance work upon the new cruisers, the Boston, Atlanta, and Chicago, has now been delayed many months by reason of the failure of the deficiency bill at the last session of Congress. The ships are ready, but their armament is not. I beg that the items may be inserted in the Senate.

Very respectfully,

W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON, U. S. Senate,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, I speak in behalf of the Secretary of the Navy, and concur with him in the hope that this appropriation may be put upon this bill, in order that these ships may be finished. I read in the Washington Post of January 24 what purports to be a statement of the condition of these vessels. It says:

The Chicago has already successfully undergone her sea test, and her final completion as a war vessel will be accomplished when her battery is delivered. She will not be sparred and rigged for some time.

* * * * * * *

The finishing touches to the Boston in the way of equipment, rigging, etc., can not be added at present, for the reason that no money is available, and a further appropriation will be required for this purpose.

I do hope, Mr. President, that I shall have the pleasure of living to see these ships finished, and I hope to see them finished some time during the present Administration. But the condition which the Senate is called upon to confront is that an item which shall enable these ships to be finished, which was in the appropriation bill of the last Congress, agreed to by both conference committees, is left out by the House of Representatives at this time, and Administration Senators now oppose the request of their own Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the letter of the Secretary of the Navy itself shows that the money that he wants to expend for these cruisers is to be expended during the fiscal year. He wants it; he wants it very urgently. This bill, as I said a few moments ago, provides for deficiencies that occurred during the fiscal year 1887 and two or three previous years; and although both Houses in the last Congress were willing to give the money and have it expended, the bill did not reach the President, was never enrolled; Congress adjourned by limitation at noon on the 4th of March, and hence that money was not expended.

A deficiency bill and an urgent deficiency bill will be presented perhaps within a week to this body containing the items for this fiscal year, of which that now presented is a part; and there will be no delay and no disposition to refuse it to the Secretary of the Navy; but when we are making up our accounts of the expenditures of the last fiscal year and of previous fiscal years, this does not form part of them, and this is to be expended during the present fiscal year, and therefore it ought to be charged to it; and for that reason, doubtless, the other House left it out of this bill.

It was a proper appropriation in the last bill because it was then expected to be expended before the 1st day of last July; but the failure of the bill prevented that being done. Now it is to be expended in this fiscal year, for which a bill will come up at once; and when the urgency and necessity for it are shown, as exhibited by the Secretary of the Navy in his letter, the money will be given perhaps as quickly as this can be agreed to and be available if this bill goes to a conference on disputed items.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. BECK. That is true.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask him whether there is upon this bill that is now being considered any appropriation that is not for money to be expended after the act passes?

Mr. BECK. The chairman can answer that better than I can, because the subcommittee of three in charge of this bill consisted of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. They have had charge of it specially, and I am not prepared to answer.

Mr. HALE. Let me answer the question.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let me explain first. If this bill appropriates only moneys which have been already expended, then I recognize the force of the argument of the Senator from Kentucky; but if it appropriates moneys that are yet to be expended for things yet to be done, then it seems to me it is about as expedient to finish these ships as it is to do any other future work. If the bill is what the Senator from Kentucky says it is, and what the Senator from Kansas says it is, a bill which merely pays debts already owed, where the money has been already expended or the work already done, then I have nothing further to say.

Mr. HALE. It is not so. The bill is full of items covering just such conditions as these.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like the Senator to point out how many there are. I take issue on that proposition. I say the bill is not full of such items.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HALE. I will read one item:

Road to cemetery, Springfield, Mo.: That the citizens of Greene County, Missouri, are hereby authorized to improve or adorn, at their own expense, the road constructed by the Government from Springfield, Mo., to the national cemetery near that city, and said road shall be known and designated as Phelps Boulevard.

Mr. COCKRELL. How much is appropriated there, please tell me?

Mr. HALE. Then it is still more strongly open to objection if it is not an appropriation. It is a clause in a deficiency bill. The Senator has been making a point that he would not vote for anything that was not for a deficiency for money expended already, and here in one State this bill has a provision without regard to appropriations authorizing certain parties to go on and finish a road; and here just above it is—

Natchez Cemetery roadway: For completion of the macadamized or gravel road from the city of Natchez, Miss., to the national cemetery near that city, $6,000.

Here is an appropriation in Utah for an entirely new enterprise where money has not been expended, "for Industrial Christian Home." There is another for an expenditure on the Potomac River; and if I had time I could go through the bill and point out many others. Everybody who knows anything about deficiency bills knows that they are not simply for the payment of moneys that have already been expended. That is not their purpose; it is to make the service touch from year to year, and they run over several years in many cases. The distinction which has been raised here as to one amendment or another, that in one case the money has been expended and in another it has not been, is not a good distinction as applied to a deficiency bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON. It seems to me a most extraordinary spectacle that, in order to make an urgent deficiency bill like this tally with the book-keeping of the Committee on Appropriations, items of so much importance as the one now under discussion should be rejected from the bill.

Here are several ships that have cost the Government millions of dollars waiting for what? For an armament to be put on board those ships; and the Committee on Appropriations, after having been advised by the Secretary of the Navy of the necessity of an appropriation in order that he might contract for this work, in order that he might hasten the departure of these ships, say now it must not be put upon this bill because it interferes with our fiscal book-keeping!

If I understand aright the case of the constituents of the Senator from Connecticut, as explained by him yesterday, they proceeded at their own cost and expense to furnish stamps to the Post-Office Department in anticipation of its needs, and they were required to wait the pleasure of Congress. With a deficiency bill now pending before the Senate upon which appropriations of that character may be made, still many members of the Senate, particularly of the Committee on Appropriations, dissent from that view.

It seems to me as though these appropriations might be passed in both Houses of Congress in a good deal less time than it takes to discuss them here and settle whether they should be on this particular bill or some other. Certainly we need them, and to me that is sufficient. The urgent necessity is shown by the letter sent here by the Secretary of the Navy. Unless you appropriate the money a delay will be occasioned and these ships will not be put into practical use. I think that is a full answer to the question.

Mr. HALE. In looking over the bill I find many items of the class referred to where no money has been expended by the Government. For instance:

Court-house at Jefferson City, Mo.: For completion of the building, $11,000.

That ought to be done; that building ought to be completed. We agreed last year that it ought to be completed. The Government can not go on and expend this money until it gets the appropriation. It ought to be on this bill as it was on the old bill of last year where the controversy was settled. It is just so about these other items. I am willing for one to take the vote without occupying any more time.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, it seems to me the Senate have lost sight of the fact that the appropriations necessary to carry on the Government are to be determined and fixed by Congress. The two Houses are the proper authority to settle the items which should be put upon such bills. The fiscal year expired, it seems, and some head of Department has gone on outside of the appropriations of Congress, not respecting the authority Congress gives him to expend money, but assuming to judge himself of the amount of money which should be expended.

It seems to me that the heads of Departments ought to adopt such a method that they will limit their expenditures to the money appropriated by Congress. Instead of doing that we treat these deficiency bills as if they were a matter of course and were justified by law. It may be that exigencies may sometimes arise which may render deficiency bills necessary; but now our practice here seems to ignore existing law with reference to the duties of Departments in making estimates and limiting themselves to the appropriations of Congress.

So far as I am concerned in reference to this and all other items where the heads of Departments choose to make a deficiency before the end of the fiscal year, I shall certainly vote against justifying it.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will bear in mind that in this case the Secretary of the Navy did just what he desires. He did not go on and expend the money. The amendment I have offered covers precisely the case the Senator has in mind. The Secretary, when Congress adjourned last March, instead of going on and spending this money, declined to do so because Congress had not given the appropriation, and now comes in on the first deficiency bill and asks that he may have the money to finish the vessels. He has complied with the law. Some of the other Departments did not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the consideration of the unfinished business will be resumed, being the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. HALE. I hope that may be informally laid aside until we finish the deficiency bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will be laid aside, and the Senate resumes the consideration of the deficiency bill.

Mr. REAGAN. This is a deficiency, and it is said this money has not been expended.

Mr. HALE. Let me explain to the Senator. Does he not see that in finishing a ship, or arming a ship, as it approaches completion, the head of the Department who is building it discovers that the money he has is not sufficient? It is like a man building a house, or a railroad, or whatever may be done by human hands. He is confronted with that situation; he has got to have the money in order to finish the ship. What more can he do, what better can he do under the law than to stop the work, as the Secretary has done in this case, and report to Congress that he wants more money, and wait until Congress appropriates the money? He does not make the deficiency. The money has run out. What, I ask the Senator, would he have the Secretary to do in such a case beyond what the Secretary of the Navy has done in this case. When he finds the money is gone, he does not go on and run up debts, but he appeals to Congress and asks that in the very next deficiency bill that is passed the money may be given to him to finish the ship. What more can he do?

Mr. REAGAN. I now understand the Senator; and his statement makes a different case from that which I had in view in the remarks I made on this bill; but I still desire to be understood as objecting to the continual making of deficiency bills in disregard of the duty of the heads of Departments to conform their expenditures to the appropriations made by Congress. Congress should have the duty of voting the proper amount of money to be expended in the service of the different Departments of the Government, and the Departments should not be permitted to exceed the authority Congress gives them.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I did not make objection to the expenditure solely or mainly; my objection to the amendment is that it is going to make a controversy with the other House. The Senator from Maine, in anticipation of a row with the House of Representatives, wants to get this on this bill. There will be plenty of chances on succeeding bills for it. I do not want the class of claims of which I have spoken, which affect a very large class of citizens of the United States, a very meritorious class—a class of people whose claims for actual services rendered have been adjusted and allowed by the Departments which ought to have been paid last year—I do not want them to wait while the Senator from Maine and the House committee are negotiating and contending about a matter which will certainly be the subject of contention. It is trifling, in my judgment, with interests which ought to receive a great deal more kindly consideration at the hands of the Senate than they have heretofore received.

I think we ought to pass this bill without putting anything on it that the House of Representatives will probably object to. We shall have another deficiency bill after awhile, and these ships which have been waiting for the last twelve months for lack of this money can wait twenty or thirty days longer, and the contractors and all the men who are going to make profit out of the expenditure of that money can afford to abate something of their impetuosity for a few days, I think.

Mr. GORMAN. I regret very much that the Senator in charge of this bill is departing from the rule he laid down in his opening remarks on presenting the bill to the Senate.

This bill came to the Senate from the House, was sent to the Committee on Appropriations, and I understand it was the unanimous agreement of the committee that in view of the peculiar origination of the appropriation bills by another branch of this Government, it was unwise for us on a deficiency bill to attempt to consider all the measures that we thought properly belonged there at the last Congress. We adopted a rule that as the House of Representatives had seen proper to exclude all these items on this deficiency bill, reserving them for another that may come later on, the Senate ought to leave them off now, and not be put in the position of being forced in cases such as the one that the Senator from Connecticut has presented to the Senate and the one which the Senator from Maine now presents, to load up a deficiency bill in this body. There was nothing in the urgency of the case in any Department of the Government in our judgment that required it.

Now I submit to the Senator from Maine that there are a hundred other items equally meritorious, equally as urgent as the one which he presents, and that if the Senate determines that we are to go into these measures and consider each on its merits, then this bill ought to be recommitted to the committee, and let us consider every item that has come before the committee and present it to the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator if he does not clearly discern the reason why I offered this amendment. The whole question was brought up by the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. After the attitude of the committee had been stated, the situation between the two Houses, and a pretty full debate, the Senate decided not to take that attitude, as it clearly had a right to do; and the Committee on Appropriations having performed its duty, and the Senate having concluded to put that item on, then I felt constrained to move this item, which, as I conceive, comes under the same category. There may be some distinction, but that is why I have offered it. I have not abandoned the grounds, I have lost none of my conviction as to what it would be desirable to do on these appropriation bills in order that we may not be confronted hereafter with the conditions that so beset us heretofore. But the Senate has taken upon itself the exercise of its discretion; and I am very sorry that while that amendment was pending, and while that critical point was coming, we did not hear from the Senator from Kansas in opposition to that amendment. I heard nothing from him until this amendment was offered, and I offered it because the Senate had concluded to depart from the policy laid down by the Committee on Appropriations. I do not care what the Senate does with it. It may take one course on one amendment and another course on another, but let us have the expression of the Senate on the subject.

Mr. BECK. Some gentleman rose to offer an amendment, and I understood the Senator from Maine to ask him to wait until he could offer amendments from the committee, and the amendment he offers now was an amendment from the committee as stated by him. Therefore other amendments were postponed that other Senators desired to offer until he could offer a committee amendment. I do not understand this to be a committee amendment.

Mr. HALE. It may be that my expression did not convey the whole idea. The subject had been before the committee and it was considered altogether. The understanding there was that these three items should go off. I have no doubt that if we had concluded to put one on, we should have concluded to put on all.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator must speak for himself. I certainly would have voted against this one and protested against it strongly.

Mr. HALE. No distinction was made that I remember in committee upon them. Perhaps I was not justified in saying it was a committee amendment as considered by the committee, but the Senate had adopted the other amendment, and, being in charge of the bill, I wished to present an amendment before others came in, and I did it, I will say, on my own responsibility, feeling that as one amendment had been adopted I wanted the others of the same character.

Mr. COCKRELL. Did I not make the point expressly in the Appropriations Committee that the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut was on a different footing from this?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. COCKRELL. And showed the same distinction as has been shown here?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly; but the committee then went on and made no distinction, but put them all together and rejected the three.

Mr. COCKRELL. It excluded them all.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, is it in order to state what occurred in committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair knows no rule of the Senate that forbids the statement of what occurred in committee.

Mr. ALLISON. Then it is in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair knows of no rule that forbids it.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire not to transgress the rules, but I will make the general statement that there was a reason for the action of the committee, and those of us on this side of the Chamber were perfectly prepared to stand by the chairman of the committee, and on this bill let it be understood that all the appropriations that are necessary to carry on the affairs of the Government should not be left off elsewhere, thereby forcing the Senate into the position of increasing appropriations and then being charged with extravagance.

There was a principle involved in it; not that the Senate should abdicate its right to put amendments on appropriation bills, but the fact was notorious that there was an attempt made, and it has been the custom for some time past, to put the Senate in the attitude of voting for large appropriations, appropriations necessary to carry on the affairs of the Government. But in the opinion of the Committee on Appropriations, and I may say the unanimous opinion of that committee, it was a wise thing to take this bill as it came from the House of Representatives, and let it be understood hereafter that it would only meet with fair consideration on the line that was drawn there. In my judgment it is absolutely necessary to the Senate that we should meet this question now.

As to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, I did not think it was necessary for us all to talk on that one amendment. The conditions of that appropriation are entirely different from the one we are now considering. There was a case where I believe the executive officer was compelled to exceed his authority and have stamps and envelopes printed. The work was absolutely necessary for the conduct of the affairs of the Post-Office Department, and the contractor was laboring under great hardships. It was an exceptional case; and while I would have had him wait until the next deficiency bill comes along so as to conform to this general rule, still it could not be compared with this or any other amendment that may be offered to the bill. I think it was a strong case; but I say to the Senator from Maine, as to the amendment which he offers, that the Government will not suffer by not putting it on this bill. The guns wanted can wait for six months longer.

Mr. HALE. The Secretary says it is imperatively needed. He is not my Secretary.

Mr. GORMAN. I have never known a Secretary that did not say every appropriation he wanted was absolutely necessary. I have no doubt the work is needed. I have no doubt the people of this city would be greatly benefited if we would insert an appropriation in this bill that ought to be there for the completion of the water-works. I think the Government would save hundreds of thousands of dollars if all these needed appropriations were made in time. They certainly would in the water-works case, where the tunnel so far as constructed is lying idle and will be depreciated in value by remaining as it is.

Mr. HALE. That is one of the amendments of this class.

Mr. GORMAN. And yet the Senator knows that if the Senate is going to make a fight on these items much delay will ensue. I give the Senator notice that if he departs from the rule, he should select one or two cases and not make a fight on the rule laid down. So far as I am concerned I can not support it.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Kansas has stated correctly that we ought to pass the bill as nearly as it came from the other House as possible and as soon as possible and get clear of it.

About the dealings of the committee with each other I desire to say this much more: In committee the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the chairman of the committee, and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], as well as myself, agreed as to what should be done. While I am as ultra a partisan perhaps as any man on this floor, I do not approve of appropriation bills coming from the other end of the Capitol withholding provisions which ought to be made and then having them inserted in the Senate, and having the charge made that the House is an economical body and the Senate is an extravagant body.

Taking all the amendments my desire was that the Senate should acquiesce in this bill because it is right as far as it goes, and that the House should take the responsibility of sending over the other needed items to us. It is because of that, as the Senator from Maine very well knows, that all the gentlemen of the committee who entertain my political views did not want this body, especially in a Presidential year, to go into the canvass loaded down with charges of extravagance by adding on things that it might be said would not be put on but for our extravagance. I do not believe in that, and therefore I wanted to keep this bill, as the Senator from Kansas said, as near as we can in the condition in which it came from the other House, hoping these other things will come in another bill.

Mr. PLUMB. It is not a very important consideration, but the Senator from Maine has picked out three items which he thinks ought to go on the bill. The committee voted not to put them on. Now, because the Senate has voted down the committee on one proposition, the Senator from Maine turns around and assumes that all the others are to go on, overlooking the fact that if the whole question had been voted on in the committee, the committee would have put on not only the three amendments, but three times three, or perhaps ten times three, which would be just as germane to this bill, and just as necessary to conduct the Government as this, or much more so; but some amendments in which he happens to feel some peculiar interest are just crowded upon us in this way, and we do not have a chance to consider the whole question.

He is now determined that the House shall take this measure for the finishing of the ships or else lose the appropriations for the old soldiers. It is to be put on this bill because he is not willing to have it take its chance on a bill on which there will be some opportunity to give and take; but yielding to the disposition of the House now to repair the neglect of last session, whereby they would be willing, perhaps, to give something, he seeks to thrust it upon them at this time, thus cutting out the committee itself from a fair opportunity of presenting amendments of a similar character which some of us were ready to present, violating the most solemn understanding that ever existed in any committee of any body, in my judgment.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not think there is likely to be any great division in the Committee on Appropriations upon this or any other subject. We are in the habit of working together, and I presume will do so hereafter. My attitude has been simply this: I have violated no understanding, and do not propose to do so. The Committee on Appropriations directed me to make the fight on these items, and I made the fight when the first one came up. I did not bring it up; the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] brought it up. That brought the fight on. The whole proposition that the Committee on Appropriations agreed to, consented to, acquiesced in by Democrats as well as Republicans, was brought up when the Senator from Connecticut moved his amendment.

I presented the case as I best could, as the committee had decided upon it and as I was directed to do, giving what assistance I could to the members of the committee, and then the Senate voted to put the proposition on. When that was done by the Senate, on my own responsibility, not for the committee, I thought it was wise that they should have the opportunity of passing upon other amendments that came in the same category that I have referred to before as having been on the bill as agreed upon by the conference at the last session. I do not say that that binds anybody, that we are obliged to take the bill just as the conferees agreed upon it at the last session, but it makes a distinctive category of cases, it separates and puts apart a class of propositions that does not include other propositions, and these three items, so far from being selected by me, as the Senator from Kansas intimates, were selected by the House of Representatives and left off the bill without any good reason being given. And when our committee considered them, though there may be a distinction between one and another, it was concluded not to put them on, and I was directed by the committee to make the fight.

I have not picked out these items. I want the Senate, having agreed to one of these propositions that the House left off, I think without reason, to have a chance to pass on the others. I do not care how my amendment fares; I do not care whether the Senate rejects this amendment or accepts it. The Senate ought to have an opportunity of voting upon it because it belongs to the category of the items which were agreed upon and which would have passed if Congress had sat twenty-four hours longer last March. That is all I am seeking to do here. All that I desire is a vote of the Senate on this proposition. Let it be rejected if the Senate choose; that will satisfy me.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, this bill has undergone several stages; and I think in view of what has been said in respect to the attitude of members of the Committee on Appropriations, that I ought to say a word upon the entire subject; and I want to begin, in giving the history of this bill, with the last session.

If any Senator will turn to the discussion upon this bill elsewhere, since the present session began, it will be discovered that it was there stated that there was some sort of understanding—I do not know how that understanding exists—that this bill should include only those items that were agreed to in conference last year. I think it has been understood, in the main, that this bill as it came from the House of Representatives did not include what was in the bill of last year, as agreed to by the committee of conference of the two Houses. Now, it is worth while for us to consider some points beyond that.

It was stated elsewhere that this bill failed to receive the signature of the President of the United States at the last session because the Senate of the United States insisted upon putting on it items which ought not to be there, and it was openly stated that it was the resistance of the Senate to the elimination from this bill of the Choctaw claim and the Pacific Railway judgment that made this bill (being largely a bill for the benefit of the soldiers) to fail at the last session.

Mr. President, this bill which we have now before us was a general deficiency bill last year. It was not what it is now—the relic of a remnant of deficiencies. It was then a general deficiency, such as appears here every year, covering every branch of the service as respects the failure to make appropriations in advance for that service, and this bill had included in it many items requiring minute investigation. It did not come to this body until the evening of the 1st day of March, 1887; it came to this body after a recess on the 1st day of March, after 8 o'clock p. m., as is shown by the Journal of that day. It was then—being a bill of 100 pages or more—necessary that it should be printed, in order that the Committee on Appropriations could give it that intelligent consideration which the Senate required it to do. The bill was printed and did not reach the Appropriations Committee room until the morning of the 2d day of March, and on that day, as every member of the Committee on Appropriations will bear me out in the statement, we sat there during that entire day in the consideration of the bill.

The Senator from Maine, who is in charge of it, says that he brought it in here during the evening session of the 2d day of March. It was considered here not at great length. If Senators will turn, as I have turned this morning, to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and see the debate, they will discover that this bill was only debated about an hour or an hour and a half in all. The Choctaw claim, being a judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States, was put upon the bill on the motion of a Senator in this body, not upon the motion of the Committee on Appropriations, and it was put upon the bill without one word of utterance pro or con, as the RECORD shows. So that did not delay the consideration of the bill a single second of time, either here or in the committee of conference. The debate, as respects the judgment for the Pacific Railroad, did occupy perhaps half an hour of the time of this body.

After passing through the ordeal here the bill went to the House of Representatives, and did not reach there until the 3d of March, necessarily, because it takes some time for the clerks of this body to prepare and engross the amendments. It came back here again, with the amendments disagreed to, on the 3d of March, when it was our duty at 12 o'clock of the 4th of March to adjourn the Forty-ninth Congress. This bill was considered by the conferees of the two Houses without many of the amendments being in print, because we had not time to print them. The Senate amendments agreed to in this body were not printed.

To claim anywhere that this bill is here now because of the delays of the Senate, or because of the fact that the Senate put upon it items to which the House could not agree, is a misstatement of the truth as respects the consideration of a deficiency bill.

A question is raised as to what was agreed to in conference. That conference, and I presume I can state it, was held between the hours of 3 in the morning and 7 or 8 in the morning of the 4th day of March, when this clock was put back. We sat there in that conference during those hours for the purpose of endeavoring, if possible, to facilitate the final consideration of the bill by the two Houses, so that it might receive the signature of the President. Although we sat until 8 o'clock in the morning, and then agreed to these items, I will say here in the presence of Senators that the conferees on the part of the Senate took this bill, although the Senate had placed upon it many important amendments, and said to the House conferees, "Gentlemen, do you agree to this or not? We are so anxious to pass this bill that we will forego, for the time being, the judgment of the Senate as respects many items, in order that the necessary appropriations may be made for the carrying on of the Government." In this deficiency bill were items for money that had already been expended, were items for money that it would be necessary to expend, as was stated, between the 3d day of March and the end of the fiscal year, the 30th of June. One of those items constituted a large deficiency in the Post-Office Department. It not only included the items which the Senator from Connecticut has had inserted in the present bill, but it included items for clerk-hire, for postal-railway clerk, and various other items which were essential to the conduct of the public service in that regard, and the failure of the bill crippled that service greatly. The result was that in the section of the country where I dwell the postal service never was in such condition of inefficiency as it is this day and this hour.

Mr. PLATT. Everywhere else, too.

Mr. ALLISON. I only speak of my own section. There was included in it this deficiency. I do not wish to discuss the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] which has already been agreed to. I admit that the Senator from Connecticut has a just regard for his constituents, who, in good faith doubtless, furnished articles to the Post-Office Department; but the Postmaster-General in receiving them violated the law, which the Senator from Texas has condemned the Postmaster-General for violating. The Postmaster-General violated a plain provision of statute in allowing the Government to incur an obligation as respects a service which had no appropriation of money to meet it. That was what was done with respect to that particular amendment, although the item was on this bill on the morning of the 4th of March, and if it had passed then would have passed according to law. But the Postmaster-General, acting, I have no doubt, according to the discretion he believed he had, rather than cause a partial failure of the postal service, did violate the law and receive these articles from the constituents of the Senator from Connecticut. That is all I care to say so far as that particular item is concerned.

That item was just as well known to the body that passed this bill before it came to us as it was known to us. The Postmaster-General, in his report, very properly and very wisely stated that he was obliged, because of the failure of the bill, to incur this responsibility, and he asked the House of Representatives and the Senate to make the necessary appropriation immediately, because he considered the obligation one of honor to these men, who were willing, in violation of law, to allow the Government to receive a portion of their labor and their manufacture.

There were upon this bill two other items; one relating to the tunnel that is now being constructed in the District of Columbia for the supply of water here, which we all agree about. It is an important thing. It was on this bill last year. Since the 1st day of November this tunnel has been filling up with water, and it will be a great expense to the Government, to the contractors, or to somebody, every day that this is delayed.

Now as respects the amendment which is under immediate consideration, that item was also in this bill before. We knew perfectly well, and everybody who has examined the subject, certainly every Senator here, knows perfectly well that these cruisers will be of no value on the ocean until the armament is provided, and everybody knows that we have been talking for years here and in the other branch about a new navy, and as the Senator from New Hampshire, who was Secretary of the Navy, I believe, when these vessels were inaugurated, said he hoped to live long enough to see these vessels floating upon the water, so do I.

These are three items that I submit to the Senator from Kansas that, as we understand this question, ought to be provided for. How that understanding prevails, I only refer to as disclosed in the discussion elsewhere; but these items stand in a little different relation from the other items which were discarded in this bill, as respects our duty to bring them forward immediately rather than wait for another bill. The Committee on Appropriations decided, I think I can say with unanimity, that none of these items should go upon this bill. Why? It was a singular fact that after we had gone through the bill last year and eliminated from it every practical objection that could possibly be made in the House of Representatives, and cut down the bill so that it contained only a few of the items that were put upon it in the Senate, it went back there, and with this understanding, I will say, on the part of people elsewhere, that the bill as then agreed to and then cut down should be put in anew and other things should be eliminated, they left off these three items. Why? I do not know what was the motive. A Senator once used to say here that that black drop called human motive could not always be disclosed or judged of. It so turns out that these three items constitute about 20 per cent. of this entire bill; so that when we came to make up the final situation at the close of this session it would be paraded against our committee, and against the Senate of the United States, that we had added 20 per cent. to these bills in the Senate in our extravagance!

Therefore, and I say it with great respect for the minority Senators upon the Committee on Appropriations, we have said hitherto in our committee and in the Senate that there had been no party division upon these subjects of appropriation; and they would not put us in the attitude as Republicans of presenting appropriations increasing our bills, even although they were necessary appropriations for the conduct of the public service or to pay some honest creditor. With unanimity the Committee on Appropriations decided that it would eliminate from this bill all these items, so that when the bill went back to the House of Representatives it would go back there at least in such form that no expert or arithmetician of that body or elsewhere could show that the extravagant Senate had put 20 per cent. upon the bill.

Mr. President, although I think these three items are mainly in the same line, I voted against the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, although having great sympathy with his constituents as respects it, feeling that we ought not to do this in view of the fact that the Postmaster-General had violated a plain provision of law in order to carry on the Government so far as the Post-Office Department was concerned without calling an extra session of Congress, which for many reasons the President was bound to do when this and other bills failed on the 4th of March last.

Mr. HAWLEY. I submit to the Senator that his logic is very bad in that case. Why does he not impeach the Postmaster-General and pay my constituents?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senate having put this provision in the bill and this being the best argument on my part, I trust the Senator will not get excited on that particular topic. Besides that, I am to act as a judge if the Postmaster-General should be impeached, and I beg to be excused now in anticipation from expressing an opinion on that subject. So I will withdraw that remark.

Mr. BUTLER. I have listened with great interest to what the Senator from Iowa has said——

Mr. ALLISON. I know the Senator always does.

Mr. BUTLER. As I always do; but I should be very much obliged to him, and should feel very much instructed, if he would first tell us in this body precisely what the Committee on Appropriations intend, what they mean, what they desire us to do in this regard. I have heard one Senator from that committee say one thing, and another another, and another another. I should be very glad indeed if, as the representative of that committee upon this floor, he would say to us just what he wants us to do in regard to the matter. I will adopt him as my file-leader.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very much obliged to the Senator, and I will tell him what I propose to do without advising him as to what his duty is.

I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Maine because I believe that is the true policy of this body as respects this particular appropriation, although I should be glad to vote with him at any other time upon this subject. I shall vote against him also upon the water tunnel, although I believe that is the most pressing public service for which we can appropriate money at this time. But after the Committee on Appropriations have so decided, and as I believe wisely, I do not care to open up these questions again. Therefore it is that I hope the Senator from Maine will withdraw the amendment now proposed by him.

I have said thus much upon this bill for the purpose of showing to the Senate and to people elsewhere who may be interested in the subject that this great bill is not before the Senate now because of any fault of the Senate as respects any single matter in connection with it; that it is here because elsewhere it was delayed until such time as that it was impossible for it to be considered here. From whencesoever comes the statement that the bill failed last year because of the conduct of the Senate, I repeat it did not receive the bill until the night of the 1st of March, two days before we adjourned; that the Committee on Appropriations, which was bound in honor to consider it item by item, did not receive it until the morning of the 2d of March; and that, sitting hours that ought to have been devoted to sleep and to rest, and devoting that time to the consideration of the bill, they were only able to bring it before the Senate at such time as that it was impossible to print it finally for consideration by the Congress of the two Houses. All I rose to say was to repel the idea that the Senate of the United States is in any sense responsible for these delays.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I only desire to say that since this debate begun I have taken pains to ascertain that a bill will be presented to us within a week from this time—I think within five days—containing all these important items of appropriation, and that it is very much better to consider them then than now. I have taken pains to ascertain that, without being able to say how.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, if this amendment is going to give rise to the offering of many other amendments, as I have been told it will, owing to the desire I have to get through as soon as possible, I will withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend the bill by striking out from line 7 to line 12, inclusive, on page 38, in the following words:

For payment of judgments and awards recovered against the United States for flowage damages caused by the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin, and reported to Congress by the Attorney-General in Senate Executive Document 94, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, as follows.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I make this motion on which to predicate the observations I have to make, but my objection goes to all that part of the bill which extends from line 6, on page 38, to line 19, on page 49, except so much of it as proposes to repeal the act of 1875, under which it is insisted that these damages have grown up.

As the recital of the bill is that these payments are predicated upon judgments and awards, it may be that the Senate will consider itself bound by the judgments of the Court of Claims, and I know that ordinarily I should feel so bound.

Whether this amendment and my objections to this portion of the bill be sustained or not, I think it is right that a statement should be made to the Senate in regard to the history of this appropriation.

In 1846 the Government gave to Wisconsin three half sections of land to the mile on each side of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers for the purpose of aiding Wisconsin when it became a State, for it seems it was then in process of coming into the Union, to form an open water-way for navigation between the Mississippi River and Lake Michigan. This land was in some way disposed of. I do not propose to discuss it further than to state that Wisconsin got the three half sections to the mile for the entire distance from Green Bay to the Mississippi River, that is, 960 acres of land to the mile. This land, I say, was in some way disposed of. Appropriations have been made by the Government to carry on this work. By the act of 1875 the right seems to have been secured to persons injured by the flowage of the lands, and under that act the judgments embraced in this bill and those in former bills have been brought before Congress for appropriation.

Subsequently to the disposition of the land granted in this case, the Government has spent about $2,000,000 in appropriations from time to time ranging from $175,000 to $250,000, perhaps in one or two years $500,000. The work it seems is now abandoned, and I was advised many years ago by the Chief of Engineers, or rather by his assistant, that it ought to have been abandoned sooner. This large amount of money has been expended.

I ought, however, to state that it seems when Wisconsin abandoned the prosecution of the work it turned the work over for prosecution by the Government of the United States, that is the improvement of the river, but reserving the water to the State of Wisconsin. Locks and dams were built at a number of places along the Fox River, furnishing very fine water-power. This water-power is occupied by private individuals, and numerous mills and manufactories are now carried on upon that river by the water-power furnished by the locks and dams built by the Government at an expense of $2,000,000, after the immense amount of lands above referred to had been previously granted.

In 1875 there was an appropriation of $25,000 to pay for condemned land and for flowage, it seems, that year. Then there have been one or two other items. There have been three appropriations made to pay commissioners for assessing the damages on account of flowage, and these payments altogether amount to some $10,000. The last Congress appropriated $91,301.11 to pay for flowage. The present bill appropriates a little over $130,000 more.

While we may not avoid the making of these appropriations, it may be useful, if not to us, to the people of some of the other States, to learn how to be enterprising and thrifty by following the example of Wisconsin in this case, in securing I do not know how much land, for I do not know the distance from Green Bay to the Mississippi River, but it must be some 400 miles. They obtained 960 acres of land to the mile, besides $2,000,000 in cash, and some additional appropriations. The work is still incomplete so far as the navigation between the Mississippi and Lake Michigan is concerned, but it is complete enough to furnish water-power for a great number of manufacturing establishments and mills along the Fox River at Government expense.

I think in making these appropriations it is right that we should understand we are making them to satisfy demands of that kind upon the Government, where there is no possible show of equity, but the strongest evidences of improper practices to obtain money from the Government, not for the purpose of public use, but for the benefit of the mill-owners and manufacturers along the river.

As I have stated, the items here cover eleven pages of this bill. It is recited in the paragraph which I propose to strike out that they are inserted on account of judgments and awards made under the act, I suppose, of 1875. If my amendment will not do any good in arresting such an appropriation this year, it may do good, as I suggested, in stimulating people in other States and other portions of the country to like thrift and enterprise in securing the enrichment of citizens out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this subject has been for years before Congress, and it comes about in this way: After the Government had commenced that great work, upon which vast sums of money had been expended, of improving the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, questions arose as to damages that were done to owners of property lying upon the river and near by; and Congress in 1875 passed the act approved March 3, 1875, which is entitled "An act to aid in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin." That act, in terms, recognizes the fact that claims for damages are arising from time to time against the Government on account of its works there, provides for adjudication of the subjects-matter, and that the Government should be represented by attorneys and proper representatives when the question of consideration of damages to the citizens should arise.

That act is the fundamental statute upon which these claims are presented. In accordance with that act the Government went on with its works, and from time to time claims were made because of damage from flowage and other causes resulting from the Government works. The matters were brought into court and a commission appointed, which was recognized by the Government, appearing before it and contesting the claims. Some dispute arising on certain of these claims, the Government took an appeal from the court which had appointed the commissioners and carried the case to the Supreme Court; and the Supreme Court decided that the machinery as put in operation by virtue of the fundamental statute was correct, and that the parties had, under the legislation of Congress and under the act of the Government, proper claims.

That having been established, the Attorney-General from year to year has certified these claims and they have been presented to us as regular estimates. As the foundation of the provisions which are found in the bill, in the regular Estimates, page 25 of Document No. 29, under the head of "Fox and Wisconsin River Improvements," is this estimate:

For payment of judgments and awards recovered against the United States for flowage damages caused by the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers in the State of Wisconsin, and reported to Congress by the Attorney-General in Senate Executive Document No. 94, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, as follows.

The list follows, giving the names of the claimants and the amounts of their judgments. Those judgments having passed through the scrutiny of the court in which the Government was represented, and then through the Department, are certified to Congress and adopted by the House of Representatives. The Senate Committee on Appropriations has agreed to the propositions as embodied in the bill by the House of Representatives.

Now, as to whether there are any cases of undue claims or a disposition to mulct the Government, I am not informed. The Committee on Appropriations has not gone into the subject-matter of each distinctive case, but has found that the general appropriations rest upon the foundation of an enacted statute passed by Congress and approved by the President; that the proceedings have been in accordance with that statute; that the Government has been represented everywhere; and that to be certain of its rights it took an appeal, which was settled against it, and therefore the propositions have come up here.

I am glad to say that we have got about to the end of these claims, and that there is a provision in the bill, incorporated by the other House and agreed to thus far by the Senate, repealing the whole thing, and winding it up; and I suppose sooner or later we shall see the last of these claims. That is the reason why the provision is on the bill.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine as to the character of these damages, if the committee went into that part of the subject. Is it for overflow upon the lands adjoining the river by reason of the damming up of water?

Mr. SAWYER. I will answer that question. Yes, that is the case. As the Senator from Maine stated, there was an act passed by Congress allowing the damages to be ascertained under the State law, and they were ascertained under our condemnation law. Commissions were appointed. A suit was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States and that court affirmed the judgment of the court below. After that there were a great many suits appealed to the circuit court, but in almost every case the plaintiffs obtained an increased judgment over the awards. Those cases were reported to the Attorney-General. The Attorney-General says, in a document which I have not in my hand, because I did not suppose the provision would be attacked, that there was nothing else for the Government to do but to pay the awards.

As the Senator from Maine says, I think all the claims for damages have been settled.

At any rate there were a great many claims filed last summer. The commission first went along the river and then filed claims back. They reported one hundred and twenty-three claims amounting to $300,000. Those, of course, are not yet paid. This provision repeals the law, and if it is adopted I think it will wind up the business, except that there may be a little charge for the service of the commissioners last summer.

I hope the provision will not be stricken out, and I do not think it would be, if it was fully understood. It was fully discussed in the other House and put in there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. EVARTS. I beg to call attention to the proviso in the clause on the fifth page regarding repayments to importers. The proviso begins at line 9. A provision is asked for by the Government to pay the obligations incurred in repayment of duties exacted beyond the rates fixed by law, and occasion is taken of this appropriation to introduce here a clause of general legislation. I will read the proviso:

Provided, That section 3011 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after the word "paid," in the seventh line, the following: "Together with costs of suit and interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum."

The gravamen of this proviso is in reducing the interest now called for by the statute in force as 6 per cent., or in whatever State at the rate of interest that there prevails. Now, this is general legislation. It has no concern with the appropriation or with the deficiency; and I propose to strike out the whole clause. If it should not be stricken out it is very important that it should be made apparent that this provision of this reduced rate of interest should only apply to suits and to claims which have not already accrued. The Senate will see at once that if a right of action has now accrued and is in suit or is in complete right of action to be sued, to take away a rate of interest that has already accrued and been accruing under the laws as they have existed is simply extracting so much money from the rightful and accrued claims of creditors.

Mr. HOAR. I lost part of the Senator's statement. Did the Senator state that where duties were paid under protest they now bear interest before judgment?

Mr. EVARTS. Yes; always.

Mr. HOAR. At what rate; 6 per cent.?

Mr. EVARTS. Whatever is the rate of the State in which the suit is brought.

The Treasury Department have not desired that this retroactive effect shall occur, and the Secretary of the Treasury has drawn a clause in the language here used with the intention that it shall not apply to any suit heretofore brought. The Committee on Appropriations of the other House asked also for a clause that would cover pending cases, and the Secretary of the Treasury gave them a clause to that effect, but accompanied it with this observation:

I do not, however, wish to be understood as recommending the latter course, inasmuch as these claims have to a great extent already accrued, and the obligations being now fixed under existing law, the effect of such legislation might be seriously inequitable if not found to be unconstitutional.

The House of Representatives has not followed the latter clause, but that which was regarded as operative only perspectively. As this provision takes its place in the text of the Revised Statutes, if it is adopted, I propose this precautionary clause: "But this provision shall not affect existing suits or demands." I use the words "suits" and "demands" because those are the words used in the section of the Revised Statutes, and that section, let me add, is exclusively applied to these very suits for the recovery of duties.

I move that the clause I have read shall be added, to make it clear by law that the views of the Secretary of the Treasury are right, that it shall have no operation upon accrued and existing claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York will send his proposed amendment to the desk, and it will be read by the Secretary.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has moved to strike out the proviso. If he succeeds in that he does not want to add any amendment to it.

Mr. EVARTS. I shall move afterwards to strike out the whole provision, if I am in order.

Mr. HALE. Move to amend first.

Mr. EVARTS. I do not want to lose any right to strike it out as general legislation. I suppose that making it better does not alter my right to move to strike it out.

Mr. HALE. The Senator can take his choice, of course, in moving the amendment first or moving first to strike out the clause. If the clause is stricken out, he of course does not want to offer any amendment to it.

Mr. EVARTS. Then perhaps, as that is simpler, I shall move to strike out the general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator move to strike out the clause?

Mr. EVARTS. I move to strike out the proviso.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The SECRETARY. Beginning in line 9, on page 5, it is proposed to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That section 3011 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting, after the word "paid," in the seventh line, the following: "Together with costs of suit and interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum."

Mr. EVARTS. I think every Senator will agree that this is a piece of general legislation, whether it is wise and just and equitable legislation, providing that the Government shall pay back to its importers what it had exacted illegally from them with only 3 per cent. interest, whereas when it sues them for their not paying what they owe the United States exacts from them 6 per cent. interest. Whatever Senators may think about that, we shall all agree that this is general legislation, as it seems to me. It is a change of the general laws regarding the payment of interest and the general provisions of law.

Aside from the particular section to which I refer, which is now under consideration, and is to be amended by the proviso which I desire to discard, it really introduces for the first time a rule that there shall be one rate of interest by which the debtors of the Government shall be held in their payments, and another and lower rate for the United States in pari materia concerning the same subject of debt. It is, therefore, plainly a disturbance of the general arrangements which make the law of interest. Wherever interest is recoverable by the Government or recoverable against the Government, it is on the same level of interest.

It is also special legislation concerning this general regulation on the statute-book of the matter of the collection of the revenue.

Mr. HALE. If the proposition covered by the proviso had been in the form of a Senate amendment to the House bill, it would be subject to the point of order suggested by the Senator from New York; but it comes to the Senate as a part of the bill which the House of Representatives passed. While that body has now stringent rules excluding general legislation upon appropriation bills, there is there, as here, no rule, however stringent, that will prevent any measure passing unanimously. This proposition, I believe, passed the other House nem. con. Nobody there invoked the rule. It is before the Senate as a part of the bill, and we can not deal with the question of order. So that question is disposed of in itself. Further than that, the Committee on Appropriations did not think it worth while, as a matter of wisdom, to interfere with this provision which the other House had put on.

The cases where duties have been exacted by the Government, paid by the importer, become the subject of protest and suit, and, in many cases, of judgments against the United States, are already favored cases. The rule generally is that the Government does not pay interest until after judgment. An exception has arisen in this case. Years ago the question was raised and it was passed upon by the Supreme Court, in which it was decided that interest applied after the payment to the Government and before judgment, upon which numerous cases have arisen. Many suits are found upon the dockets of the courts of the southern district of New York to recover sums wrongfully exacted, and interest upon them, and the claimants all the while are favored to this degree, that not only do they get from the Government interest, but they get it at the rate of 6 per cent. whenever the statute of the State in which the duties are exacted provides that rate. So the importers of New York have been getting back their money and 6 per cent. besides up to the date of judgment as well as afterwards. When they get their judgment it is as good as a bond of the Government.

It has been thought that this favored class, who are receiving interest from the Government, which pays interest on its debts when incorporated into a judgment, ought not to receive as much as 6 per cent.; that they ought to be content with 3 per cent. There are many who believe that all this interest ought to be stricken out, and that it should not be computed until the claim is embodied in a judgment like other classes of claims. I do not know but that an amendment will be moved here striking out the interest entirely. It has been suggested to me that such an amendment will be moved, but the other House did not consider it wise to go so far, neither did the Senate Committee on Appropriations, but left it at 3 per cent., which is about as fair a rate and which is as large as the Government is paying now upon any new engagements that it enters into, or on any new issue of bonds, and men can borrow money upon good security, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] suggests to me, at that rate.

Therefore the committee has not thought it wise to interfere with this provision. I hope that the Senator's amendment will not prevail, but that the clause will be left as the House left it, with these men getting 3 per cent., as hardly anybody else does against the Government, and that they will be content with that.

Mr. EVARTS. The Senator from Maine is, I think, inattentive to the ground of the suit and the claim on the part of the merchant. It arises from an illegal exaction enforced by an authority of Government against the importers which extracts from them money that they do not owe. The original suits were at common law and on the direct right of a citizen to sue the collector for extorting from him a rate of duty that the law had not imposed. He was a wrongdoer; he was not executing the law; he was not putting the importer or merchant in the condition of a debtor to the Government; he compelled, by force of his power in office, a payment contrary to law.

There never has been, and I hope there never will be, in the country from which we draw our habits and our laws, or in our own, any impediment that will be thrown in the way of the full recourse of every citizen against oppression, and I hope that no qualification of his indemnity will be adopted as an insidious mode of accomplishing that oppression. Having that right at common law and by common right, the plaintiff in his judgment had a right to pursue the collector out of his own fortune for his having violated the law.

There was no favor asked of this Government in the matter. All that has supervened in the series of legislation has been this: that instead of leaving the collector to this pursuit, even to the point of execution, this right should be recognized as unchanged in quality. Nobody has ventured to say that any impediment should be thrown in the way of any importer or any citizen recovering money that was taken contrary to law. All that the legislation has done has been this: that although the judgment should be allowed, and the right of judgment should proceed upon the same ground, yet there should be certain protections to the collector. It required that there should be prompt suit, that there should be prompt protest, that there should be prompt appeal, and prompt decision by the Government, whether they would stand by the collector or not. Then further, and that is all they undertook in regard to the right of recourse, after that it was provided that though the right was passed upon in this same sense and nature, when the judgment was given against the collector it should not be enforced, but was then accompanied with a provision that it should be paid out of the Treasury.

Now, is it to be said that it is a wise thing that money shall be taken contrary to the statute from a citizen, and if he recovers judgment for it at the distance of three, or six, or nine, or more years, he shall have it without interest? What is that but a Congressional exaction contrary to law in the shape of proper indemnity as to the restoration? Is it, then, any more just, if you can not take away the whole interest, for you to claim that you have restored the money illegally taken when you do not restore it until ten years afterwards? Are you ready to say that by mere power of law, contrary to every regulation of interest provided for collections by the Government, or collections against it where they are are allowed, there shall be not 6 per cent. but in this case only 3 per cent. allowed?

It seems to me that Senators must understand that they are trifling with a direct, a universal, and an impregnable right to see that money is not taken from a citizen contrary to law. Everywhere we are at the mercy of collectors, everywhere the courts do not do justice between the importer and the Government, while they do justice between all other citizens and the public wherever that recourse is given.

Certainly it is quite true that when a measure has been inserted in a deficiency bill which on objection here could not be put in, as contrary to our rules, and which could not have been put on in the other House if it had been objected to there, a Senator can move to strike it out and appeal to the interest and the duty in proper legislation of this body that they will not tolerate general legislation in a deficiency appropriation bill. The present motion is to strike out. If that is not granted—I hope it will be—then I will consider the question of making very clear what I suppose the Treasury Department means to make it, that it shall not apply to accrued claims.

Mr. HOAR. I was inclined, when my attention was first called to this proposition, to think that the Government would have satisfied its duty to the citizen by providing a remedy for the recovery from the Government of the money exacted from him by the collector and a rate of interest for its detention equivalent to that which the Government was itself paying upon its loans directly, or as ascertained by the rate at which a Government bond is sold in the market. But I am satisfied on further reflection that that is an erroneous view, and that the Senator from New York is not only clearly right in his claim, but that he might have gone further and have insisted that the preservation of the present rule, instead of the amendment of the law proposed by the House of Representatives, is essential to the constitutionality of the whole proceeding.

The Constitution of the United States in the fifth article of amendment is express, as Senators well know, that

> No person shall * * * be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

Here is a person who is authorized by the power of the Government itself to seize without any lawful process, without any lawful occasion, without any lawful right, the property of the citizen, unless he shall pay to him a sum of money unlawfully exacted.

If we were to pass a law that in any such case as that which could be described the citizen should have a right to sue the despoiler in court, of course such an act, whether passed by Congress or by any State Legislature, would be held at once to be unconstitutional as depriving the citizen of a remedy in the courts and as indirectly making possible and without legal remedy the seizing of his property without due process of law. It has been held, just as it is held in the case of taking private property for a public use, such as a public building, or anything of that kind, that an ample remedy given by statute against the Government is to be presumed to be ample compensation in the one case or an ample remedy for a wrong in the other case, if it be a wrong.

And therefore I suppose the courts have sustained and would sustain (although that must have been a question of some doubt in the beginning) the law which, after a judgment is obtained against the collector, deprives the citizen of any execution against the private property of the wrongdoer and compels him to accept as a substitute a claim against the Treasury of the United States. But certainly that law could not be supported for a moment if it gave to the citizen, instead of the entire amount of the judgment he has recovered against the collector, 90 or 70, or 50 per cent. only of that judgment. His claim against the Treasury of the United States must be ample and complete and commensurate with his injury, or the constitutional provision is not satisfied.

It seems to me it is equally unconstitutional to provide that the citizen's property may be seized by the collector of the port of New York, and that he shall have not interest for the detention for three, four, or five years while his remedy is pending, or before the act of Congress passes which compensates him, as it would be to say that he should get but 75, or 80, or 90 per cent. of the amount of that judgment when he comes to be paid from the Treasury.

So, then, it is essential to the constitutionality of this whole matter, which the Government has adopted for its convenience, of substituting for a remedy against the collector a claim against the Treasury of the United States, that there shall be a provision for the payment of the principal sum and a sufficient and adequate rate of interest. It is not a sufficient and adequate rate of interest to compensate a citizen for the detention of money for a term of years to pay him the sum which a government of undoubted and unquestioned credit and strength can borrow money for.

I can not borrow money at 3 per cent., the rate which is now proposed to be fixed here, and I suppose there is no private individual in the country that can, as a rule; and therefore, in order to support this legislation at all under the Constitution, there must be a provision which not only provides for the recompense from the Treasury of the sum lost, but of a rate of interest equal to that which the ordinary average citizen in decent credit is obliged to pay to make up to himself money which is detained from him; and of course there can be no better means of ascertaining what that is than to ascertain what is the rate of interest which in each State the State Legislature finds a proper and reasonable sum for making such recompense for detention as between citizen and citizen.

That is the present and existing policy. If, then, you cut down this rate of interest from 6 per cent. to 3, in the case of the citizen of New York whose private property is taken by the collector and turned into the Treasury, you have deprived him of a portion of his constitutional remedy, just as much as if you deducted that difference between 3 per cent. and 6 per cent. from the principal of his claim.

It seems to me, therefore, that the honorable Senator from New York might with entire safety have gone even further than I understood him to go in his argument, and have assailed this proposition as contrary not only to the spirit but to the exact letter of the Constitution.

Mr. EVARTS. The question now is on the motion to strike out. When we come to the 3 per cent. provision I have already intimated that the only protection of that reduction would be a computation for future action.

Mr. HALE. It strikes me that the only fault with the fine reasoning of the Senator from Massachusetts which followed the equally fine reasoning of the Senator from New York is that they invest the subject of interest which attaches to the claim against the Government with the same solemnity and the same definitiveness as the original proposition that the Government shall not take private property without making indemnification.

Mr. HOAR. Now, will my friend allow me to put a question there? Does the Senator doubt that a provision that private property might be taken for public use, its value at the time of taking ascertained, and the money repaid without interest at a distance of four, five, or six years, would be unconstitutional?

Mr. HALE. That question is not raised here.

Mr. HOAR. That is the exact question.

Mr. HALE. That question is not raised here, because the proposition is not to deprive the citizen of some attaching rate of interest from the time when he has been deprived of his property. That proposition is not involved here. Whether I should argue that or not if it came up it is not necessary to assume here now; but to declare that because the Government is bound by the constitutional provision to indemnify the citizen for the property which it has taken carries with it an equal obligation that it must pay the rate of interest that the local statute fixes at the place where the payment has been exacted by the Government is a great deal further than I would go or than I believe lawyers or judges generally would go.

The interest that follows a claim of this kind attaches to the original proposition. That the Government in declaring how the citizen shall seek his remedy, through what courts he shall apply, may not also declare that in its wisdom, that in the judgment of Congress a fair rate of interest that shall attach to that original claim shall be so and so, I do not believe. There is no sanctity about the local statute of New York that fixes 6 per cent., or of California that perhaps fixes 8, or another State that fixes 7, which obliges the Government to pay that as a matter of course because it has taken a man's property; but if there is anywhere any authority lodged in any tribunal to decide what that rate of interest shall be, it must be in Congress.

Suppose that it can not confiscate the citizen's right to interest as an attachment to his claim against the Government for money taken, who shall decide what that rate of interest is? I believe that Congress is the proper authority. It can not perhaps confiscate it entirely, but it is not obliged to say that because the exaction has been made in the port of Boston, therefore there attaches to it the rate of interest prescribed in Massachusetts, or that in California it is the rate prescribed there, or in New Orleans the rate that is prescribed there. Congress must have the power to fix in reason the amount of interest that shall go as an attachment to this claim that the citizen has against it for having taken his property. That is the basis, I take it, on which the other House put in this clause.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose what the Senator from Maine says is true, that the law-making power may fix the rate of interest, but they must fix a reasonable rate. My proposition is that no law-making power can put a rate which is clearly and manifestly below what is the average and proper rate of interest between private citizens.

Mr. HALE. Who shall decide it?

Mr. HOAR. We shall decide it; but nobody doubts that when the House of Representatives propose to us to fix this rate of 3 per cent., instead of 6 as it is now, they are making a rate below that at which private citizens in good credit can borrow money for three or four years as a rule.

Mr. HALE. Any man in New York, on the judgment of the United States in his favor, certified by a court having undoubted jurisdiction, can raise money at 3 per cent. any day upon that judgment.

Mr. EVARTS. On the contrary, in my judgment, according to the experience of the collections by these judgment creditors, they would gladly part with 25 per cent. of their judgments.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I think that this discussion and this provision in this appropriation bill illustrate more strongly than any case I have known the absolute folly of attempting to legislate on most difficult questions of finance and law upon appropriation bills. Here is a bill called an "urgent deficiency bill," that has in it a great multitude of appropriations for debts clearly due, that have been due for months and years without bearing any interest, and yet the House of Representatives felt at liberty to attach a provision here which changes a law of forty years' standing, a law that has been practiced upon, relating to two separate classes of claims against the Government, having no relation to each other. First, this clause deals with claims of importers who, in order to get possession of their goods, deposit more money in the Treasury than is required to pay the duties, so that they may get immediate possession, leaving the question of the precise amount to be liquidated afterwards.

There is no confiscation about that. It is done as a matter of convenience, for the expedition of the transaction, for the convenience of the Government. In those cases no interest is paid by the Government, but as soon as the matter is liquidated the excess is paid over under existing laws; or if there is a controversy about the rate of duty, the collector decides what he thinks is right according to the law, and then the citizen, if dissatisfied, pays the amount and commences his suit for what he alleges to be the erroneous exaction of the collector. When that suit is commenced within the proper time and in the proper way, it may be pending for years, and there are now cases under the loose methods adopted in the city of New York where these suits have been left for years running after they have been brought. Finally, if judgment is rendered in favor of the importer, a judgment for the amount of the duties is rendered, and then, not in pursuance of express provision of law, but in pursuance of universal common law, where the collector has taken more than he ought to have taken, the law presumes that besides the money which the importer deposited over and above the amount found due, he shall have interest on that deposit.

In the one case, therefore, interest is paid, and in the other case interest is not paid; but this provision undertakes to say that in all such cases interest shall be paid at the rate of 3 per cent., besides the costs of suit. One effect of this is to increase the amount of interest that will be paid, because this provision, being an amendment to that section of the Revised Statutes which regulates the importation of goods, would apply to both classes of invoices, both classes of payments into the Treasury; and, if it applies at all, it will apply just as much to interest on the amount that is voluntarily paid by the importer in excess of the duties as upon the amount recovered in judgment.

Then the language is so loosely drawn that no man can tell what is meant by it. Let us look for a moment. The section referred to by this bill provides:

SEC. 3011. Any person who shall have made payment under protest and in order to obtain possession of merchandise imported for him, to any collector, or person acting as collector, of any money as duties, when such amount of duties was not, or was not wholly, authorized by law, may maintain an action in the nature of an action at law, which shall be triable by jury, to ascertain the validity of such demand and payment of duties, and to recover back any excess so paid.

According to the plain language of the law, he can only recover back the excess paid, but as this is a suit against the collector, the courts have uniformly declared that interest followed the claim. If the money was illegally exacted, as is claimed by the importer, then the interest followed the principal, and therefore the courts in New York have in some cases allowed as much interest as principal. Cases have run along for ten or fifteen years, and in some cases where I was required to pay, myself, as Secretary of the Treasury, the interest was in excess of the principal.

There was negligence on the part of the importer in failing to prosecute, probably, or in leaving it to the lawyer to do as he pleased, but in most cases the interest largely accrued. That interest was not authorized by express law, but authorized by the universal principle of justice that, where a debt is withheld, unreasonably, interest follows as a necessary consequence. That judgment is rendered not under express law, but upon the universal law applicable alike to the Government and to the individual.

Now, the provision comes in and proposes that in all this class of cases where there is a dispute arising as to the amount that should have been paid interest shall be allowed at 3 per cent.

The section I have read is to be amended by inserting, after the word "paid," in the seventh line, the following: "Together with the costs and interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum."

When does the interest commence? Is it to accrue after judgment? If it only means interest after judgment rendered, it would be one thing. When shall the interest commence?

Mr. HALE. From the date of payment.

Mr. SHERMAN. That would enormously swell the amount of interest to be paid, because in the great mass of these cases there is no interest now paid by the Government. There is no interest paid by the Government in any case except where excessive duties are collected by the collector. To change the existing law now in this way would cover a multitude of cases and thus deprive a man of the command of his property without law.

For instance, taking the doctrine stated by the Senator that this should go back to the time when the money was paid into the hands of the Government, suppose now, under the existing law, the man is entitled to 6 per cent.; suppose the amount of principal was $1,000 and the interest $500 now accrued, have we a right to say that that interest, which has accrued for many years, shall not be paid at the rate of 6 per cent. when the law requires it to be so paid? That would be unjust, that would be confiscation, a deprivation of a man's property actually accrued, because another section of the law provides expressly that on all judgments rendered against the United States in circuit and district courts interest shall accrue at the rate current in the State where the judgment was rendered. That is in a previous section of the Revised Statutes. That section ought to be referred to in case this legislation is passed.

Section 966 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the judiciary, provides that—

Interest shall be allowed on all judgments in civil causes.

And this is a civil cause. Mr. President, what I protest against is this kind of legislation on an appropriation bill, where we can not amend it; where we can not distinguish between different kinds of claims—those bearing interest and those not bearing interest. It seems to me, therefore, that the Committee on Appropriations ought to say to the House of Representatives, "This is a matter that properly ought to be considered by the Finance or the Judiciary Committee; we can not consider it; we can not see exactly the effect and operation of this clause, and it therefore ought to be omitted from this bill."

I have a long argument here by a very respectable gentleman in New York, known to most of the Senators, I suppose, in which he speaks of the hardships and difficulties that would accrue out of the passage of this provision. Those he represents only knew of it by seeing it in the newspapers by accident. Now, their attention is suddenly called to it, their interests are affected, and their whole manner of doing business is to be changed or affected by a hasty provision in what is called an "urgent deficiency bill."

Notwithstanding my familiarity with these laws, I can not understand the effect and application of this provision. I can not see to what extent it may be applied. I can see that honest men might contend for extending interest back to the origin of the claim, as the Senator from Maine does, or back only to the date of the judgment. Is it applicable to old judgments, or only to those which may be rendered hereafter? Is it applicable to old claims which have been running along previously, or only to new claims which may arise after this date? All these are important questions that ought to be defined by legislation.

I believe that a law should be carefully framed declaring as to all judgments rendered against a collector that they should be promptly presented and paid; but there is now authority of law without any special appropriation, a general law to refund excessive duties. These claims ought to be promptly presented and they should be promptly paid upon the judgment being rendered, and there ought to be some provision made by which these cases should not be lingering for year after year; there ought to be some provision that unless they are prosecuted duly and even with extraordinary haste they should draw no interest whatever and no interest should be allowed by the court. That provision ought clearly to be adopted. For instance, if men lay quietly upon a claim thus accruing year after year, the law ought to declare that unless the claim is prosecuted with due diligence no interest should be allowed by the court in pronouncing the judgment. That provision surely ought to be added.

Mr. HALE. Then the Senator admits that the law-making power may deal with the question of interest and regulate it?

Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly. Nobody denies that. But the question is this: You are here dealing with it in a way that is entirely insufficient and utterly illogical. Congress may say that the courts of the United States shall allow no interest against the Government of the United States or against its officers when acting in the discharge of their duty. Congress may say that, but it would not be right for them to say it, because Congress has neglected the prompt discharge of its duty, and Congress ought not to impose a hardship on the citizen because it neglects to make the necessary appropriations.

I intend, if I have the opportunity, before this bill closes to offer to the Senate—whether it is in order or not I can not say—a provision that will give interest to those persons who had claims adjudicated in their favor at the last session of Congress, and who have been deprived of their interest, and the money withheld from them with an overflowing Treasury, because there was not sufficient diligence in Congress to pass the necessary appropriation. I do not blame the Senate for it; because, according to the statement made here yesterday, this deficiency bill was not sent here until a few days before the end of the session, when it was manifestly impossible for the Senate to act upon the bill properly. Therefore, the fault rests somewhere else; and yet it is a fault for which the claimants ought not to suffer.

There are hundreds of claims in this bill; I know nothing about their merits; but I assume that they are good claims. They have been found in some cases by tribunals like the Court of Claims, they have been passed upon in some cases by heads of Departments; in other cases by different kinds of tribunals authorized to pass upon them; and the claimants ought to have interest from the time their claims were adjudicated. A provision of that kind I should cheerfully vote for, and I should be willing also, where there was unreasonable delay and want of diligence on the part of the creditor, to deny all interest or reduce the rate of interest to 3 or even less than 3 per cent.

It is manifest, however, that this provision ought not to be kept here. It is totally ill-shaped, ill-made up, put in the wrong place, applicable not to the section of the Revised Statutes that is recited in the clause, but applicable to another section, a different law. I hope, therefore, that the committee will allow this clause to be stricken out and that they will stand by that action until some practical legislation on this subject can be made.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with the statement made by the Senator from Ohio that it is an unwise thing to legislate on matters of importance upon an appropriation bill, and especially unwise to do so on a bill that requires some haste in its passage; but I can not agree with him as respects this particular amendment.

In the first place, I see no difficulty in construing the clause, as the Senator does. Having examined the clause with some care, I see that it only applies to existing conditions. It does not provide for interest in any case where interest is not allowed now; it only provides that where interest is now allowed and paid by the Government, the rate shall be 3 per cent. instead of 6 per cent.

This is not a new question in the Senate, in the House of Representatives, in our committee-rooms, or with Secretaries of the Treasury. Away back, as the Senator from Maine said awhile ago, I think as far as 1867, it was decided that in all cases where an importer had paid more money into the Treasury than the collector was entitled to exact from him it was a proper thing for the jury to allow interest from the time of such exaction, and I think since that time all Secretaries of the Treasury have in these cases of imported goods paid interest in New York, where the chief amount of customs duties is collected, upon every importation, at the rate of 6 per cent., where in the particular case, or in a similar case, the court had decided that the duty had been illegally exacted. That has been the rule in the courts for many years, and it has been the rule until, I think, it has grown to be an evil which requires the interposition of Congress for its correction.

The Senator from Ohio said truly that in some cases which came under his personal knowledge he was obliged to pay a greater sum in the way of interest than the principal sum deposited. Secretary Manning in his report—and, by the way, Secretary Manning drew this provision, and it was drawn with the utmost care and with the most careful supervision in the Treasury Department—intended to meet this evil. In a New York case a judgment was rendered a little over a year ago where the principal sum was $44,000 and the interest $84,000.

Mr. CHACE. That showed simply that the claimant was unjustly kept out of the claim for a long time.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope gentlemen will not get excited until I go over this question. I do not intend to criticise the reasons for that, but it may have been the fault of the district attorney in the city of New York; it may have been the fault of the importer, who probably was a foreigner and could get money at 2 or 3 per cent., and was quite well content with loaning the Government of the United States money at the rate of 6 per cent. I do not care to discuss the details of that case.

These cases have gone on until the present Secretary of the Treasury informs us in his annual report that some corrective should be applied. I hope that on such a question we shall all give credence to his statements. He has stated the situation of these suits; he says that the suits now pending in the district court for the southern district of New York will not be decided during this generation. I ask Senators whether they believe that is a wise condition of things? I agree with the Senator from Ohio that this anomalous position of things ought not to continue, and that some method should be provided to cure it. I agree with him also that this is in some respects an imperfect cure.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator inform the Senate, if he is himself informed, how soon a citizen can enter a suit, and, prosecuting it with diligence, in the city of New York, reach a judgment in a case? How many years will it take?

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator from Massachusetts has asked me a question which the legislation of Congress is required to answer. Of course the Senator from New York can answer the question much better than I can; but I do not believe that if a man was to commence his suit against the Government of the United States to-day in the city of New York and take his chances of trial upon that docket, having the cases called in their order and tried in their order, he demanding a jury, he could secure a jury trial in the circuit court in the city of New York short of two or three years.

Mr. HOAR. Now let me ask another question.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me get through with the first answer.

After he has secured his jury trial the Government of the United States, through its district attorney, may or may not be satisfied that twelve men gathered from the city of New York, I will not say from whence, are better able to judge as to whether an article is cotton or woolen, or whether it is silk or woolen, or both, than is an expert on the part of the Government who has decided with reference to this question.

The Government being thus dissatisfied may appeal that case to the Supreme Court of the United States, where it hangs up necessarily for four or five years more. That is the situation in every case, and it is the situation in the southern district of New York to-day.

But that is not the only situation. Here is a large class of importations resting upon a particular clause in the statute, as, for example, steel blooms coming in at one rate of duty and billets of steel coming in at another. The expert appraiser in New York decides that on a particular importation a merchant is required to pay the higher duty. The importer is not satisfied with that and he appeals.

In the mean time the billets of steel, or blooms of steel, or what not, pass into consumption, and either the men who made them on the other side have sold them at a lower rate in order to meet the competition here, or somebody else other than the man who brought them in as an importer pays the charges upon them. Every other importer who brings in that class of goods does not begin suit. He files, under section 2931, alluded to in this clause, his protest and he appeals.

He does not commence suit as a matter of fact, because he knows perfectly well the suit will not be tried, and because there is an understanding that the first suit begun shall be a test suit. There may be a thousand suits brought upon any one of these items of importation. There were pending in New York, as I am told, twenty-five hundred cases—that is, suits, protests, and appeals—depending upon the decision of the Supreme Court in what are known as the carton cases, and those carton cases were decided in favor of what is called the importers' view, and in every one of them, where the protest and appeal have been entered, the Government of the United States pays interest from the day of the exaction, pays it under existing law and under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Now, the Senator having answered my first question, that for three or four years the man doing his best to get his due will not get it in the city of New York, and that for four or five years more, making from six to eight or nine years in all, he will not get it if the Government appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States, saying nothing now about a new trial being ordered in New York, does the Senator think it just that the United States, having exacted that money from the man illegally and received it into its Treasury, should pay him only half interest for it?

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer the Senator's question by asking him another. Does he think that in every case the Government of the United States should pay that rate of interest which the importer is compelled to pay, and no more and no less?

Mr. HOAR. I think that the United States should pay that rate of interest which in the community where the exaction is made is the current rate of interest paid by men in good credit. If 6 per cent. is too much, take 5, but 3 is manifestly, by the common experience of all mankind, too little.

The Senator will bear in mind that this is not the case of a man who lends money to the Government; it is not a man who made a contract with the Government; it is the case of a man whose legal remedy against the wrongdoer, which would give him the 6 per cent., the Government has taken away.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I understand all that phraseology perfectly well, and I will say that in my judgment there can be many cases put wherein there is injustice to the Government. Take this very bill; here are men in this bill who by a law of 1861 were entitled to receive bounty for volunteering in the service of their country as soldiers of the Republic, and they have stood by with that statute on the statute-books for a quarter of a century, and finally at the end of a quarter of a century they have been enabled to secure from the accounting officers of the Treasury that justice meted out to them, and yet under the accepted condition of all legislation and precedents as respects that class of claims, no interest at all has been allowed or will be allowed.

My answer to the Senator from Massachusetts is this: Here we put upon our statute-books certain laws respecting the importation of foreign merchandise. We do it, first, for the purpose of securing revenue, and next we do it for the purpose of enabling our own manufacturers to successfully compete with those people who live abroad in the production of these things. Under those laws the system has grown up which now exists as respects the revenue. It has so turned out that nine-tenths, or certainly three-quarters, of all the importations of imported goods that come within the provisions of the statutes which we are now considering are imported by men who do not live in this country at all, and who manufacture their goods in France, in Belgium, in Germany, at wages one-half the wages paid here; and then they import them through their own agents, get them through the custom-house at the lowest possible point, and if the appraiser differs from them they resort to legal methods which the law gives them to make a protest and appeal and go to the Supreme Court of the United States, and finally recover judgment against the United States, possibly for a misconstruction of the statute, and recover 6 per cent. interest against this Government when they are only paying 2 per cent. interest upon all their plant where these goods are manufactured. I say that it is the duty of this Government to stand in between and see that this class of men are not protected to a greater degree than other people are protected in this country.

I agree thoroughly with the Senator from New York that this provision should not be retroactive. It is not so now, as the Secretary of the Treasury decides. I would not have it apply to an existing condition of things.

Mr. EVARTS. Then the Senator does not object to my amendment, which makes that certain.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not, because I say what is not certain in the eyes of the Senators ought to be made certain, and the Secretary of the Treasury so states.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator quotes the Secretary of the Treasury. If there is any information from him we ought to have it before us. Besides that, we do not know who the Secretary is to be that will pass upon this provision.

Mr. ALLISON. I have not stated that I knew, as far as I am concerned, and I agree we should make perfectly certain this statute. I am only saying what we ought to do in the future. I have been a member of a committee that has undertaken in some respects to amend these laws. We have found these difficulties.

I have only stated a portion of them, because I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate in discussing them; but we find the method of importation in the city of New York and the method of undervaluation there to be one of the crying existing evils in our country, and so great is this evil that importations of large classes of goods are transferred from the regular people who have purchased them to people who act merely as the agents of manufacturers in other countries, and who come here and contest at every inch our importation laws as respects the construction of those statutes with regard to rates of duty.

There is now lying upon our tables a bill proposing a new method of treating the subject of appraisements and valuations, and one section of that bill provides that no interest at all shall be allowed. That may be a radical and extreme remedy, but it is a remedy agreed upon unanimously by the Committee on Finance, and I was instructed to report that bill. I merely mention this for the purpose of showing that here is an evil, and, although this is only a partial correction of it, I think it is in the right direction.

I thoroughly agree with Senators that we ought not to touch any existing claim; we should make it apply to all future importations. I would even go to that extent, so that in no sense would it do an injustice to any man who has hitherto made importations of goods.

I am not troubled about the constitutional question, because I think we can, if we choose, impose upon people who import goods hereafter such fair limitations and conditions as we see fit to impose by law; and therefore it seems to me that although this is a provision on an appropriation bill, which I regret, it is a provision which has received great consideration and the Committee on Appropriations did not see its way clear to strike it out.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, probably I have naturally more conversance with proceedings in litigation in New York on these topics than any one else now in the Senate, and I desire to have it understood that all imputations upon the merchants of New York in regard to their pursuing their rights at law on a common footing with all that are protected by law on all subjects, rest upon no distinction in their conduct, no distinction in their interest, no distinction in their rights, than those that belong to every American or every foreigner entitled under our laws in asserting his rights.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment? Does he intend to say that I attributed to the merchants of New York any other or different character from merchants in other localities?

Mr. EVARTS. No. Whatever you have said about anybody else outside of New York would, no doubt, have been in the same sense in which you alluded to New York; but you spoke only of the merchants in New York and of the foreigners and of the system of our importations and of certain mischiefs that grow out of our system of importations. About that the Senator is right. There are imperfect regulations. There are also very imperfect administrations, in my judgment, of the exactions of duty in the very matter about which we are talking.

But the merchants there find themselves menaced by a purely arbitrary proposition of law inserted in an urgency deficiency bill, and it is treated as if it was a new regulation of some item or detail of customs regulations. It strikes at the root of the matter whether a citizen is to be indemnified when his rights are invaded contrary to law, by being told that whereas in civil rights of contract in the absence of any express agreement about interest, but mere default giving a right to recover it, there is to be a full measure according to the vicinity in which the right is to be pursued, but when the attitude is not of contract between the merchant and the United States, but from the beginning to the end the United States is a tort-feasor, and he is only asking for indemnity under law for what has been done against him, contrary to the law, he shall have no interest. How can merchants, how can business men, how can honest men believe in this thrust at a particular right of theirs which exists by common law and common right against invasion contrary to law?

Senators have spoken of delays. Does any Senator believe that any plaintiff would have a disposition to delay a suit in order that his penalty might be postponed? We are told of a case of $44,000 of illegal exaction, clearly against the law, by this Government against the person from whom it exacted his substance. The Government exacted from him his substance, and now he can not get a penny out of the Treasury, though he has been pursuing it long in the courts we have opened to him in common with all other injured persons, until the delay, measured step by step by legal, regular interest, has cost him more than the original exaction—$84,000 of delay on $44,000 of original illegal exaction! How can you make an appeal in a Senate or in a House of Representatives to favor, to ameliorate, to propitiate such injustice as this?

There is a multitude of cases arising under the same clause because of the multitude of importers and of importations by the same importers, and this Government has required with precision and accuracy a protest accompanying every importation. Although the question has been raised, although the question has been agitated, although the courts have possession of it, the Government requires an absolute act of protest and the preservation of the evidence, and all the means of prosecuting the suit are to be preserved, and then when the suit is brought, does the Treasury wish that all those who have claims resting upon the same propositions of law and of fact shall add costs to their suits?

They have a right to sue and they and the lawyers have a right to advocate their cause; but as a matter of fact the great mass of the importers keep their position of right until they find that the statute of limitations is running against them. Is it a fault that they did not sue at the beginning instead of waiting until they are about to lose their right; and then their long delay of six years in beginning a suit is to be a saving of the Government and a loss to the importer? Then he commences his suit and he lets it lie, and he does not accumulate costs. Then when the time comes—and I speak now with observations as a lawyer, a good many years ago to be sure—that the plaintiffs must commence their suits, are they not to suppose that the Government will treat all alike?

When the point is determined in law, if men have not preserved their right by commencing suit within six years, are they to be deprived of their rights by this country because they had not aggregated costs by earlier suits?

There are people in this country besides members of the Government. There is not a merchant and there is not a business man in the city of New York that does not know that he has not exceeded his legal rights in any particular in the respects here spoken of.

And then it seems that when the courts provided by this Government for our citizens involve delays in the courts of first instance for two, or three, or four, or five years, that is a reason for allowing less interest be paid to the suitor! And then when four years more are needed to finally dispose of these questions unless they are accelerated, as they generally may be on the motion of the Attorney-General, that delay is heaped up as an objection to claims made by this description of suitors and this description of our citizens. For myself, I would as rapidly as I could secure the result by legislation by paying out every dishonest dollar left in the Treasury due to a citizen or resident of the United States.

I find now that an argument for this mischief is drawn out of the fact that we perpetuate injustice and neglect to other people, and instead of arguing one justice done here towards justice to be done to others, the argument is, "Do not do justice here, because I can point you to other and greater instances in which injustice has been done."

Mr. President, it is a pity that the importers should be kept out of their money and of their interest. It is a pity that aggregation of demands on the Treasury should increase in this class. There was one rule in the free country from which we came; the English exchequer always had this rule: that when there was a doubt as to an exaction by the Government from a subject the doubt was to be given for the smaller exaction and not the larger. But now it seems, under such exigencies, or under such influences, or under such policies as have governed us, we solve the doubt in favor of the larger sum and drive the citizens to pursue us through the courts, and all this litigation has grown out of that condition of exaction; whereas if the doubt is by authoritative action solved for the lesser sum, then the Government can raise the question by its suit against the importer for the larger sum, and the question of interest will be turned over on the importer with regard to any money that may be recovered against him.

The subject-matter, the situation, the antagonism between the Government and the importer is to decide whether the suit should be brought by the Government for what he refused to pay or whether the suitor against the Government seeks to recover what he has paid. Is there a rule of interest one way and a rule of justice the other way? Is that so? It seems to me that at least the Senate should see to it that it will not commit itself to any injustice of this kind.

On the principle of general legislation, so far as I have heard from the Senator from Iowa and our friend the Senator from Maine, who has charge of this bill, not one voice has been raised here in defense of this as a proper mode of legislating through a deficiency bill.

A very great interest is felt in this matter, not merely by the gentlemen who have these suits and these claims, but the whole business and mercantile community in the city of New York are aroused on this subject. The principle in the future touches them, that by mere power of Government, against law, money can be taken from them under these importations, and they reduced to the reception of 3 per cent. interest in the future, when the Government can recover against them 6 per cent.

And now a word about this notion of a claim against the Government resting in suit being equal to a bond already in hand. Why, Mr. President, it has been one of the mischiefs of this litigation that the claimants have before them finally as a paymaster nobody but the United States, dependent on appropriations, dependent on the will of the United States, and the value of the suits against collectors (whose property itself could be made subject to prompt payment of a judgment but for your legislation) is substituted by the magnificent promise of the United States money. One of the mischiefs, I am frank to say, is that the claimants in that attitude so little regarded this as money in hand, in the sense of the United States being a good paymaster, that large obligations have been made to the profession and sacrifices have been incurred by sales of claims. That is a condition which is undesirable; nevertheless it grows out of one single thing, that the United States is the paymaster, and it is not a good one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" appear to have it.

Mr. HALE called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The clause ought to come out as mere matter of legislative provision.

Mr. EVARTS. The motion is to strike it out on that ground.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the amendment be read again.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, beginning in line 9, it is proposed to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That section 3011 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting, after the word "paid," in the seventh line, the following: "Together with costs of suit and interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall vote to strike this out on the ground (without going into the question of what provision we ought to make in the future by a law adequate to that purpose) that if this thing were proposed by the Committee on Appropriations in our own body as an amendment to this bill it would not be in order, and would not be in order upon just principles that an appropriation bill ought to contain appropriations to carry out existing law and not legislation. But the House of Representatives has sent it to us and the only way we can get it out is by an amendment. We can not get it out on a point of order. The House has sent us this provision making an important and radical change in existing laws, concerning the future as well as the past, and it is not the right thing, as our rules provide and as we all know the truth is and ought to be, to undertake to legislate in this way in appropriation bills.

When the question comes up on the bill reported by the Senator from Iowa, from the Committee on Finance, embracing this with many other subjects, we shall be enabled then to consider upon its merits, and disembarrassed from any other consideration, what provision ought to be made in the future for rapidly adjusting cases of this character.

I should hope, therefore, that the Senate, following our own principles that bind us in respect to anything we should put in, would strike this legislation out.

Mr. COCKRELL. What change does it make in existing law?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It strikes down the right of the person who sues to recover interest at the rate of 6 per cent., or the rate in the State, whatever it is (in New York 7, in Vermont 6), to 3 per cent. It is a permanent and regular change in existing law, which nobody will pretend would be in order if any member of the Senate or any committee of the Senate had proposed it. Therefore it has no place in this bill. I waive all discussion of how the law ought to be. It has no business here at all.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the amendment reduces the rate of interest that the Government now is paying to the New York importer who has paid his money over and gets it back, from 6 per cent. to 3 per cent. That is all there is of it. The Senate is to pass on the question whether the Government hereafter shall pay to these importers 6 per cent. or 3 per cent. The Committee on Appropriations think 3 per cent. is enough.

Mr. HARRIS. May I inquire of the Senator from Maine what the rule is under this section of the Revised Statutes, what the practice is, or the construction of that statute as to the time at which the interest begins?

Mr. HALE. There is no controversy about it. The interest begins at the time when the money is paid.

Mr. HARRIS. Then this provision simply reduces the rate of interest from 6 per cent. to 3, or from the rate of interest in the State?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir; nearly all these cases occur in New York where the rate is 6 per cent., and it is a question of paying hereafter for new cases 6 per cent. or 3 per cent. The committee recommend 3 per cent.

Mr. CALL. This is not a case of the taking of private property for public use without due process of law or just compensation. It is the case of the execution of the law by an executive officer charged with a particular duty. In no sense can it be held to be analogous to the case of a seizure or taking and using of private property for public use. But the question does occur how far is it just that a man whose property is taken shall be compensated fully and entirely for it? It is a principle of universal law that in the redress of wrongs it is just to place the party wronged in the position where he was when the wrong was committed. It is true that this is impracticable in the ordinary exercise of jurisprudence, but it is the end sought to be obtained, and it is the just end.

I do not agree with my learned friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, as to the ground upon which he bases this provision of the bill. The foreigner who comes here under the invitation of our laws has all the rights of an American citizen. Nay, he has more rights to the full and just interpretation of the laws in his behalf than our own people. He has the right, not only under our laws, but also under the comity of nations. There is no wrong in being an importer; and, being here under the protection of our laws with his property here, he surely has a right to full compensation. This is equally true in respect to our own citizens, and the fact that a citizen is a New York importer does not deprive him of this right. Many of our most worthy and distinguished citizens are New York importers.

Now, what is the measure of damages which the law would provide if there were a law? If there was a law providing that damages should go to the extent that restitution should be made to him who was injured by an officer transgressing his duty or committing an error, what is the measure of damages that should be paid to him? It is fixed by universal consent. It is the rate of interest which prevails and the measure of damages which prevails at the place where the wrong is done, which is usually estimated in the form of interest. If you do not give him this measure of damages, you have no rule by which to estimate it. This measure of damages is the amount the Government has wrongfully taken from him and the value of the loss of the use of this amount. If you do not give him this sum which you have deprived him of, you may just as well say you will allow his property to be taken from him forcibly and without law, and you will give him back only a half, or a quarter, or none of it. This is the argument on which you propose in this bill to give him 3 per cent.

It is no answer to this proposition to say that the tribunals appointed by the Government for ascertaining the facts of the case are inefficient, that they delay, that they cause these wrongs to stand unredressed for years or for generations. The honorable chairman of the committee should provide a law in his capacity as a Senator here which would expedite the decision of these cases. This is the remedy for the delay which the Government causes. It is a disgrace to American jurisprudence, it is a disgrace to American legislation and to this body that honest creditors of the Government, whose property has been taken without their consent, should for years and years be left without redress by our own inadequate legislation and the inefficient courts, which our own negligence and inattention permit. We are sent here and entrusted with power by the people to prevent the occurrence of such delays and wrongs.

Mr. President, if it were practicable to provide some general legislation here upon this subject, there is no subject more important than the correction of that condition of legislation which permits widows and orphans and worthy and honest citizens engaged in legitimate business under the invitation of our laws to become paupers and live in poverty their lives through because the Government officers have taken their property or money and they can not obtain it for the want of simple justice and of proper, careful, and intelligent legislation here.

There is no question that under the protection of our laws the importer, if he be a foreigner, without regard to the question of protection, is entitled to the full measure of damages which prevails between citizens at the place where the wrong is done. If a citizen, there can be no reason why the Government should do him wrong, and deprive him of the value of the use of his property because some officer of the customs has mistaken the law. If I had not been here so long and known of so many cases where a reputation for economy has been made at the expense of honest creditors, I should be surprised at a case which is sought to be defended on the ground that the man whose money has been taken and held unlawfully by the Government may possibly have borrowed it at 2 or 3 per cent., and because he was an importer—a New York importer. All men have a right to justice and to a speedy redress of wrongs, and our business is to see that they get both.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine calls for the yeas and nays on this question.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to say a word in consequence of the last remark of the Senator from Maine, in which he said that the question on which we are to vote is simply whether we wish to reduce the rate of interest on these judgments from 6 per cent. to 3 per cent. I do not propose to vote on that question at this time if I can help it. I shall vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, because this subject is forced upon an appropriation bill, but I shall not vote to take up a subject of this importance upon a bill where the Senate have decided that they will not take up so important a subject as the completion of ships for the Navy of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are the yeas and nays desired by one-fifth of the Senators present?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when the name of Mr. ALDRICH was called). My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], who is absent. If the Senator from Kentucky were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GIBSON. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. EVARTS (after having voted in the affirmative). On the general topic which divides the two sides of the Senate I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and I have noticed since I voted that he is not on the floor. I have asked his colleague whether I should count myself within that division of parties, and I desire to conform to what is the opinion over there. I have no desire to vote if I shall seem to trench on the pair by so doing.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not a party question.

Mr. EVARTS. I have spoken to the Senator's colleague and he has expressed the opinion that I should not withhold my vote.

Mr. PUGH. I know nothing whatever as to how my colleague would vote on this question. I can only state that I do not regard it as a party vote, and if the pair only extends to such questions I have no doubt the Senator can vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York desire his vote to stand?

Mr. EVARTS. I adhere to my vote unless I hear something to the contrary from the other side.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—24.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EVARTS. I now move an amendment in order to make it certain that this clause is not retroactive upon any accrued interest. At the end of line 14, page 5, I move to add:

But this amendment shall not affect existing suits or demands.

Mr. HALE. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to submit an amendment which I believe will do substantial justice. I move to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. —. That on each and every item by which money is appropriated to any individual or individuals named in the foregoing sections of this bill there shall be paid to the several respective payees therein named interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum from the 4th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1887, to the date of the passage of this bill, and the amount of said interest is hereby appropriated, payable out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, reluctantly, respecting the rule as to legislation on appropriation bills, I make the point of order that that is general legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I gave notice of the amendment, and submitted it to the Committee on Appropriations. It is an additional item of appropriation. I feel that in regard to those claims the great body of them are judgments of the Court of Claims; claims in favor of individuals where judgments have practically been pronounced by the Court of Claims, and in other cases by tribunals and Departments authorized to adjudicate cases of that kind; and they have been reported to Congress merely for an appropriation. Congress having failed for one year to make the appropriation, it is but just that these people should have interest at the rate of 4 per cent.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think this amendment is subject to a point of order. It is a mere question of adding to these several appropriations a specific sum. We certainly have a right to do that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the amendment reported from any committee?

Mr. ALLISON. It was sent to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not enough.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not see why we can not increase these items if we please. I do not express at this time any opinion of the merits of the question; but having had an elaborate debate on the general question of interest, I should like to hear this discussed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the opinion of the Chair that the amendment is not in order under the rule; but the Chair will avail himself of the right under the rules to submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Let the rule to which the Chair refers be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Read the whole of the appropriation rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

RULE XVI.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

1. All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce; and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

2. All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and when actually proposed to the bill, no amendment proposing to increase the amount stated in such amendment shall be received; in like manner amendments proposing new items of appropriation to river and harbor bills shall, before being considered, be referred to the Committee on Commerce; also amendments to bills establishing post-roads, shall, before being considered, be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

3. No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate; and any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. On hearing the rule read I have no doubt the point of order is well taken, if it is insisted upon, although I should hope equity would be applied in this case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I insist upon the point simply to illustrate to the Senate the evil of our taking from the House changes in the law and additions to appropriation bills that we can not make ourselves; and I must stick to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HARRIS. I gave notice of a proposed amendment some days ago, and indeed offered the amendment, and referred it to the Committee on Appropriations. I now offer the amendment, which is on page 26, after line 14, under "Judicial," to insert the following:

Fees of jurors: For fees of jurors, United States courts, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1888, $150,000.

Fees of witnesses: For fees of witnesses, United States courts, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1888, $300,000.

Pay of bailiffs, and so forth: For pay of bailiffs and criers, United States courts, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1888, $75,000.

These are deficiencies for the current year estimated for. The only reason why I move it as an amendment to this particular bill is the fact that there is a court now in session in the western district of Tennessee without a dollar with which to pay witnesses, jurors, bailiffs, or any other of the expenses of the tribunal, and I shall be glad if this appropriation can be made in this bill, so that that embarrassment may be removed. That is all I desire to say, and I do not intend to detain the Senate with the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not insist upon this amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I should be very glad to have the appropriation made.

Mr. HALE. The appropriations in it are for the next year, and such appropriations have always been put upon a regular appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. BLAIR and Mr. HALE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I was going to move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to say a word. I desire to give notice to the Senate that to-morrow morning, immediately after the conclusion of the morning business, I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the school bill. I wish to remind the Senate that that bill has had the right of way since before the holiday adjournment and it has not received consideration for more than one-sixth of the time to which it was entitled. I hope the Senate will be disposed to push it through hereafter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Maine to yield to a motion for a short executive session.

Mr. HALE. Unless there is some special reason that the Senator has I should not like to do that. It is very late.

Mr. HARRIS. The only reason is to have some matters referred to the appropriate committees.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting the motion, the Chair will lay before the Senate business from the House of Representatives for reference.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 26, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 16, 1888.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1886–'87, there be printed 6,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 12,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 25,000 copies for distribution by the Commissioner.

The committee having considered the concurrent resolution of the House, report the same with the recommendation that it pass. The estimated cost of printing the same is $20,371. The approximate cost of the amount of printing previously estimated upon for Congress within the present fiscal year is $531,099.20.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual number of this report that has been printed heretofore, and I presume there will be no objection to the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF HEALTH OFFICER OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to present another report from the Committee on Printing—a resolution to print the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MCADOO. I make the point of order that this is not a privileged report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not understand it to be a privileged matter; but this is the usual resolution on this subject, and I think when the gentleman comes to consider the question he will not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Tennessee to present this as a privileged report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not.

Mr. MCADOO. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 65) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia, submitted a report; which was read, as follows:

The committee have considered the resolution of the House No. 65, being a joint resolution to print 2,500 copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia for the past year, and report as a substitute for said joint resolution a concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed by the Public Printer 2,500 copies of the annual report of the health officer of the District of Columbia; 100 for the use of the Senate, 250 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,150 for the use of the said health officer.

The estimated cost of printing same is $833.50. The approximate cost of the amount of printing previously estimated upon for Congress within the present fiscal year is $566,419.50. The committee recommend that the joint resolution do lie on the table.

The concurrent resolution reported by the Committee on Printing was adopted.

NEW YORK INDIAN LANDS, KANSAS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of committees for reports has been concluded, and bills will now be taken up under the rule for consideration.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Indian Affairs I call up for consideration at this time a bill (H. R. 1406) to provide for the selling of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas, which has been reported with an amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That those persons, being heads of families or single persons over twenty-one years of age, who have made settlement and improvement upon, and are bona fide claimants and occupants of, either in person or by tenant, the lands in Kansas which were allotted to certain New York Indians, and for which certificates of allotment, dated the 14th day of September, 1860, for 320 acres of land each, were issued to thirty-two of said Indians, shall be, and hereby are, authorized and permitted to enter and purchase at the proper land office, at any time within one year from the passage of this act, said lands so occupied by them, in tracts not exceeding 160 acres, according to the Government surveys, at $1.25 per acre, payment to be made in cash at time of purchase; and the moneys arising from such sales shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, in trust for and to be paid to said Indians, respectively, to whom said certificates were issued, or to their heirs, upon satisfactory proof of their identity to the Secretary of the Interior, at any time within five years from the passage of this act; and in case such proof is not made within the time specified, then the proceeds of such sale, or so much thereof as shall not have been paid under the provisions of this act, shall become a part of the public moneys of the United States.

SEC. 2. That any lands not entered by such settlers at the expiration of twelve months from the passage of this act shall be offered at public sale, in the usual manner, at not less than $3 per acre, notice of said sale to be given by public advertisement of not less than thirty days; and any tract or tracts not then sold shall be thereafter subject to private entry at $3 per acre.

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

Lines 15 and 16, first section, strike out "one" and insert "two," and strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifty."

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been before the Committee on Indian Affairs both in the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses. It received as thorough investigation at that time and during the present Congress as it was possible to give it. The only question which I understand has been debated, or, in other words, the only question about which there has been any difference, is in regard to the amount the settlers should pay for securing title to these lands. The original rates of other settlers similarly situated was one dollar and a quarter per acre; and a great many persons thought that was all these settlers should pay, as the history of this case shows conclusively that these settlers went on these lands in good faith and they were allotted to these Indians. When it was discovered that thirty-odd Indians were entitled to allotments the commissioners appointed to make these allotments saw proper to allow the Indians to make selection of these lands. They did not take possession of them at the time, and they have never been in possession of them. The title of the land has remained in this condition ever since. It is manifest to the committee that it is impossible to place these Indians in possession, because they can not be found, and the only way which their legal representatives can get any benefit is in the way here provided, that the land shall be sold and the money distributed to these Indians, if they shall be discovered, or to their legal representatives.

The price fixed below which these lands shall not be sold is $2.50 per acre. Under the circumstances the settlers upon these lands occupied them without paying taxes, and yet, as there has been a cloud over their titles, perhaps the detriment which they have suffered balances the amount which they were saved in the payment of taxes.

I now yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] who has charge of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, members will remember that this is the bill called to the attention of the House on yesterday. I think there was some misunderstanding then as to its character. As I then stated there were originally in this tract of land 1,824,000 acres. The Government in 1838, by treaty with the New York Indians, some of whom were in the State of New York and some in the State of Wisconsin, provided that these Indians might remove west of the Mississippi River and occupy this reservation. They were given five years in which to do that, but few availed themselves of the benefits accruing to them under the treaty, and hence never occupied these lands. In 1858 the then Secretary of the Interior decided, as these lands had not been occupied by these Indians, they were public lands, and restored them to the public domain. After this decision by the Secretary of the Interior representations were made to him that a few Indians had gone there within the five years, and in 1860 two commissioners went to Kansas and investigated the facts, and these commissioners found thirty-two Indians had gone there in time to entitle them to the provisions of the treaty, and under instructions from the Indian Office these commissioners allotted lands to these thirty-two Indians and permitted them to make selection where they pleased within the boundaries of this tract of 1,824,000 acres.

Settlers for years had been coming in and occupying these lands, recognizing the fact that the Indians had not occupied them in pursuance of the treaty; and so in 1860 when the commission went out to allot the lands they made a report showing that they could only find thirty-two Indians who had gone there in keeping with the provisions of the treaty, and who were entitled to allotments.

The allotments were made to them, but according to the evidence in almost all, and perhaps in every case, the thirty-two Indians made selections of lands already occupied by settlers. Notwithstanding that occupancy, they were permitted to make their selections, and as a result, from that time to this they have not been able to get possession, because the settlers have been upon them all of these years.

The remaining portions of the reservation were sold to settlers at $1.25 per acre. To these thirty-two Indians 320 acres each of the lands were allotted, making the total of 10,240 acres. In 1873, if I remember correctly as to the date, when Judge Lowe, of Kansas, was in Congress, he secured the passage of a bill for the appraisement of the lands and their sale to the settlers under that appraisement. Under that act the lands were appraised, the rate being fixed at an average price of a little more than $5 an acre. The settlers thought it was an imposition upon them and a hardship to burden them with such an assessment, and they declared that they could not accept it; and hence but eight of the settlers accepted their lands under that appraisement.

These eight were taken and paid for at the appraised price, but the remaining lands were not taken; hence there are now but 9,335 acres remaining of the original allotment, occupied by some 75 or 100 settlers, and as they have been occupied all these years under these circumstances, the only question now, as it has been the only question for years, is what should the settlers be permitted to take the lands for?

Some think, and perhaps the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], who in the Forty-seventh Congress was on the Committee on Indian Affairs, will argue, that they ought to be compelled to pay that appraised value. But the settlers, as I have said, think it a hardship and a burden upon them, and I think myself that they ought not to be compelled to pay that price, as it is their labor and industry that has made them valuable.

It undoubtedly would be a hardship upon them to make them pay the appraised value when their neighbors and all those surrounding them in that region got their lands at $1.25 an acre, and hence I fixed that price in the bill introduced by me at the beginning of the session. But the committee thought as they had possession of the lands for twenty-five years without paying taxes, although embarrassed by the fact that they could not get a title, that they should pay at least $2.50 an acre, and the bill was reported in that shape to the House, providing that on the payment of that sum they could secure their titles.

Now, I know that is entirely satisfactory to the Indians. During all the years that this bill has been pending here not a single objection, not a single protest, has been made by a single Indian or the beneficiaries of that treaty to the proposed legislation. I challenge any member of this House to say if he has ever had his attention called to any protest or any word in opposition to the passage of the bill. In the Forty-seventh Congress, Mr. Cobb, who had been formerly a member of Congress from Kansas, was before the Committee on Indian Affairs as the attorney for these Indians, and he represented to the committee that they would be glad to take $2.50 an acre and have the matter definitely settled. In this same connection I might say that last year a man visited me at my home in Kansas and wanted to know if in my judgment it would be possible to secure the passage of a bill through Congress authorizing the allottees of this land to transfer and sell their allotments to others, and he said that if such a bill could be secured he could get the lands for $1 an acre, and the Indians would be glad to take that amount. I said to him, however, that in my judgment Congress would not consent to the passage of any bill which did not protect the settlers in the occupation of the lands.

Mr. WEAVER. Let me interrupt the gentleman to ask him a question. I want to call his attention to the second section of the bill as reported by the committee, which provides that if the settler does not pay $2.50 an acre, which is $400 for the quarter-section, inside of twelve months from the date of the approval of the bill, he can be sold out. In other words, it compels him to raise the $400 within twelve months, or else subjects him to the penalty of being sold out of his home; and I wish to ask the gentleman in that connection whether he does not think that feature ought to be stricken from the bill?

Mr. PERKINS. I think myself it is a very harsh provision. But the sense of the committee was that some such provision should be incorporated into the bill, as it was feared the settlers might not avail themselves of the provisions of the bill, and by not paying for the lands the Indians would get nothing.

Mr. WEAVER. Why would it not be more equitable to let the settlers pay for the lands at $1.25 per acre, in four equal annual installments?

Mr. PERKINS. I think myself that would be better.

Mr. WEAVER. I think it would be satisfactory to the Indians, too, because they are not pressing for the money. In fact, they are difficult to find. You would probably have to get out a search-warrant for the Indians to find them and get them to take the money, which would otherwise, under the provisions of this bill, be left lying idle in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. PERKINS. My bill, which I introduced at the opening of the session, was intended to accomplish what the gentleman suggests. It has been the policy on the part of Congress to allow settlers under the operation of the homestead law to acquire title to their homes after they have lived upon the lands for five years, without the payment of any money except land-office fees.

But here are settlers who have been living on these lands in good faith for thirty years, and who are willing to pay a dollar and a quarter per acre for them, or, if necessary, two dollars and a half, as is proposed in this bill, and yet gentlemen are not satisfied.

Mr. WEAVER. Is it true they have had these lands all these years without paying taxes?

Mr. PERKINS. That is true; but as I suggested to the committee, on the other hand there has been a cloud on their title, on their occupation, and they have been greatly embarrassed thereby.

Mr. WEAVER. That was not their fault.

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly not.

Mr. McADOO. May I ask the gentleman from Kansas one or two questions?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. McADOO. How many of these Indians are in Kansas, or where are they?

Mr. PERKINS. A few of them are in the State of Kansas, but the most of them that are living are in the Indian Territory.

Mr. McADOO. I will ask the gentleman further why the Government did not remove the settlers and enfore the selection made by the Indians.

Mr. PERKINS. For the reason suggested a moment ago, that the settlers were in possession when the lands were allotted to the Indians, and they have been occupied by settlers, and the Indians have never been able to get possession.

Mr. McADOO. Why did not the Government enforce the rights of the Indians and put the settlers off the lands?

Mr. PERKINS. Perhaps the gentleman can answer that question as well as I can. In the first place, since the first organization of Kansas as a State we have had what is known as the occupying-claimants act. This law provides that settlers under the circumstances of these can not be evicted until they are paid for the improvements they have made. These Indians have never been in a condition to put these settlers out and pay them for their improvements, nor could they in any way establish their right to the land in any court of justice.

Mr. WEAVER. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEAVER. Is there not this other reason, that these were improved lands, but the Indians desired to take the improvements as well as the lands, and thus work great hardship to the settlers?

Mr. PERKINS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. McADOO rose.

Mr. PERKINS. Then, again, if the gentleman from New Jersey will permit me to suggest, the Indians have never desired to occupy these lands as farmers; they have not cultivated them or any lands allotted to them in Kansas. They have not desired them for purposes of cultivation, but of course they desired to secure for them what was possible in a pecuniary way.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him another question?

Mr. PERKINS. With pleasure.

Mr. WEAVER. I understood the gentleman from Kansas to say that these lands were opened to settlement by the Interior Department.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir; in 1858 they were declared to be public lands.

Mr. WEAVER. And it is under that declaration these settlers are occupying these lands?

Mr. PERKINS. Under that decision settlers poured in from Missouri and all the adjacent States and settled upon those lands; but they were not open to settlement by proclamation until September, 1860.

Mr. WEAVER. But they settled there after the decision of the Interior Department?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; they settled there after that decision, although settlers had been going there before; because it was the settlers there who brought the attention of the Secretary of the Interior to the fact that those lands were not occupied by the Indians.

Mr. WEAVER. Then the settlers took the same view as the Interior Department?

Mr. COBB. But there was no law authorizing them to settle there. They had not been opened to settlement.

Mr. PERKINS. But prior to this allotment the Secretary had declared those lands public lands.

Mr. McADOO. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. McADOO. Is it not the fact that the allotment to the Indians was made prior to 1858? If not, when was it made?

Mr. PERKINS. The allotments were made in 1860. The decision of the Secretary of the Interior made in 1858 was that they were public lands; that the Indians had not acquired them in accordance with the treaty. In 1860 two commissioners were sent out there and investigated, as I have suggested, the facts; and in September, 1860, the Secretary of the Interior issued the proclamation opening the lands to settlement.

Mr. WEAVER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kansas another question. Was there not plenty of unoccupied land in the same reservation, which these Indians might have taken?

Mr. PERKINS. Undoubtedly there was at that time much vacant land within the boundaries of the proposed reservation.

Mr. COBB. I hope the gentleman from Kansas will make the House understand that prior to the opening of these lands to settlement there was no law under which these settlers could acquire any right on the lands on which they settled.

Mr. PERKINS. Except the usual right of settlers going on lands not yet thrown upon the market, and settling or squatting on them.

Mr. WEAVER. That has been the custom for many years.

Mr. COBB. And is it not a fact that after the lands were opened to settlement the right of these Indians was reserved?

Mr. PERKINS. There was no reservation; but after the lands were declared to be public lands these allotments were made.

Mr. COBB. These allotments had been made to the Indians before the settlers had any rights on those lands.

Mr. PERKINS. They were made before the proclamation of the Secretary of the Interior was issued opening the lands to settlers, but after the decision that they were public lands, and after, under that decision, hundreds of settlers had located upon them.

Mr. COBB. There is no doubt that at the time the proclamation was made opening the lands to settlement these men were mere squatters.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not concede that.

Mr. COBB. And furthermore, after these allotments were made to the Indians, as the gentleman stated the other day, and they failed to get possession of the lands which had been allotted to them because of the obstructions placed in their way by the settlers, these settlers, from that time to this, have occupied these lands, and have enjoyed all the benefits of them without paying one cent of taxes either to the State or to the General Government; and upon these considerations the committee thought that $2.50 an acre was a very low price.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; that was the position of the committee, as I have already stated.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman from Kansas permit a question?

Mr. PERKINS. With pleasure.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does this bill affect any lands outside of these thirty-two allotments?

Mr. PERKINS. Not at all.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Are these allotments occupied by actual settlers, or are they part of some large cattle ranch?

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no; they are twenty-four pieces or more of land scattered promiscuously through the county wherever the allottees chose to make their selections. They are not contiguous parcels of land.

Mr. MCADOO. Will the gentleman yield to me for a few minutes?

Mr. PERKINS. I want to yield some time to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], and I wish, if possible, to have the bill disposed of within the hour.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I wish to say to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] that I must have time to present this matter fully. I made a minority report upon it in the Forty-seventh Congress, and I wish time now to lay the subject fully before the House.

Mr. PERKINS. I shall give the gentleman whatever time he wants. I yield now, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

Mr. MCADOO rose.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct the attention of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] to this point. The friends of this bill control the hour, and they give notice that they want to pass the bill before the close of the hour. I submit, therefore, that there should be some arrangement by which half the time may be put under the control of gentlemen who do not favor the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I am going to yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], who, I understand, is one of those gentlemen.

Mr. RANDALL. But one-half the time ought to be given to the other side as a matter of right.

Mr. PERKINS. Unless too much time is occupied with questions, I am willing that those who oppose the bill shall have twenty minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. This is an important bill, and the opponents of it have a right to as much time as the advocates of it, in order that members of the House may judge, upon the merits of the bill, whether they ought to vote for it or not.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish so say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that, in my judgment, there are no gentlemen upon this floor who are opposed to the bill. The only question in controversy is the question of price.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman may be mistaken in that, and there may be a great deal more opposition when it is fully discussed.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, the only point, so far as I know, about which any question has been raised among those who have given the bill attention, is the question of price.

Mr. WEAVER. And the question of penalty also.

Mr. PEEL. I suggest to my colleague [Mr. PERKINS] that he inquire of the Chair how much of the time has been consumed.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, I will ask the Chair how much of the hour remains.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are thirty-three minutes remaining.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the Chair take into consideration the time we have been waiting to get order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair takes everything into consideration.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not think we ought to be charged with that time. I will ask those who are opposed to the bill if twenty minutes will be sufficient for them?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will state to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] that twenty minutes will not do, because I hold in my hands and desire to have read by the Clerk the reports made by Mr. Schurz, when he was Secretary of the Interior, and by the then Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which throw an entirely different light on this question from that in which it is presented by my friend from Kansas. In order that these two reports may be read to the House it will be necessary that I shall have more time than twenty minutes.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, if the gentleman desires to have those reports read, let them be read as a portion of his remarks, and then if it becomes necessary to extend the time we will do so. The only reason I made the suggestion about twenty minutes was that I thought it was desirable to dispose of the bill within the hour, if possible.

Mr. RANDALL. You have an hour to-morrow.

Mr. PERKINS. I know; but I thought we had better dispose of the bill to-day if we could. I yield now to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield twenty minutes, and if it becomes necessary we will extend the time.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, there is a side to this question other than that which has been presented. It is the side of the Indian, who has no direct representative upon this floor. I happened to be a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Forty-seventh Congress, before which committee this question was brought. I was appointed a subcommittee to take it into consideration, and did so, and made a report to the full committee, recommending the passage of a vastly different measure from the one which is now before the House. The full committee did not adopt my views, but reported a bill to this House somewhat similar to the one now under consideration. Myself and others dissented, and the gentleman from Mississippi, Colonel HOOKER, and Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, joined me in a minority report which I now hold in my hand.

Mr. Speaker, a bill should be passed by Congress directing the sale for the benefit of these Indians of these lands in Kansas, which now for more than twenty years, perhaps as long as thirty years, have been in the possession of the present settlers, who have paid no taxes upon them and paid no rents to these Indians, and who now seek through the instrumentality of this bill to get these lands at one-fourth of their actual cash value to-day.

This matter, sir, relates back as far as 1838, when a treaty, a formal, binding treaty, on behalf of the Government of the United States was made with what were called the New York Indians. That treaty provided that for each Indian 320 acres of land west of Missouri should be set aside, to be held in fee-simple by patent from the President, in conformity with the provisions of the third article of the act of May 28, 1830. The treaty was carried into effect; and 320 acres of land were set apart to every one of these New York Indians whose identity could be established, thirty-two in number. The remainder of the land so set apart by this treaty was ordered to be sold and was sold.

In 1873 a law was passed by Congress directing that the lands owned by the thirty-two Indians should be appraised, in order that, as the Indians did not occupy them, and did not desire to occupy them, the lands should be sold for their benefit. Under that law of Congress these lands were appraised by a board appointed by the Secretary of the Interior; and I hold the report of the board in my hand.

Now, Mr. Speaker, bearing in mind that this bill directs that these lands shall be sold to these settlers at the paltry price of $2.50 per acre, I call the attention of the House to the fact that when these lands were appraised, as long ago as 1873, not an acre was appraised at less than $3.75; and a portion was appraised as high as $10 an acre.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman yield one moment?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEAVER. That is in consequence of the settlement in Bourbon County, where Fort Scott is situated; and the Indians never improved that county; they never built up Fort Scott—never contributed a dollar in that way.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I did not yield for a statement, but for a question.

Mr. Speaker, it makes no difference whether these Indians contributed to the improvement of the county in the way the gentleman speaks of or not. The fact remains that by the solemn act of the Government of the United States these lands in the State of Kansas were set apart to these Indians. They or their heirs are in existence to-day, and every consideration of justice and equity demands that they should receive an adequate price for the lands. The object of this bill is to take away these lands from the Indians and give them to the settlers who have occupied them for upward of twenty years without payment of rent or taxes, at a price that is hardly one-fourth of what they are worth.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman will allow me to ask whether the appraisement to which he has referred does not include the value of the improvements put upon the land by the settlers?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I do not so understand. It is the appraised value of the lands, without the improvements. These settlers, I have no doubt, have paid taxes upon their improvements, but not upon the value of the land, because since 1838 the lands have been set apart to these Indians.

Mr. PERKINS. Surely the gentleman does not mean to make that statement.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I make it upon the authority of the Indian Commissioner.

Mr. PERKINS. The allotments were not made to these Indians until 1860.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Well, I may be mistaken as to the time, but the fact remains that the equitable interest in fee in these lands is in these Indians, and, as the gentleman concedes, has been since 1860. They have been deprived of the possession of the lands and the rents to which they were entitled; and all this time the settlers, for whom gentlemen here are so solicitous, have enjoyed without charge the occupancy of the lands. Now, I appeal for justice to these Indians. The Congress of the United States can not afford to do injustice to them under the terms of the treaty of 1838.

Mr. Speaker, a bill on this subject ought to pass, but not the one recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs. We should rather adhere to the recommendations of Secretary of the Interior Schurz and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Hayt, under him. I have prepared, and at the proper time will offer, an amendment to make the bill conform to the recommendations of the Indian Bureau and do substantial justice to the Indians.

Mr. WEAVER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the fee of these lands is in these Indians, and has been since 1860?

Mr. BLANCHARD. An equitable interest in fee.

Mr. Speaker, some of these Indians went to Kansas at the time the lands were set apart to them, but there was a feeling of hostility there against them, and it was not safe for them to remain upon the lands. It was not safe for the Indian to remain there when the white man wanted the land, so the Indian left.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman wish to be understood as saying that settlers went to Kansas as early as 1838 and occupied these lands?

Mr. BLANCHARD. No; but about 1860.

I have as much feeling for bona fide settlers as any man on this floor; but I submit that the settlers upon these lands went there with their eyes wide open to the situation, knowing that the lands belonged to these Indians, and therefore they settled upon them at their own risk.

Mr. Speaker, I send up to be read as part of my remarks a letter to the Committee on Indian Affairs, by Mr. Schurz, when Secretary of the Interior, covering a report made to him by Mr. Hayt, Commissioner of Indian Affairs. This letter and report throw a flood of light upon this question, and show that what is attempted in this bill will, if perpetrated, be a wrong and injustice to the Indians.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. The gentlemen says the fee of these lands is in the Indians. Now, the question I wish to ask him is, whether the patent to these lands ever was issued to any of these Indians?

Mr. BLANCHARD. The whole question is presented in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior and the report of the Indian Commissioner.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I do not see how the fee could be in these Indians unless the Government had issued a patent or conveyance to them of this land. If that be so, that the Government did issue a patent to them, then it presents a different case.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., April 6, 1878.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th January last, transmitting, for the consideration of the Department, bill H. R. 1177, entitled "A bill for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas."

The first section of the bill in question enacts that "those persons, being heads of families or single persons over twenty-one years of age, who have made settlement and improvement upon, and are bona fide claimants of and occupants of, either in person or by tenant, the lands in Kansas which were allotted to certain New York Indians, and for which certificates of allotment, dated the 14th day of September, 1860, for 320 acres of land each, were issued to thirty-two of said Indians, shall be, and hereby are, authorized and permitted to enter and purchase, at the proper land office, said lands so occupied by them, in tracts not exceeding 160 acres, according to the Government surveys, on paying therefor in lawful money of the United States at the rate of $2.50 per acre; and patents shall issue therefor as in other cases."

By article 2 of the treaty of January 15, 1838, with the New York Indians (7 Stat., 550), the United States agreed to set aside for the New York Indians, then residing in the State of New York, or in Wisconsin, or elsewhere in the United States, who have no permanent homes, a tract of land situated directly west of the State of Missouri, containing 1,824,000 acres; being 320 acres for each soul of said Indians, as their numbers are at present computed. Said lands were to be patented in fee-simple to the tribes or bands by patent from the President of the United States in conformity with the provisions of the third section of the act of May 28, 1830 (4 Stat., 411).

The United States further agreed to set aside the sum of $400,000 as a fund to provide for the removal of the New York Indians to the lands mentioned; which agreement was never fulfilled.

As early, however, as 1842, members of certain tribes in the State of New York and elsewhere, who thought themselves entitled to the lands under the provisions of the treaty, removed to the country west of the State of Missouri and settled therein; and from time to time others followed them, until a considerable number of Indians, as will be seen from census lists on file in the Indian Bureau, were found to be occupying these lands.

From death and the hostility of the settlers who were drawn in that direction by the fertility of the soil and other advantages, all of the Indians gradually relinquished their selections, until of the Indians who had removed thither from the State of New York only thirty-two remained in 1860.

The lands had been surveyed in the meanwhile, and under the instructions of the Department of the Interior a commission was appointed to determine certain points in relation to the allotments of lands to such Indians as might be entitled to the same under the treaty prior to giving, to such as might be found entitled thereto, evidences of their right to occupancy which should secure to them the tracts upon which they were living and be such identification thereof as would settle dispute in the future if under subsequent legislation perfect title should be provided, the treaty not granting the right to issue patents to individual Indians.

In accordance with the request of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, based upon the report of the commissioners, the Department approved of the selections of the thirty-two Indians in question, and, on the 14th of September following, certificates of allotments were issued to each of said reservees.

In 1858 petitions from settlers in Kansas were presented to the Department asking that the lands be opened to settlement, and in December, 1860, the lands known as the New York Indian lands in Kansas, excepting those allotted, were accordingly opened to settlement.

But a short time elapsed, however, before troubles between the settlers and the Indians were of constant occurrence, and in 1873, when the act of February 19, 1873 (17 Stat., 466), was passed, the commissioners appointed thereunder to appraise the lands of the thirty-two New York Indians stated in their report that none of the allottees were to be found upon the lands. The files of the Indian Office show abundant proof that they did not voluntarily relinquish their occupation.

Be this question as it may, the act of February 19, 1873, fully recognized the right of the Indians or of their heirs to the proceeds of the lands; and applications are now before the Department, which when perfected will call by legal representation for nearly all of the proceeds of the allotments of lands in question.

By the act of February 19, 1873, provision was made for the benefit of certain settlers upon and occupants of certain Indian lands in Kansas, permitting such settlers to enter and purchase at the proper land office said lands so occupied by them, in tracts not exceeding 160 acres, according to the Government surveys, on paying therefor in lawful money of the United States the appraised value of said lands respectively, to be ascertained by three disinterested and competent appraisers, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, who shall examine in person each tract and report under oath its value, exclusive of all improvements; and patents shall issue therefor as in other cases, but no sale shall be made under this act for less than $3.75 per acre.

All entries under this act were required to be made within two years from the promulgation of the necessary regulations for the sale of the lands. This act was amended by the act of June 23, 1874 (18 Stat., 273), extending the time in which payments for said lands were to have been made.

Some of the parties, settlers upon these lands, have paid in full, and upon all of the lands valuable improvements have been made. Some of those who have paid for their lands occupied those assessed at the highest valuation. No reason is given why in all these years, from 1860 up to the present time, those who are delinquent have failed under the favorable terms of occupancy to make the payments required, under the obligation willingly assumed by them.

The thirty-two Indians in question, each having located, by certificate of allotment, the particular quantity of land which they were severally entitled to receive under treaty stipulations, were, through no fault or negligence on their part, subsequently ousted from the possession of such lands by the encroachments of the settlers.

In this view of the case, and in view of the fact that treaty stipulations and legal enactments have secured to such of these allottees or their heirs as may now be living the benefits of the proceeds of these lands, and applications are now on file before the Indian Office for nearly all the proceeds of the claims covered by the thirty-two allotments, I am not prepared to entertain the proposition contained in the bill presented, or to recommend to Congress, after consideration of the liberality already extended by the Government to these settlers, any action looking toward a reduction of the sum which seems so justly due to the Indians.

The true test of the value of the lands in question would be their price in open market at a cash sale, and it is believed that if they were so offered the question of payment would be speedily settled.

I am, however, disinclined to advocate any measure which would seem to bear harshly upon the settlers, and have therefore concluded to recommend further time for payment, with the distinct understanding, on the part of those in possession of the lands, that payment on the terms fixed must be promptly made to avoid forfeiture.

Very respectfully,

C. SCHURZ, Secretary.

Hon. D. C. HASKELL,
House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire more time.

Mr. PERKINS. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I do not think this matter should be hurried through.

Mr. WEAVER. I want to be heard myself on this bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I do not understand that I am limited in time.

Mr. PERKINS. I will yield to the gentleman from Louisiana ten minutes more.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have had read only the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Schurz. What goes more into detail on this subject is the report of E. A. Hayt, Indian Commissioner, to the Secretary of the Interior, and I ask that his report be printed in the RECORD with my remarks.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The report is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, March 29, 1878.

SIR: I am in receipt, by reference from the House Committee on Public Lands, of bill H. R. 1178, providing for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas, and requesting the views of this office on the same.

I am also in receipt, by your reference for report, of a letter from the Hon. D. C. Haskell, dated January 18, 1878, inclosing a copy of the same bill, and requesting the views of this office thereon.

In connection therewith I have the honor to report that, by the second article of the treaty of January 15, 1838, with the New York Indians (7 Stat., 550), the United States agreed to set aside for the New York Indians, then residing in Wisconsin and New York, a certain tract of land, west of Missouri, containing 320 acres for each of said Indians, to be held in fee-simple, by patent from the President, in conformity with the provisions of the third article of the act of May 28, 1830 (4 Stat., 411), the proviso to which declares that "such lands shall revert to the United States if the Indians become extinct or abandon the same." The treaty vested the Indians with full power and authority to divide said lands, in severalty, among the different tribes and bands, and to sell and convey the same among each other, under such regulations as they might adopt. Indians not accepting and agreeing to removing within five years, or such other time as the President may from time to time appoint, to "forfeit all interest" in "the lands so set apart to the United States."

Under these provisions thirty-two New York Indians removed to and remained in the Territory now embraced in the State of Kansas prior to June 16, 1860, at which time the honorable Secretary of the Interior approved to them selections of 320 acres each, for which, on the 14th of September, 1860, certificates of allotment were issued to each of said reservees, the certificates specifying that the selections were for the exclusive use and benefit of the reservees, and were not subjected to be "alienated in fee, leased, or otherwise disposed of, except to the United States."

By an act approved February 19, 1873 (17 Stat., 466), Congress authorized such actual settlers as were then residing thereon to enter and purchase said lands in tracts of not exceeding 160 acres, at an appraised value of not less than $3.75 per acre, to be ascertained, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, by three appraisers appointed to value the same, the funds arising from the sale to be paid into the Treasury of the United States, in trust for such of said New York Indians or their heirs as might, within five years, establish their identity; and in absence of such proof within the time specified, the proceeds of the sales to become a part of the public moneys of the United States: "Provided, That any Indian to whom any of said certificates was issued, and who is now occupying the land allotted thereby, shall be entitled to receive a patent therefor."

All entries under this act were required to be made within two years from the promulgation of the necessary regulations for the sale of the lands.

This act was amended by the act of June 23, 1874 (18 Stat., 273), so as to allow the payments to be made in two annual installments, the first payments to be made on or before the 30th day of September, 1875, and the remainder within one year thereafter, with interest at 6 per centum per annum.

The commissioners appointed under the act of 1873 to appraise the lands reported on the 26th of July, 1873, that none of the thirty-two New York Indians were living on the lands at that time or at the date of the act, but that all of said lands were then occupied by actual settlers, whose names were given in the report opposite the description of the tract on which they had respectively made settlement. The lands were valued by the appraisers at an average of $4.9076 per acre, and their report was approved by the Department September 30, 1873.

Instructions were issued by the Secretary under the same date, directing that the lands should be sold under the instructions of the General Land Office by the district land officers, who were directed to notify the settlers entitled to purchase by published advertisement of a general character, in a newspaper published in the vicinity of the land, that payment would be required within two years.

In pursuance of these instructions, as it appears from a letter of the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated July 3, 1877, the following sales have been made:

First. From N. ½ section 26, 23 S., 25 E., allotted to Joseph Johndroe, there has been sold, at $5 per acre, cash, to Benjamin Brown, the NE. ¼ of said section; consideration, $800.

Second. From N. ½ section 27, 23 S., 25 E., allotted to Margaret Johndroe, there has been sold, at $5 per acre, cash, to Nathaniel Oates, the S. ½ NE. ¼; consideration, $400.

Third. From the S. ½ of said section 27, allotted to Michael Gray, there has been sold, at $4.50 per acre, cash, to Nathaniel Oates, the N. ½ of SE. ¼; consideration, $360.

Fourth. From W. ½ section 4, 24 S., 25 E., allotted to James Scrimpsher, there has been sold, at $4.75 per acre, cash, to S. McEwing, the N. ½ of SW. ¼; consideration, $380.

Fifth. From N. ½ section 27, 23 S., 25 E., allotted to Margaret Johndroe, there has been sold, at $5 per acre, cash, to William M. Beckford, the N. ½ NE. ¼, and at $4.50 per acre to the same party, the N. ½ SW. ¼ of said section; consideration, $760.

Sixth. From the same allotment, there has been sold, at $4.50 per acre, and paid in full, in two installments, with $10.77 interest, to John Barrett, the S. ½ NW. ¼; consideration, including interest, $370.77.

Seventh. From the W. fractional ½, section 2, 24 S., 25 E., allotted to Joseph Fox, there has been sold, at $5 per acre, and paid in full, in two installments, with $23.80 interest, to Joanna Glendenning, the NW. fractional ¼, containing 156.76 acres; consideration, with interest, $822.60.

Eighth. And from the E. fractional ½ section 6, 24 S., 25 E., allotted to Mary Predome, there has been sold, at $6 per acre, to Levi T. Call, the W. ½ of S. E. ¼ of said section, amounting to $480, one-half of which was paid at date of purchase, September 29, 1875, and the balance with interest is still due and unpaid.

There has, therefore, out of an aggregate of 10,215.63 acres, valued at $50,850.05, been sold 879.76 acres for the sum of $3,858.80; leaving unsold 9,335.87 acres, valued at $46,991.25, or an average of $5.02½ per acre, which aggregate amount would, according to the terms of the act of February 19, 1873, if not claimed by the allottees or their heirs, inure to the United States at the end of five years, which have expired.

The bill under consideration proposes to reduce the aggregate value of the unsold lands over one-half, or to $23,339.68, and if the lands are not sold, at the diminished rate of $2.50 per acre, within one year, that patents shall issue in the names of the original allottees for the balance unsold.

With these provisions of the bill I am not inclined to concur, for the following reasons:

Under the treaty of 1838, the New York Indians were entitled to 1,824,000 acres of land in Kansas, and a removal fund of $400,000, which the United States never provided. Notwithstanding the failure of the United States in this regard, portions of the Indians removed to Kansas subsequent to the treaty, with a view to making that country their permanent home, but on account of their rapid depletion in number from sickness, a majority afterwards returned to New York.

By decision of April 19, 1858, the honorable Secretary of the Interior held that those of the New York Indians who had not removed had thereby forfeited their title to the reserve, and that the same should be opened to settlement; but in the execution of said decision, and prior to the proclamation of December, 1860, opening the lands to settlement, the allotments under consideration were made to the thirty-two Indians who were then in Kansas, and certificates were issued to them therefor.

It follows, therefore, that an equitable interest in fee in the lands vested in these Indians, by virtue of the grant contained in the treaty at the date of their removal and long prior to the settlement of Kansas, although the evidence of title did not issue until 1860.

They accordingly assumed the condition of legal ownership, by purchase, over the lands subsequently allotted to them, at an early day, and are entitled to the benefits of any appreciation of value arising from the settlement and improvement of the country.

This doctrine is, I am aware, in opposition to a somewhat prevalent opinion as to the right of the Indians. It has been urged in similar cases that as the Indians have not improved their lands they are not entitled to the advance in value incident to the settlement of the country. The purchase of wild lands, and holding of the same to await the improvement of the country, has been one of the most popular and safe, as well as the most remunerative methods of investment known, and I can see no grounds upon which Indians taking an equitable title in fee should be deprived of the benefits never denied to white purchasers of public lands, bought and held for speculative purposes only.

Informal claims have been filed in this office by the original allottees, or their heirs, covering nearly all the proceeds arising from the sale of these lands when sold.

There is no evidence on file in this office, aside from the letters of Mr. Haskell, showing that it is the desire of these Indians that the land should be sold at a reduced price.

The lands are in Bourbon County, one of the richest and most fertile counties in the State. They are within a few miles of Fort Scott, and near the line of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad—the Missouri River, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad running nearly through the center of the body of the lands, which lie in close proximity to the corner of townships 23 and 24 in ranges 24 and 25 east. The records of the General Land Office show that there is scarcely a vacant forty-acre tract of land in or near the townships named. With these facts in view, it is safe to assume that the several tracts were, in 1873, worth the full amount at which they were appraised, and that, in view of the rapid development of the country and the present price of uncultivated lands in that vicinity, there has, at least, been no depreciation in their value.

The settlers have been in possession of these lands for years, to the exclusion of the Indians, and have had every advantage and opportunity to pay for the lands from the products of the same.

The title of the Indians is, under treaty stipulations, similar to those with the Shawnee, Miami, and other Indians in Kansas, whose lands have been held by the Supreme Court of the United States (5 Wall., 737) to be excluded from the jurisdiction of the State, and not subject to taxation, and it is fairly presumable that the settlers have availed themselves of the benefit arising under this decision.

For these and other reasons which might be urged, I can not recommend the passage of the bill in its present form. It is, however, very desirable that adequate legislation be had insuring the sale of these lands and the final settlement of all questions in connection therewith.

I have, therefore, to recommend that the bill be amended as follows: Strike out all after the word "office," in the twelfth line, and insert, in lieu thereof, the following:

"At any time within one year from the passage of this act said lands so occupied by them in tracts not exceeding 160 acres, according to the Government surveys, at not less than the appraised value of the said tracts, as heretofore ascertained by the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with the provisions of the act of February 19, 1873, entitled 'An act to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas,' payment to be made in three annual installments, one-third at date of entry, one-third at the end of one year from date of entry, and the balance in two years from date of entry, with interest on said amounts, respectively, from date of entry, at 6 per cent. per annum; and the moneys arising from such sales shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States in trust for, and to be paid to, said Indians, respectively, to whom said certificates were issued, or to their heirs, upon satisfactory proof of their identity to the Secretary of the Interior, at any time within three years from the passage of this act; and in case such proof is not made within the time specified, then the proceeds of such sale, or so much thereof as shall not have been paid under the provisions of this act, shall become a part of the public moneys of the United States.

"SEC. 2. That any lands not entered by such settlers at the expiration of one year from the passage of this act shall be offered at public sale, in the usual manner, at not less than the appraised value, notice of said sale to be given by public advertisement of not less than thirty days; and any tract or tracts not then sold, together with such tracts as have heretofore been or may hereafter be entered, and wherein default has been made in the payment of any portion of the purchase-money, or the interest thereon, as herein or heretofore provided, shall be thereafter subject to private entry at the appraised value of said tracts."

I inclose herewith a schedule showing the names of the thirty-two allottees named in this report, the description of the lands allotted to each, with the names of the settlers claiming the lands placed opposite the tract claimed by them.

The bill referred by the House committee, together with the letter of Mr. Haskell, with inclosure, is herewith respectfully returned.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. A. HAYT, Commissioner.

HON. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The letter of Mr. Schurz, the Secretary of the Interior, and the report of Mr. Hayt, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, agree that a bill should not be passed fixing an arbitrary price, as this bill proposes to do, upon these lands. The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner recommend that the lands be sold to the settlers now on them at their appraised value. If this be done these Indians would realize from $3.75 to $10 per acre for their lands, instead of $2.50 per acre, as this bill arbitrarily proposes.

I have here the official appraisement, giving the names of the Indians to whom these lands were allotted and the names of the settlers now on them, and it shows that these lands were appraised from $3.75 to $10 per acre.

The price which the Committee on Indian Affairs propose in the present bill is 50 cents less an acre even than the bill reported by the committee in the Forty-seventh Congress.

There might have been legislation upon this matter years ago, but no bill has ever been presented or reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs which meted out justice to the Indians; no bill has ever been urged which embodied the recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Their recommendations have been just to the Indians; but every bill the passage of which has been attempted has sought to give the settler an undue advantage over the Indian by fixing an arbitrary price, one much less than the actual cash value of the land.

Now, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON], who asked me whether it is not true that patents have not been issued to these lands, I will state that the report of Secretary Schurz which has been read shows that certificates of allotment were issued to the thirty-two Indians in question. An equitable interest in fee, then, is in the Indians, under the terms of the law and the treaty made with them.

Mr. MORSE. When we are talking about the price of these lands it does not matter in whom the fee may be.

Mr. BLANCHARD. An equitable interest in fee is in these Indians and this has been so declared by the Interior Department. The report of Secretary Schurz shows that the thirty-two Indians, or their representatives, have filed in the Indian Office evidence of their identity and right to the land or its proceeds. It therefore follows that "the search-warrant" for these Indians which the gentleman from Iowa spoke of will not be necessary. The Indians are in existence, their claims filed, their identity established, and whenever Congress provides for the sale of their lands at the proper value they will be on hand to receive the money so justly theirs.

If Congress enacts into law this bill which stipulates that the lands may be purchased by the settlers at $2.50 per acre, it will be permitting them to take at that inferior price lands worth from $7.50 to $10 per acre, and this, too, at the expense of and to the great detriment of the Indian owners.

Against that, sir, I protest now as I protested in the Forty-seventh

Congress, in the Forty-eighth Congress, and in the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman from Louisiana permit me to ask him a question? He stated that the title to the 10,000 acres of land in controversy here was in the Indians.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have so stated.

Mr. RANDALL. Then let me ask why the United States should intervene in this manner and undertake to give these lands away if the title is held by the Indians in fee?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there is necessity for some legislation upon the subject. The settlers who have the lands now in possession will continue to hold them in defiance of the rights of the Indians, and prevent them from getting possession of their property, just as they prevented those who went to take possession of the lands in 1860.

Therefore, legislation is necessary to protect the Indians in their rights. The only question is, how shall this be done? The lands ought to be sold at a fair price, and the money turned over to the Indians to whom the lands belong.

If something is not done the settlers will continue to hold the lands, and the Indians will receive no benefit from them whether in the way of sale or rent.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman from Louisiana permit an interruption?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will yield for a question.

Mr. ROGERS. What is the evidence of the fact alleged by the gentleman that the fee to the lands in question is in the Indians?

Mr. BLANCHARD. It is so stated.

Mr. ROGERS. By whom, and how?

Mr. BLANCHARD. In the report of the Indian Commissioner, Mr. Hayt, which report has been referred to during the course of this discussion.

Mr. ROGERS. Does he say that the Government made a patent to the Indians?

Mr. BLANCHARD. He says that certificates of allotment provided for by the terms of the treaty have been issued to the Indians.

Mr. PAYSON. Let me interrupt the gentleman. I am sure he desires to be entirely accurate.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. ROGERS. I have not concluded my question. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Louisiana, before leaving this point, if the fee is in the Indians, by what authority, or power, or right can the Government of the United States by legislation undertake to divest them of that title?

Mr. BLANCHARD. The former Commissioner of Indian Affairs states that an equitable interest in fee in the lands is vested in these Indians. This is a question that needs legislation for the reason I have given. The Indian should be protected. But if there be legislation directing the sale of these lands, which are not now and are never likely to be in the possession of the Indians, it should be legislation that will do justice to them.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Louisiana, as well as other gentlemen, to a statement contained in this report, which seems to have been overlooked in this discussion. This says upon its face that the title to these lands is not in these Indians.

The treaty with these Indians provided, in terms, that the patents when issued should be in accordance with the statute of May 28, 1830. By reference to volume 4 of the Statutes at Large, page 411, a copy of which I hold in my hand, it will be seen that patents should only issue to the tribes, as tribes, and that until the patents shall issue there should be simply the right of occupancy on the part of the Indians. When the gentleman from Louisiana comes to compare the statement in the report in reference to these Indians with the statute to which I refer, he will find that the thirty-two Indians had the right of occupancy and that alone. That settles the question of title. It is shown also by the report that the Indians abandoned even that right because the lands were entered upon by other settlers. I say this simply that gentlemen may understand exactly the condition of the title as a title.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will read briefly from the report——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour for the consideration of this measure has expired.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DUNN. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the regular order is the unfinished business coming over.

PETER M'CANN.

Mr. SHAW. I present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, having had under consideration the following resolution, submitted by Mr. RANDALL: "Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Peter McCann, father of James P. McCann, deceased, late messenger to the Committee on Appropriations, a sum equal to six months' salary as messenger aforesaid, and also the expenses attending his last illness and funeral, not to exceed the sum of $250," report back the same with the recommendation that it be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. With the permission of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SHAW] I will state that this young man died during the last recess. He was one of the clerical force of the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations have made record unanimously as to the character of this employé. I should omit a duty, I think, unless I gave public expression here to what the committee with unanimity stated in a resolve which was made a matter of record, that a more obliging, intelligent, faithful officer they had never known, and his death caused great sorrow to each and all the members of that committee.

Mr. SHAW. Does the gentleman desire that the report shall be again read?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not. It is the usual resolution.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask that the report be again read.

The report was again read.

Mr. OATES. I rise to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Accounts whether this sum of money is due to the father to whom it is to be paid for services of the deceased, or is it a mere gratuity?

Mr. SHAW. I suppose it is a mere gratuity.

Mr. OATES. Then I am opposed to it.

Mr. SHAW. But only following precedents established in numerous instances.

Mr. OATES. Then they are very bad precedents. I am in favor of paying all the debts the Government owes, but I am opposed to giving any gratuity.

Mr. RANDALL. I can only say in answer to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] that this resolution is an exact copy of many similar ones passed under like circumstances.

Mr. OATES. Does the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations think those are good precedents?

Mr. RANDALL. I think where a faithful officer dies in the service of the Government it is a small matter to give his dependent relatives six months' pay. [Applause.]

Mr. OATES. It may be a small matter, but it is one which involves a principle.

Mr. RANDALL. I have found in my public life that the way to be consistent was by trying to be just; and I do not propose to yield my judgment in this case because I have allowed my judgment perhaps to be swayed in other like circumstances.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I wish to ask him whether we are doing anything more for the family of this deceased employé than we do for the families of members of our own body?

Mr. RANDALL. Not so much; and this man was a peculiarly faithful servant, and I am sure the gentleman from Iowa is ready to bear full testimony to that fact.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I will say in reply that every member of the committee will vouch for that.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. SHAW moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, returned to the House of Representatives the bill (S. 928) in relation to marriage between white men and Indian women, which was recalled from the House of Representatives at the request of the Senate.

WIDOW OF JOSEPH F. GUTZWILLER.

Mr. SHAW. I present another privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The report of the Committee on Accounts was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, having had under consideration the following resolution, submitted by Mr. SENEY: "Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow of Joseph F. Gutzwiller, deceased, late an employé of the House, a sum equal to his salary for six months, and also the expenses attending his last illness and funeral, not to exceed the sum of $250," report back the same with the recommendation that it be adopted.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. SHAW moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAY OF COMMITTEE CLERKS.

Mr. SHAW. I am instructed by the Committee on Accounts to report back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution fixing the time when the pay of certain clerks to committees of the House of Representatives shall begin; and I ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the pay of clerks to committees of the House of Representatives which have been or may be hereafter authorized by the House, who are paid during the session only, shall begin from the time such clerks entered upon the discharge of their duties, which shall be ascertained and evidenced by the certificate of the chairman of the several committees employing clerks for the session only.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the House joint resolution No. 29, would respectfully report that the object sought to be accomplished by this joint resolution was effected by legislation in the Forty-ninth Congress, which is now existing law, and that no further legislation is necessary. Your committee would therefore ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, and recommend that it lie upon the table.

The joint resolution was laid upon the table.

RAILROAD BRIDGE AT BURLINGTON, IOWA.

Mr. GEAR. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill S. 290.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 290) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Burlington, Iowa.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill at the present time?

Mr. SPRINGER. Has the bill been referred to the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. GEAR. I will state, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois, that this is almost verbatim, with the exception of an amendment by the Senate, the same as the House bill No. 2170, which has been reported favorably by the Committee on Commerce of this House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman explain the difference between the two bills?

Mr. GEAR. The difference is this: The bill as passed by the Senate provides that the question of the erection of the bridge shall be subject to the decision of the Secretary of War, and it also provides, in the sixth section, that the bridge shall be commenced within two years and completed within four. The House bill has not that provision. That is the only difference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill has already passed the House once, I believe.

Mr. GEAR. No, sir; it has passed the Senate; it is now pending in the House, and it has the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Burlington and Illinois Bridge Company, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct and maintain, if in the opinion of the Secretary of War the same be a public necessity, a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at a place suitable to the interests of navigation at a point at or near the city of Burlington, Iowa, and to lay on or over said bridge a track or tracks for the more perfect connection of any railroad or railroads that are or shall be constructed to said river, on either or both sides thereof, at or opposite said point, under the limitations and conditions hereinafter provided; that said bridge shall not interfere with the free navigation of said river beyond what is necessary in order to carry into effect the rights and privileges hereby granted; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, the cause may be tried before the circuit court of the United States in and for any district in which any portion of said bridge or obstruction touches. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railroad trains, and for the safe and convenient passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, animals, and foot-passengers, for such reasonable rates of toll as may be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the proviso regarding wagons, animals, foot-passengers, etc., shall not influence the location of said bridge in its relation to the interests of navigation.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under the provisions of this act may, at the option of the company building the same, be built as a draw-bridge or with unbroken and continuous spans: Provided, That if the said bridge shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans, it shall give clear head-room of not less, in any case, than 55½ feet above extreme high-water mark as understood at the point of location, nor shall the spans of said bridge give a clear width of water-way of less than 250 feet, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of said river, and the main span shall be over the main channel of the river and give a clear width of water-way of not less than 300 feet: And provided further, That if any bridge built under the provisions of this act shall be constructed as a draw-bridge, the same shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a pivot over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point and with spans giving a clear width of water-way of not less than 200 feet on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and the next adjoining span or spans to the draw shall give a clear width of water-way of not less that 250 feet: Provided, That if the pivot pier of said bridge shall be constructed within less than 410 feet of the west shore of said river the span constructed west of said pivot pier may be less than 250 feet, and said spans shall give a clear head-room of not less than 10 feet above extreme high-water mark; and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river where said bridge shall be erected: And provided also, That said draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats, except when trains are passing over the draw; but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening the said draw during or after the passage of trains.

SEC. 3. That any bridge constructed under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be known as a post-route, and the same is hereby declared to be a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States, and for passengers or freight passing over said bridge, than the rate per mile paid for their transportation over the railroads and public highways leading to said bridge; and the United States shall have the right of way for postal-telegraph purposes across said bridge.

SEC. 4. That all railway companies desiring to use said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passages of the same, and in the use of the machinery and fixtures thereof, and of all the approaches thereto, under and upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties, in case they shall not agree.

SEC. 5. That the structure herein authorized shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of the navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawing of the bridge, and a map of the location, giving, for the space of 1 mile above and 1 mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-line at high and low water, the direction and strength of the current at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as shall be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are decided by the Secretary of War to be such as will not materially affect the interests of navigation, the bridge shall not be commenced or built; and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of construction, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and the said bridge shall be constructed with such aids to the passage of said bridge, in the form of booms, dikes, piers, or other suitable and proper structures for confining the flow of water to a permanent and easily navigated channel, for a distance of not less than 1 mile above the bridge location, and for the guiding of rafts, steam-boats, and other water-craft safely through the draw and raft spans, as the Secretary of War shall prescribe and order to be constructed and maintained at the expense of the company owning said bridge; and the said structure shall be at all times so kept and managed as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels through or under said structure; and for the safety of vessels passing at night there shall be displayed on said bridge, from the hours of sunset to sunrise, such lights as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War; and the said structure shall be changed or removed at the cost and expense of the owners thereof from time to time, as Congress may direct, so as to preserve the free and convenient navigation of said river; and the authority to erect and continue said bridge shall be subject to revocation and modification by law, when the public good shall, in the judgment of Congress, so require, without any expense or charge to the United States.

SEC. 6. That if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized shall not be commenced within two years from the passage of this act, and be completed in four years from the same date, the rights and privileges hereby granted shall cease and be determined.

SEC. 7. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. GEAR. As there appears to be no objection, I demand the previous question on the third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GEAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

J. E. PILCHER.

Mr. CARUTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar and put upon its passage the bill (H. R. 339) for the relief of J. E. Pilcher.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized, out of the Texas indemnity fund, to pay to J. E. Pilcher the sum of $905, being the amount of one bond of $100 and $805 in paper money of the Republic of Texas: Provided, That he shall find that said claims are within the class of claims heretofore paid by the United States out of the said fund: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that said bond and money are genuine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARUTH. A bill similar to this was passed in the Forty-ninth Congress, but it failed to reach the President in time for signature. This bill has been reported favorably from the Committee on the Judiciary, and if there be no objection, I now demand the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CARUTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TERRITORY OF CIMARRON.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the memorial of citizens and of the Territorial council representing the settlers of what is called the Public Land Strip, praying for the organization of the territory of Cimarron. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Territories and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I present also two memorials of persons claiming to be delegates, which should take the same course.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They can be presented through the petition-box.

DIGEST OF RULES.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Printing, and ask its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 18, 1888.

Resolved, That 2,000 copies of the Digest of Rules for the first session of the Fiftieth Congress be printed for the use of the House.

The committee report as a substitute the following:

Resolved, That 2,500 copies of the Digest for the present session, prepared by Henry H. Smith, late Journal clerk, under the act of March 3, 1877, be printed and bound for the use of the House; the same to be printed under the direction of the Speaker and Clerk of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, if no gentleman desires to be heard on the subject, I move the previous question on the adoption of the substitute.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the adoption of the substitute.

The substitute was adopted, and the original resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TAX ON OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the table the resolution introduced by me some time since and refer it to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the resolution?

Mr. LAWLER. It is a resolution taking the tax off oleomargarine.

Several members objected.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I understand that all my colleague desires is to have the resolution taken from the table and referred to the appropriate committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the reference of the resolution indicated by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. LAWLER. If the House will allow me a word of explanation, I think there will be no objection. I introduced this resolution, which proposes not to interfere with the oleomargarine law, nor with the license fee of the wholesale or the retail dealer, but only to take off the 2 cents tax, which affects the consumer. I merely ask the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Ways and Means for its consideration; that is all. I introduced the resolution before the committees were appointed, and it was laid on the table until they should be appointed. Ever since the appointment of the committees I have been trying to get it up, and all I ask now is that it shall be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it go to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. PAYSON. I will ask my colleague [Mr. LAWLER] whether he is willing that it should go to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. LAWLER. I would rather have it laid on the table than sent to that committee.

INVESTIGATION OF CERTAIN TRUSTS.

Mr. BACON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar a resolution reported by the Committee on Manufactures as a substitute for a resolution of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] referred to that committee (House Miscellaneous Document No. 69).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution reported by the committee will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that certain individuals and corporations in the United States engaged in manufacturing, mining, or dealing in some of the necessaries of life have combined for the purpose of controlling or curtailing the production or supply of the same, and thereby increasing their price to the people of the country, which combinations are known as associations, trusts, pools, and like names, but are not incorporated under the laws of any State; and

Whereas such combinations not only injuriously affect commerce between the States, but impair the revenues of the United States as derived from its duties on imports: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures be, and the same is hereby, directed to inquire into the names, and number, and extent of such alleged combinations, under whatever name known, their methods of combination or doing business, their effect upon the prices of any of the necessaries of life to the people of the country, upon its internal or foreign commerce, and its revenues from import duties, together with any and all other matters relating to the same which may call for or suggest legislation by Congress, and report the same to the House with such recommendations as the said committee may agree upon. And for these purposes the Committee on Manufactures is authorized to sit during the sessions of the House, to employ a stenographer, to administer oaths, examine witnesses, compel the attendance of persons and the production of papers. And the expense of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, when this proposition was originally reported I objected to its immediate consideration for the reason that I did not think its language comprehensive enough to include an inquiry as to all "trusts" and "pools" which it might be desirable to investigate. These combinations are not peculiar to the United States. We have jurisdiction of inquiry only within the limits of the Union. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON], with whom I have conferred on this subject, has consented, as I have understood him, to amend this resolution so that the inquiry may embrace the "Standard Oil Company," the "Whisky Trust," and every organization in the nature of a "trust" or "pool," whether its operations relate to the necessaries of life or merely to the comfort of citizens in other particulars. [Laughter.]

This is a wide field, and if the Federal power can regulate these organizations, perhaps it might be useful to exercise the power of control. Not knowing, myself, how far our power in this regard may extend, I shall be glad to have a committee of this House appointed with the view of ascertaining whether we can adopt measures for the benefit of the people which the resolution presupposes to be desirable.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, this substitute was prepared by the Committee on Manufactures after conference with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] who introduced the original resolution, our intention being to put it in such form and language as would enable a committee of this House to examine into and lay before the House the facts with regard to such combinations as are referred to in the preamble. We believe it does now embrace all such combinations. It certainly was so intended. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], however, whose experience of course entitles his views to deference, believes that a change of language will make the proposition more certainly comprehensive. Understanding it to have been the purpose of the committee to embrace every such trust or combination which, owing to the fact that it is not incorporated, is not within the reach, perhaps, of the laws of any State, I see no objection to introducing into the resolution certain language which the gentleman has suggested. These alterations, as it seems to me, will not affect the purport of the resolution; but I desire to make the proposition conform to the gentleman's views, as I understand he is anxious to have all these subjects investigated.

I will state the changes which the gentleman has proposed. After the words "necessaries of life" in the preamble, the gentleman proposes to insert the words "and other products for sale;" so as to make the preamble read:

Whereas it is alleged that certain individuals and corporations in the United States engaged in manufacturing, mining, or dealing in some of the necessaries of life and other products for sale have combined, etc.

I understand the gentleman's criticism to be that the resolution in the form reported would not embrace the "Whisky Trust," the Standard Oil Company——

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to embrace also gas companies and all "trusts."

Mr. BACON. The gentleman wishes to include "trusts" of every description, and he suggests, as I understand, that some of the articles to which these "trusts" relate are not "necessaries of life." The committee, as I understand, see no objection to the changes which the gentleman proposes; and if he will send his amendments to the Clerk's desk, no objection will come from me, at any rate, to their insertion.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I understand the whole object of this resolution is to investigate these gigantic "trusts."

Mr. BACON. To investigate these "trusts," whether gigantic or small.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It may be proper to state that the committee was satisfied the "trusts" referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania were included in the proposition as reported.

Mr. RANDALL. It can do no harm to make the language plainer.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Of course the committee is perfectly willing such organizations should be specified; but we were certain they were not excluded.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman is certain they were not excluded; I want to be certain they are included. There are two amendments which I have suggested—one to the preamble and one to the resolution itself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the first amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the preamble so as to read:

"Whereas it is alleged that certain individuals and corporations in the United States engaged in manufacturing, mining, or dealing in some of the necessaries of life and other productions have combined for the purpose of controlling or curtailing the production or supply of the same," etc.

Mr. WEAVER. Would that include express companies?

Mr. BACON. No, sir; not as I understand it.

Mr. RAYNER. A number of these "trusts" are made up of different companies which, having been incorporated by different States, have entered into these combinations. Does this include such organizations?

Mr. BACON. It does, as we understand.

Mr. RAYNER. I think it excludes one of the very companies you ought to get at, the Standard Oil Company. I think that is excluded by the terms of the resolution.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Then I trust the language will be so amended as to include every such organization. That was the intention of the committee.

Mr. BRUMM. I hope the resolution will be amended so as to include the large anthracite-coal monopolies.

Mr. RAYNER. It does not include them now.

Mr. BRUMM. It ought to do so.

Mr. BACON. I think the House is under a misapprehension in regard to what this resolution contemplates. In the opinion of the committee, this House has no right to institute an investigation into the private affairs of any corporation formed under the laws of any State and transacting business solely within the limits of the State of which it is a corporation.

Mr. RAYNER. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BACON. Permit me to finish my statement.

Mr. RAYNER. It is in that connection.

Mr. BACON. In a moment. But the committee understand that where a combination or combinations have been formed, partly of private individuals and partly of corporations, which corporations are not incorporated in the same States and reach over State lines and engage in interstate commerce, and such combinations are not in the power of the State Legislature creating such corporations, they are therefore within the reach of the legislative power of this body, and for that reason, as it is without any question the right of this House to make this investigation, we have put in only those combinations not incorporated under the laws of any State, so that they can not refuse to come here and answer any question put to them nor shelter themselves under their State charters.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman from Maryland to strike out the words "any incorporated," as that would reach the result he has in view.

Mr. RAYNER. I ask whether corporations incorporated in the State of Pennsylvania, having the right to transact business under that incorporation in other States, and a number of States give that right, whether such corporations would be reached by this resolution?

Mr. BACON. Yes, they would be reached by the resolution if they are in combination with any other corporation.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to offer an amendment which I think will answer the purpose.

Mr. BACON. Gentlemen, one at a time. [Laughter.] I will answer every question as intelligently as I can, but I must answer them in their order.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, is there room there for another? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentlemen will retire to their seats and preserve order.

Mr. BACON. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER].

Mr. GUENTHER. I wish to ask whether you will have the power to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of contracts relating to these combinations?

Mr. BACON. That is embraced in the power granted by the resolution.

Mr. GUENTHER. Power to compel attendance of witnesses and to compel them to testify and produce papers.

Mr. BACON. The committee will have all the power the House has.

Mr. BRUMM. Would your resolution include a combination of corporations chartered in one State for, say, mining purposes, who combine not only with each other, but with individual mining proprietors whose collieries are in other States, and who also combine with carrying companies, although their charters may all be from one State, yet their rights extend to other States; would your resolution cover combinations of that kind?

Mr. BACON. If I understand the language of the resolution, it does; and it was so intended to do.

Mr. BRUMM. Then I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. MCADOO. Does it include combinations of foreign agents or agents of foreign manufactories in the United States to raise the price of imported articles? [Cries of "Louder!"] Will this inquiry reach a combination on the part of agents for the sale of foreign goods in the United States to raise the price of those foreign goods and to depress the price of domestic products?

Mr. BACON. Yes; I think it will.

Mr. MCADOO. Then I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to correct an impression which I think the chairman inadvertently made upon the House, and that is as to the right of Congress to get information on this subject. The gentleman seems to give out the impression that we had no right to seek information from corporations of a State doing business in such State. If it were a question of legislation it would be different, but as a question of information this House has a right to go anywhere within the jurisdiction of the United States, inquire of anybody or company or corporation as to the business he or it is doing—to get information of anybody or any corporation as to his or its action. We have done it in procuring the Census Report, a volume containing more information than was ever published by any government in the world, which I regard as a most useful publication and one reflecting great credit on our Government. In the matter of information, we have the right to ask these corporations what they are doing, how many men they employ, the character of their business, the price paid, etc. All these questions have been asked, by the authority of Congress, by the Census Office throughout all the States in the Union. Its agents have gone from house to house asking the ages of the children and of the members of each family. I therefore think we should strike out the words which have been indicated.

Mr. RAYNER. I have an amendment to offer.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand the gentleman from Maryland has an amendment to offer which accomplishes the object which I desire to accomplish. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BACON. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois I will say that while I have no doubt of the right of the House or any member of it, or of any member of the committee, to ask questions for information, I have nevertheless grave doubt of the right of the Government to compel answers to questions which do not in some way deal with matters in reference to which this House can legislate.

I do not understand that the author of this resolution or the committee that reported it have come into this House asking for any authority to go out and take a census. All they ask of the House is authority to compel the giving of such information as will come within what they believe to be the legitimate power of this House to legislate in regard to these pools and combinations; and in the resolution of inquiry which we ask the House to adopt here we have restricted its operation in accordance with what, in the judgment of the committee, and as we are advised by other gentlemen who are learned in the law and experienced in the practice of this House, is within the full power of the House to grant.

I yield now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] for a question.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman from New York has practically answered the question I desired to ask. Still I wish to call his attention to this point: Suppose the investigation is ordered by the House, and the committee find that there has been a combination and a conspiracy between a corporation in one State and certain citizens of that State for the purpose of advancing the price of certain commodities which enter into the daily consumption of the people; do I understand the gentleman from New York to claim, in view of that condition of affairs, that there is any power vested in this House, by authority of the Constitution or laws, to remedy that abuse inside of the State limits? Do I understand him to claim that Congress has any jurisdiction or that there is on the statute-books of the United States any law that makes such a combination or conspiracy a wrong against which you could proceed for redress? Or if you ascertain the existence of such a combination, would you have to proceed to redress the evils by some other method? And if so, I ask the gentleman to tell me by what method. Or if you find such a state of facts as the resolution alleges to exist, do you propose to go into the State courts to remedy the abuse? And, in fine, let me ask, what has Congress to do with the question at all? Are not the States amply able to take care of themselves and protect the people within their limits against that combination or that conspiracy if it exists? If they are not, sir, I want to know where your law or where the Constitution gives you authority to take the step you here propose, and if by the passage of this resolution you are not usurping to yourself an authority that is not delegated to you under the Constitution? That is the question.

Mr. HOPKINS. Let me say to the gentleman from New York, this resolution is simply to investigate as to the facts alleged. After those facts are gathered by the committee they will be accompanied by a report, and it is then for the House to determine what action it will take upon that report.

Mr. SCOTT. I beg leave to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that we made an investigation by a select committee, which was authorized to go to St. Louis, Mo., and to report to the Congress then in session on the great strike and labor trouble prevailing in that region. What did that investigation amount to?

Mr. HOPKINS. Let me answer the gentleman by another question: Because one criminal is acquitted, is that a reason for ceasing to try to enforce the criminal laws?

Mr. SCOTT. I am not trying to acquit any criminal. [Laughter.]

Mr. BACON. In answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I can only say that it seems to me the suggestions he makes in regard to the constitutional limitations and powers of the House over this subject will more properly apply to the legislation which the House may undertake to enact after the resolution now presented has been enforced. But here is a crying abuse, something that everybody understands, which the newspapers tell us daily is committing a serious injury to the best interests of the people of the country. It has been held by the State courts to be beyond their power of correction. The purpose of this resolution of the gentleman from Illinois, as I understand it, is to ascertain the accuracy of this information, and when the facts are laid before Congress for it to apply such remedy as may be within its legislative power to apply. That is the purpose of the investigation and the reason it seems wise to the committee to adopt it.

I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois who introduced the resolution.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a misunderstanding as to the meaning and intent of this resolution. I did not intend at the time I drew and introduced the resolution that its effect should be to appoint a "smelling committee" to invade the borders of the States and investigate the affairs of the people doing business within State lines under State laws and charters. The resolution simply recites that there is a large class of trusts and combinations which, by reason of a monopoly and by combination, can increase the price of certain of the necessaries of life, mentioning particularly coal, sugar, and other necessaries of life.

The object of the resolution was to ascertain, if possible, what effect these combinations of trusts have had upon the prices of these necessaries of life; whether or not, by reason of the tariff, they are thus enabled to place a greater price upon them, and that is certainly a subject within the jurisdiction of Congress. There are some industrious and energetic men in this country who would like to have a corner upon sunshine and levy a tariff of a thousand dollars each on every ray of foreign sunlight.

The tariff laws, we believe in Chicago, are sometimes perverted from their legitimate purposes, and are turned against the people for the benefit of those who should not have such privileges.

Mr. NELSON. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me a question?

Mr. MASON. Yes, sir.

Mr. NELSON. Have you any doubt in your own mind but that the tariff laws indirectly co-operate to aid these trusts?

Mr. MASON. I will say in response to the gentleman from Minnesota that I have no doubt there is a class of trusts and a class of men who take advantage of the tariff laws. We who believe in a high protective tariff think there should be some way to avoid taking advantage of the laws and perverting them from their proper purpose. But so far as I am concerned, expressing also, I believe, the sentiments of the people of my district, I presume, if there is a proper way of meeting that, this committee can report a proper bill, but if there is no way to protect the people from these exactions of trusts except the revision of the tariff, so far as I am concerned I am ready to vote for that now.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman permit me a single question?

Mr. MASON. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think this resolution speaks of a trust which has raised the price of anthracite coal.

Mr. MASON. I think not. It recites that a sugar trust has raised the price of sugar. The original resolution has been amended since perhaps the gentleman from Maine saw it.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is there any duty imposed on anthracite coal?

Mr. MASON. No, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then this has nothing directly to do with the tariff?

Mr. MASON. I think the gentleman is right in that statement, if anthracite coal is included in the resolution.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania seems to be very anxious to include anthracite coal, and there is no tariff on that article.

Mr. BRUMM. Is it not true the greatest monopolies we have in this country are the monopolies of such things as can not be produced abroad or come into competition with American products? First, there is coal-oil. We never import coal-oil. Next, there is the Western Union Telegraph monopoly; that can not be interfered with by foreign competition. Next, there is anthracite coal. We have got all the anthracite coal in the world, at least of this peculiar kind, and there is never a ton of it imported, and there is no tariff on it. What I have mentioned will include about all the greatest monopolies we have got.

Now, if there is no tariff on them and no competition with foreign producers, how can the tariff in that sense have any effect on these monopolies?

Mr. MASON. I do not think it can have any effect on them. I have been under the impression that this body has no jurisdiction over the affairs of States. If the gentleman wishes to amend this resolution, or to offer some other to take in a larger field for observation and examination, I have no objection. But this merely looks to one relief.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. MASON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If the tariff has nothing to do with these trusts, why drag it into the debate upon this resolution?

Mr. MASON. If the gentleman will consider for a moment he will perceive that I have said nothing of that kind. But if he had paid attention he would have comprehended that the tariff on sugar has a good deal to do with allowing the sugar trust to increase prices.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Perhaps I might understand that better if it were explained. But I will agree with the gentleman to repeal the duty on sugar, if he wants to do that.

Mr. MASON. If the duty on sugar raises the price of sugar so that producers and dealers can sell it at a given price, if you take off the duty then this trust can not exist except by taking in by a syndicate all the sugar products of the world.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MASON. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. Do you not consider that the price of sugar, like that of most other commodities, is regulated by the natural law of demand and supply?

On what may be considered the average grade of sugar of 90 degrees the duty is 2 cents; and during the existence of that duty of 2 cents sugar has been lower in price than at any time in the history of the country.

Mr. MASON. Then, would the gentleman argue, if the people of this country take off the $60,000,000 they pay in duty on sugar the sugar would be higher in price?

Mr. RANDALL. I think the price would be regulated by the natural law of demand and supply. As I have stated, the 2 cents tax has not raised the price, but lowered it.

Mr. MASON. Then I do not see how the sugar trust can exist——

Mr. RANDALL. I know nothing about the sugar trust, and I care nothing about it. But I can state the business reason why sugar is higher than six months ago; and that is because the excessive production in the four great sugar-producing countries of Europe and Cuba, the United States, and elsewhere was so great that they could not sell all that was produced.

Now, it has come to the knowledge of these people that there must be a decrease in the production of sugar, and we are therefore informed that the sugar product this year will be about three hundred thousand tons less than it was last year, and the effect of that has been to raise the price of sugar about a cent a pound.

Mr. MASON. If the "sugar trust," which everybody knows has been formed within the past twelve months, has not increased the price of sugar, will the gentleman explain the object of the organization of the trust?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not care what the object is, but if it is to get a higher price for sugar, the very best way to defeat it is to call public attention to the subject in the manner provided for in this resolution.

Mr. MASON. Very well; you, then, are for the resolution. I am much obliged to you.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, may we have the resolution reported once more?

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to propose an amendment to the pending amendment.

Mr. BACON. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. RAYNER. I am heartily in favor, Mr. Speaker, of the resolution, but my opinion about it is that it does not go far enough, because it excludes from its operation the very sort of trusts that ought to be included under it. By its terms, the resolution expressly excludes every corporation incorporated by a State. In other words, if there is a corporation incorporated by the State of Maryland that has combined with another corporation, incorporated by the State of Pennsylvania, for the purpose of "pooling" or otherwise controlling the market, and raising prices, such a combination, by the terms of this resolution, is excluded from its operation. Therefore, I say the resolution does not go far enough. It has been very well said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] that the question of tariff is only an incidental question in reference to this resolution. There are many corporations that have combined together in relation to which the question of tariff does not arise at all. Take, for example, the case of the Western Union Telegraph Company, which has combined with or swallowed up every other telegraph company in the country for the purpose of controlling prices. Take what is probably the most important case that will come under the consideration of this committee, the Standard Oil Company. What is the Standard Oil Company? It is not a combination of individuals at all. It is a combination of different corporations, each one of which has been created by the sovereignty of its particular State, and which has combined with other corporations to go into that "trust."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RAYNER. Will the gentleman give me a little more time?

Mr. BACON. I can not.

Mr. RAYNER. Just one minute more.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. BACON. Then I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. RAYNER. Take the case that is now agitating the public mind to a large extent, the case of the Reading coal strike. The Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company is a corporation created by the State of Pennsylvania. The physical termini of the road are within that State, but it ships its products all over the country. That company has entered into a conspiracy to strike down labor in the Schuylkill region and to raise the price of coal, yet it is excluded from the operation of this resolution, because the resolution expressly says that it is not to include any corporation created by a State. If you are going to have an investigation of these pools and combinations, you should include them all.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman is mistaken about the scope of the resolution.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the question. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] proposes an amendment to the pending amendment, which will be read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in the last paragraph all after the word "names," which occurs in next to the last line of said paragraph.

A MEMBER. How will it read as amended?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment strikes out the words "but are not incorporated under the laws of any State."

The Chair is inclined to think that this is not an amendment to the pending amendment. It does not cohere with the pending amendment. The gentleman can withdraw his amendment now and offer it later. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maryland hereafter for that purpose. There is one pending amendment, and the only proposition in the nature of an amendment admissible now is an amendment to that.

Mr. BACON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to call the attention of my friend from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] to the language of this preamble. The language to which he objects is part of the preamble, not a part of the resolution, and upon an examination of that language he will find that it is not subject to the criticism which he makes upon it. It does not exclude corporations that are individual members of such trusts; it simply recites that the trusts, pools, combines or combinations, or whatever names they may be known under, are not incorporated, but it does not exclude such combinations whether the individual members of them are corporations or individuals. I do not think, therefore, that the resolution is open to the criticism of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. RAYNER. Of course the preamble does not make the law; I know that very well. But if the gentleman will look at the resolving part he will find this:

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures be, and the same is hereby, directed to inquire into the names, number, and extent of such alleged combinations, etc.

Now, what are "such alleged combinations?" "Such alleged combinations" in the preamble exclude the very class of corporations which it is most desirable to reach.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I do not understand, Mr. Speaker, that these alleged combinations or trusts are incorporated at all.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, yes.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. They are voluntary associations of individuals and corporations. The individual members of these combinations or trusts are incorporated, but the combinations or trusts themselves are not incorporated.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We have no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will have read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], which is the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the second line of the preamble, after the word "manufacturing," insert "producing."
In the third line, after the word "life," insert "and other productions."
In line 5 of the resolution, after the word "life," insert "and of all such productions."

Mr. DUNN. I desire to offer an amendment to that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the first of the amendments just read is, properly speaking, the only one pending. The amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] will have to be made to that amendment.

Mr. DUNN. I want to make an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. McCREARY. I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. My proposition is to strike out the preamble. I see no reason for a preamble which simply recites that it is "alleged" by certain individuals that certain facts exist. What we want is simply to adopt the resolution; it is not necessary to state what is "alleged" by certain individuals. Therefore, as a substitute for the pending amendments, I move to strike out the preamble so that we may then adopt the resolution.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If the preamble were struck out, the whole resolution would have to be modified.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A substitute can not be voted on till the text is perfected.

Mr. BACON. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, this discussion has reached a point where all gentlemen desiring to express themselves on the subject-matter of the resolution have done so, and I therefore move the previous question.

Mr. LYNCH. I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York has demanded the previous question.

Mr. GUENTHER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order now to ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended for one hour so that he may parcel out that hour to other members who wish to address the House on this question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York, having the floor, has demanded the previous question.

Mr. GUENTHER. Then I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended for one hour.

Several members objected.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We do not want this thing talked to death.

Mr. GUENTHER. I have no purpose of that kind—just the contrary. I want a resolution adopted which will amount to something.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The committee think this resolution very comprehensive and effective.

Mr. GUENTHER. If witnesses refuse to appear or to produce papers when called for there is no power to compel them under this resolution.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. The committee can come to the House and obtain the necessary power.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I think the resolution in its present form is sufficient.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to have the Chair state whether the previous question, if now ordered, would prevent the House from voting on the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HATCH. That is pending.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to know from the Chair whether it is pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not pending.

Mr. RANDALL. Then the previous question should be voted down, so that the House may have an opportunity to vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

A MEMBER. Let it be considered as pending by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland will be considered as pending. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BACON. I now call the previous question on the resolution and pending amendments, and I insist on a vote.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order to move to recommit this resolution, with the amendments, to the Committee on Manufactures?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Oh, no.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. It must be apparent to the House that every member has some amendment which he desires to offer. Now, it seems to me, if the resolution is to be adopted, it ought to be properly considered, and should be made broad enough to cover all the subjects it is intended to embrace. The only way of accomplishing this is to recommit the resolution, with the amendments, and let the Committee on Manufactures report a resolution in proper shape.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois has the right to make the motion he has indicated.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I move, then, to recommit the resolution, with the amendments, to the Committee on Manufactures, so that they may report a new resolution to the House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move to amend that motion by adding the instructions which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And if the said committee report, by bill or otherwise, a provision looking to the regulation of the business of companies formed and hitherto controlled and regulated by State laws, passed by the Legislatures of the several States of the Union, then that said committee report a proper eulogy and epitaph commemorative of the life, public service, and death of the ancient doctrine of State's rights, with the time and circumstances of the abandonment of said doctrine by the Democratic party.

[Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. I make a point of order on the amendment that it is not germane.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BRUMM. I move to amend by striking out all of the first line of the resolution after the word "resolved," and inserting the following:

That a special committee of the House be appointed, and.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. Is not the question on ordering the previous question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the motion to recommit.

Several MEMBERS. What is the question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] to recommit, to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] moves an amendment.

Mr. BRUMM. I call for the reading of the motion as it will be if amended.

The Clerk read the motion as it would be if amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. Is it in order now to substitute the Judiciary Committee for the Committee on Manufactures?

Mr. RANDALL. This committee has originated it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would not be germane to the pending amendment.

The question recurred on Mr. BRUMM'S amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. DUNN. I move to strike out "Manufactures" and insert "Judiciary."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LYNCH. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting in the second line of the preamble, after the word "engaged," the words "as common carriers or."

Mr. RAYNER. Let that amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BACON. Is this an amendment of the resolution or of the motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Of the motion to recommit.

Mr. RAYNER. Read it as it will be if amended.

The amendment was read as it would be if amended.

Mr. BACON. I now demand the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has not the floor.

Mr. HOLMES. I ask the gentleman to withdraw it.

Mr. LYNCH's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I demand the previous question on my motion to recommit.

Mr. BACON. I hope that will be done.

Mr. BRUMM. I wish to include, merely, "internal revenue."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion to recommit was disagreed to.

Mr. BACON. I now demand the previous question on the adoption of the resolution and amendments.

Mr. GUENTHER. Is it time to offer a substitute?

Mr. BURROWS. If this resolution prevail will it not be in order for the House at any time to enlarge the scope of this inquiry? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question first recurs upon the amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "manufacturing," in the second line of the preamble, insert "producing."

Mr. RANDALL. I hope that will be agreed to.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the third line of the preamble, after the word "life," insert "and other productions."

Mr. BACON. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the fifth line of the resolution, after the word "life," insert "and all productions."

Mr. BACON. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAYNER. I move, in the first paragraph, after the word "names," to strike out "which are not incorporated under the law of any other State."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER. Let the resolution be read as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has been read.

The resolution, as amended, was then adopted.

Mr. BACON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution, as amended, was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH COX.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move, by unanimous consent, to discharge the Committee on Invalid Pensions from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2131) for the relief of Joseph Cox, administrator of Charles Pasters, deceased, and to put it upon its passage at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas Charles Pasters, of Randolph County, Indiana, was, on the 12th day of January, A. D. 1884, granted a pension, for which a certificate was then and there duly issued to him; that there was due said Pasters on said certificate the sum of $493.73; that a voucher for said sum was duly executed by said Pasters, in his lifetime, and returned to the proper United States pension agent at Indianapolis, Ind.; and

Whereas said Pasters, on the 25th day of January, A. D. 1884, and before he received the check for said sum, died, leaving no widow or child surviving him; and

Whereas afterwards, to wit, on the 31st day of January, A. D. 1884, the United States pension agent aforesaid issued a check for the sum aforesaid payable to said Pasters; and

Whereas said check was delivered to Joseph Cox, who was the duly appointed administrator of said Pasters, as a part of his (said Pasters's) estate; and

Whereas the said Cox, as such administrator, under the direction of the circuit court of said Randolph County, applied, in good faith, the proceeds of said check, to wit, the sum aforesaid, to the payment of the funeral expenses and other indebtedness of said Pasters; and

Whereas the United States has brought suit against the said Joseph Cox to recover the sum aforesaid: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That said Joseph Cox be, and he is hereby, fully acquitted and discharged from all liability to the United States on account of the collection of the check aforesaid, or the appropriation thereof, or of its proceeds, or of the sum of the $493.73 so allowed said Charles Pasters, deceased, as aforesaid.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I wish to say that the Pension Office is in favor of this bill, and the suit is suspended to enable me to get this relief.

There was no objection, and the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill; and it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask unanimous consent to present a bill for reference.

Mr. BLAND. Very well.

SALES OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PAYSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 5934) to confirm certain sales of public lands, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

The motion of Mr. BLAND was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1699) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds to Albert V. Conway, substituted trustee, for certain registered United States bonds redeemed or assigned by the Government upon forged assignments; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 1700) authorizing the Librarian of Congress to purchase "Townsend's Library of National, State, and Individual Records, comprising a collection of historical records concerning the origin, progress, and consequences of the late civil war;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 1701) authorizing the construction of a high wagon-bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 1702) granting a pension to Joanna W. Turner; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 1703) for the relief of Reuben Ragland; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 1704) to increase and grant arrears of pension to George H. Lawrence; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER introduced a bill (S. 1705) to provide for continuing the grading and paving of the approaches to the national cemetery near Danville, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 1706) for the relief of Charles Gallagher, of New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 1707) to provide for the issue of patents to certain persons for donation claims under the act approved September 27, 1850, commonly known as the "donation law;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. TELLER introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 43) providing for the printing of decisions of the Department of the Interior regarding public lands and pensions, for sale; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Printing.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. GIBSON, it was

Ordered, That the papers in the matter of the claim of the Union National Bank of Louisiana be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims, no adverse report having been made on the same.

On motion of Mr. GIBSON, it was

Ordered, That all the depositions, proofs, documents, and papers of every kind filed by W. W. Handlin, of New Orleans, relating to his claim against the Government of Nicaragua, with the Senate Committee to Inquire into all Claims of Citizens of the United States against the Government of Nicaragua, and now in possession of the Senate, may be withdrawn by Mr. W. W. Handlin upon his filing his receipt therefor.

JOSEPH COX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further concurrent or other resolutions?

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not rise to offer a resolution under that order of business, but there is a bill here from the other House, for the relief of the administrator of a soldier who has been sued upon an account, which I should be glad to have taken up, with the consent of the Senate, and acted upon at this time, if that be in order. It is a bill for the relief of Joseph Cox, administrator of Charles Pasters, deceased, and is now lying on the desk. It is recommended by the Pension Bureau, and there is an urgency in the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 2131) for the relief of Joseph Cox, administrator of Charles Pasters, deceased, was read twice by its title.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. VOORHEES. I will explain it. Pasters was a pensioner entitled to some four hundred and odd dollars, and the certificate was sent to Indianapolis for its payment. Before he received the money he died, and it went into the hands of his administrator, who expended the sum in his necessary funeral expenses; but having no way to settle that, he has been sued in the United States court. This bill is to acquit him of liability, he having honorably expended this money which was due this man who died before he got it himself. That is the explanation, and on that I think the bill ought to pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLAIR. I reserve the right to object if it leads to debate.

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes; of course, if it leads to trouble it may go over.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Whereas Charles Pasters, of Randolph County, Indiana, was, on the 12th day of January, A. D. 1881, granted a pension, for which a certificate was then and there duly issued to him; that there was due said Pasters on said certificate the sum of $183.73; that a voucher for said sum was duly executed by said Pasters, in his lifetime, and returned to the proper United States pension agent at Indianapolis, Ind.; and

Whereas said Pasters, on the 25th day of January, A. D. 1881, and before he received the check for said sum, died, leaving no widow or child surviving him; and

Whereas afterwards, to wit, on the 31st day of January, A. D. 1881, the United States pension agent aforesaid issued a check for the sum aforesaid payable to said Pasters; and

Whereas said check was delivered to Joseph Cox, who was the duly appointed administrator of said Pasters, as a part of his (said Pasters's) estate; and

Whereas the said Cox, as such administrator, under the direction of the circuit court of said Randolph County, applied, in good faith, the proceeds of said check, to wit, the sum aforesaid, to the payment of the funeral expenses and other indebtedness of said Pasters; and

Whereas the United States has brought suit against the said Joseph Cox to recover the sum aforesaid: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That said Joseph Cox be, and he is hereby, fully acquitted and discharged from all liability to the United States on account of the collection of the check aforesaid, or the appropriation thereof, or of its proceeds, or of the sum of the $183.73 so allowed said Charles Pasters, deceased, as aforesaid.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to have the Senator explain what was illegal in that transaction. I did not catch it.

Mr. VOORHEES. There was nothing illegal, but the money, instead of passing into the hands of the pensioner, passed into the hands of his administrator, the pensioner having died before it reached him.

Mr. DAWES. How does the United States have a claim on him under those circumstances?

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not know. I know they have sued the administrator, and I know that this measure will stop the suit and end the trouble.

Mr. HOAR. I can answer my colleague's question.

Mr. VOORHEES. I should be very glad if the Senator would.

Mr. HOAR. Precisely that case occurred in our State. The Pension Office held—I suppose correctly; I have not investigated it—that one of its checks payable to the soldier does not pass to the executor or administrator or legal representative. A case arose a year ago in Norfolk County, Massachusetts, in which the administrator collected several thousand dollars and paid it all out for the expenses of the last sickness and the debts of the soldier, the intestate. Then he was called and had to pay the money back to the Government, and he is here now with a bill to be reimbursed that money from the Treasury. He satisfied himself that he could not defend against the claim of the United States. I have not myself examined the foundation of that opinion, but I suppose it is correct.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is satisfactory.

Mr. DAWES. My query was why the check did not belong to the administrator.

Mr. COCKRELL. In due course of law it should.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think we have heard a very satisfactory statement.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. BLAIR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. ALLISON. I was going to ask to take up the bill I reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from New Hamphire.

Mr. ALLISON. So I observed.

Mr. BLAIR. I give way for the purpose of the consideration of the Senator's bill if it does not lead to debate.

Mr. QUAY. I ask leave to present a petition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is not yet concluded. The Chair will receive the petition.

PENSIONS FOR DEAFNESS.

Mr. QUAY. I present a petition adopted by ex-soldiers, sailors, and marines at the headquarters of the Silent Army of Deaf Soldiers, Sailors, and Marines, Indianapolis, Ind., praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 509, authorizing an increase of pensions in certain cases. In this connection I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill to which the petition refers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting the motion the Chair will receive other morning business, if there be any. [A pause.] If there be no further morning business that order is closed.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask to take up——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania has been recognized.

Mr. ALLISON. I beg pardon; I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 509) authorizing an increase in pensions in certain cases.

Mr. QUAY. I will withdraw the motion for the purpose of enabling the Senator from Iowa to take up his bill, with the understanding that this bill shall take precedence after that bill has gone through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not recognize any understanding between Senators. If the Senator from Pennsylvania withdraws his motion the Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. ALLISON. I move, then, to proceed to the consideration of House bill 4881.

Mr. BLAIR. Before the Senator proceeds, as there seems to be such a general desire to consider bills on the Calendar during the morning hour, I, perhaps, ought not to press the motion which I have suggested against what seems to be the general will of Senators, and I will waive it until the school bill has its right in regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the agricultural-experiment-stations bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I object. The bill was reported this morning, and Senators ought to have an opportunity to consider it before it is called up for final action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware objects, and the bill goes over, under the rule.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Calendar.

Mr. QUAY. I renew my motion.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I ask that the bill be printed with the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

Mr. QUAY. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 509.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 509) authorizing an increase in pensions in certain cases.

Mr. QUAY. That is a bill which is recommended, and which was recommended formerly, by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL. We can not hear a word on this side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Business will be suspended until order is restored in the Chamber.

Mr. QUAY. I was saying simply that this bill was one which sometime ago was recommended by the Commissioner of Pensions, I think three years ago, and it has been again recommended in his recent report for the past year. Its effect is simply to increase the pensions of those totally deaf from $13 per month to $30 per month. It provides further that in case of partial deafness the Commissioner of Pensions shall have absolute discretion in rating the amount of the pension. The Committee on Pensions reported the bill unanimously.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] certainly understands the disability which total deafness produces. If the Senator from Missouri were stricken to-day with it, he would be utterly disqualified for his duties in the Senate, of which he is so valuable a member, and there is not an officer of the Senate, from page to President, who could discharge his duty. The Senator from Missouri would not employ a clerk so totally disabled in his law office; no merchant and no business man would employ a book-keeper or salesman so disabled; and no employer of manual labor, other matters being equal, would employ a deaf workman.

The bill, it seems to me, is just and fair, and, having received the indorsement of the Department and the unanimous indorsement of the committee, it ought to pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the present rate?

Mr. QUAY. The present rate is $13 per month. The increase is $17 per month. The number of those affected by the increase for total deafness is 275. What the increase of expense to the Treasury will be, owing to the rating for partial deafness, I am not able to say; but it is fair to expect that the Commissioner of Pensions, who has behaved wisely and liberally in his office, will discharge his duty properly in establishing the rate, and that the entire expense for partial deafness will not exceed that for total. I would say that the entire increased expense to the Treasury can not probably exceed $100,000 a year.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I understand the bill simply changes——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One moment. The Senate has not yet decided to proceed to the consideration of the bill. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that hereafter all persons on the pension-rolls of the United States, or who may hereafter be thereon, drawing pensions on account of loss of hearing, shall be entitled to receive, in lieu of the amount now paid in case of such disability, the sum of $30, in cases of total deafness, and such proportion thereof in cases of partial deafness as the Secretary of the Interior may deem equitable; the amount paid to be determined by the degree of disability existing in each case.

Mr. COCKRELL. This changes the existing law so as to allow a rating from $30 down—$30 for total disability, and then down according to the degree of disability, whereas under the existing law the rating is from $13 down.

Mr. QUAY. Yes, sir; the rate is fixed absolutely at $30 for total deafness, and it is left within the discretion of the Commissioner of Pensions as to partial deafness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. QUAY January 17, 1888, as follows:

The Committee an Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 509, beg leave to report the same with a favorable recommendation, and in this connection would call attention to the fact that the increase authorized by this bill was recommended by the Commissioner of Pensions in his reports for 1885, 1886, and 1887. In his report for the latter year he uses the following language:

"I desire to renew my recommendations made in my reports for 1885 and 1886 as to additional legislation in behalf of those who are afflicted with deafness from the service. The present rate is not commensurate with the degree of disability resulting, and I respectfully recommend that a total of $30 per month for total deafness (with intermediate grades, to be determined according to the degree of disability) be fixed by law. The number of applicants under this provision is and would be very small, and the amount to be disbursed inconsiderable."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the bill relates only to cases of deafness, I suggest that the title be changed to indicate that. If it refers only to deafness, the title should show it.

Mr. QUAY. There is no objection to an amendment of the title.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing an increase of pensions in cases of deafness."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 44, being the bill (S. 495) for the relief of Albert H. Emery. I desire to state that this bill has passed the Senate half a dozen times, and passed both branches at the last session, but reached the President too late for his examination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. PLUMB. Is the amount named in this bill the amount agreed on by the two Houses?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will let us take up the Calendar. We shall soon reach that case.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Kansas put me a question which I answered inadvertently, according to the best of my belief. I would rather investigate carefully before I give that answer as final. I will let it remain for a moment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the Calendar in regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

Mr. TELLER. Are these bills called up subject to objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be subject to objection.

Mr. TELLER. There are a number of them that will lead to extensive debate, and it does not seem worth while to call them up.

Mr. COCKRELL. They can be objected to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar of general orders will be in order until 2 o'clock, each bill being subject to objection, and each Senator being entitled to speak for five minutes and only once on each bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask to take up a bill that was considered here and laid over at the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], to offer an amendment. It came up in due order, and is standing on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the Calendar in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is a bill partly finished, and we may not reach it. I hope the Senator will not object, because it is a bill which if passed at all ought to be passed promptly.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the title of it?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is Order of Business 27, being the bill (S. 1029) to amend an act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, etc., approved March 3, 1887. There is no controversy about it.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are a hundred bills on the Calendar about which there is no controversy.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. That will almost necessarily lead to discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1029) to amend an act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, etc., approved March 3, 1887. If there be objection——

Mr. COCKRELL. I object, and call for the Calendar. Let us have the regular order. That bill will be reached in a short time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will let the Calendar run along, but I want this bill acted on this morning. Perhaps we may reach it. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

PORTLAND COLLECTION DISTRICT LIMITS.

The bill (S. 24) to extend the limits of the port of Portland as a port of entry was announced as first in order on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon whether the points named in this bill were named in the act of 1880 and excluded under the option permitted by the act to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. DOLPH. This simply extends the port of entry across the river, which is only a quarter or a third of a mile, so as to allow steamers to load and unload at the railroad wharves.

Mr. MANDERSON. Then it is not to extend the privilege of transportation to these points?

Mr. DOLPH. Nothing of that kind. It is only to extend the limits of the port so that vessels may unload on the other side of the river where the railroad is.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no occasion for the second section of the bill. I move to strike it out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect from and after the date of its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORTS IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The bill (S. 25) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to extend the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, to the ports of Seattle and Tacoma, Wash.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORT OF DELIVERY AT PORT ANGELES.

The bill (S. 28) to create a port of delivery at Port Angeles, in the district of Puget Sound, Washington Territory, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND SALES IN CALIFORNIA.

The bill (S. 418) granting to the State of California 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the cash sales of public lands in said State was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

CALIFORNIA SCHOOL LANDS.

The bill (S. 419) to enable the State of California to take lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections found to be mineral lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like that bill to go over. I want to look at it. I remember we had the subject up once before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over under objection.

W. H. TIBBITS.

The bill (S. 190) for the relief of W. H. Tibbits, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that it appears from the records of the General

Land Office that W. H. Tibbits did in good faith, on the 4th of January, 1872, make homestead entry of the northeast quarter of section 21, township 9 north, range 11 east, in the State of Nebraska, and resided thereon for the full period of time required by existing statutes, and improved and cultivated the same; and that the land was patented to the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad at a time subsequent to the homestead entry, and sold by the company to other parties. The bill therefore authorizes Tibbits, or his legal representatives, to locate 160 acres of any of the public lands, subject to private entry at $1.25 per acre, of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

CLAIMS OF MISSOURI.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 473) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be examined certain vouchers filed, or to be filed, by the State of Missouri, or her agent or agents, for sums claimed to be due from the Government of the United States on account of payments made by said State since April 22, 1882, to the officers and enlisted men of her militia forces for military services rendered to the United States in the suppression of the rebellion, as evidenced by the proper pay-rolls heretofore filed with, examined, and accepted by the Government of the United States, and to report to Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was there any report in that case?

Mr. COCKRELL. A full report embracing the whole case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report submitted by Mr. COCKRELL, December 20, 1887:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred Senate bill 473, have duly considered the same, and submit the following report:

A bill precisely similar to the present one was favorably reported by this committee and passed by the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses and was favorably reported in the House of Representatives, but no final action was taken in either Congress.

During the late war the State of Missouri paid, laid out, and expended large sums of money for the United States in enrolling, equipping, and provisioning militia forces to aid in suppressing the rebellion.

On April 17, 1866, Congress passed an act entitled "An act to reimburse the State of Missouri for moneys expended for the United States in enrolling, equipping, and provisioning militia forces to aid in suppressing the rebellion," approved April 17, 1866.

Under said act the United States reimbursed and paid to the State of Missouri the sum of $7,220,827.33, and received and had filed in the Treasury Department the pay-rolls and vouchers showing the expenditures and their payment, in whole or in part, by said State. At the time this reimbursement was made there were large sums due from State, incurred and assumed by said State, but not then actually paid by the State, and consequently not reimbursed. Afterwards said State paid the greater part of said sum, and Congress passed an act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to examine the evidence of payments made by the State of Missouri since April 17, 1866, to the officers and privates of the militia forces of said State for military services actually performed in the suppression of the rebellion, in full concert and co-operation with the authorities of the United States, and subject to their orders, and to make report thereof to Congress," approved January 27, 1879.

Under this act the Secretary of the Treasury made the examination and reported to Congress April 24, 1882 (Executive Document No. 134, House of Representatives, Forty-seventh Congress, first session), recommending the payment to the State of Missouri of the sum of $234,594.10 on the fourth installment, as a reimbursement to said State of expenditures so made. And said sum was duly appropriated and paid to said State.

The rolls and vouchers filed by said State, and now in the Treasury Department, show that there still remained some amounts due from and incurred by said State which had not been paid by said State at the date of the last adjustment by the Treasury Department, on April 22, 1882, and which were consequently not reimbursed to said State.

On March 22, 1883, the General Assembly of the State of Missouri passed an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of certain claims against this State for military service rendered during the late civil war, as shown by the pay-rolls delivered to the General Government by the Stevenson commission in January, 1867, and for the collection of any money thus expended from the Government of the United States, and to appropriate money therefor," approved March 22, 1883. Under this law any person holding a claim against the State of Missouri for military service during the late war, which claim appears on the "record of unpaid claims" in the office of the adjutant-general of Missouri, "as well as on the pay-rolls of Missouri military organizations, now on file in the Treasury Department of the United States," and which claim has not been paid by the State or audited by the State military commission created under authority of the law of March 19, 1874, was authorized to file the same in the office of the adjutant-general of the State within nine months from the date of said act, and if not so presented to be forever barred. The nine months have elapsed, and all such claims have been presented or are now barred.

In adjusting such claims the adjutant-general of Missouri was required "to apply to the Third Auditor of the Treasury Department of the United States for a statement of the exact amount, if anything, shown by the pay-rolls on file in said Department to be due to said claimant after deducting all proper payments and stoppages appearing on said rolls or the records of said Department," before auditing or allowing any such claim.

The adjutant-general of Missouri has audited the claims so presented, and the State now seeks reimbursement of the amounts so audited and paid. This bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to examine such claims for such payments by the State since April 22, 1882, and to report the result of such examination to Congress for its further action.

In the last Congress the Committee on Military Affairs received from the Treasury Department the following communications upon said similar bill:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 23, 1884.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant, inclosing for consideration copy of bill (S. 940) 'to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be examined certain vouchers filed, or to be filed, by the State of Missouri, or her agent or agents, for sums claimed to be due from the Government of the United States on account of payments made by said State since April 22, 1882, to the officers and enlisted men of her militia forces for military services rendered to the United States in the suppression of the rebellion, as evidenced by the proper pay-rolls heretofore filed with, examined, and accepted by the Government of the United States, and to report to Congress.'

"In reply I inclose herewith copy of a report in the matter, dated the 19th instant, from the Second Comptroller of the Treasury, to whom your letter, with its inclosure, has been referred.

"Very respectfully,

"H. F. FRENCH, Acting Secretary.

"Hon. F. M. COCKRELL,
"United States Senate.

"SECOND COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
"Washington, D. C., January 19, 1884.

"SIR: In compliance with your direction of the 15th instant, I have the honor to report in relation to Senate bill 940, herewith inclosed, that the act of April 17, 1866 (14 Stat., p. 38), created a commission to examine and report upon claims of the State of Missouri similar to the claims mentioned in the inclosed Senate bill.

"The committee reported, claims embraced in the report were audited and payment made, and the act was held to be no longer operative.

"An act was passed January 27, 1879 (20 Stat., 266), authorizing the presentation of similar claims paid by the State of Missouri subsequent to April 17, 1866, directly to the Treasury Department, and claims thus presented have been audited and payment made, in pursuance of a report of the Third Auditor and Second Comptroller, which was transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury on April 22, 1882; and it is the opinion of the accounting officers that there is now no authority for payment of claims which the State may have assumed and paid subsequent to the transmission of that report, namely, April 22, 1882.

"No reason is seen why the inclosed bill, No. 940, is not in proper form to authorize payment of all claims therein mentioned which have been paid by the State since the date last mentioned.

"Of course the word 'of,' in line 12, should be omitted.

"The papers referred are herewith returned.

"Very respectfully,

"W. W. UPTON, Comptroller.

"Hon. CHARLES J. FOLGER,
"Secretary of the Treasury."

Upon the foregoing facts your committee report said bill back to the Senate and recommend that it be passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am a little afraid of the last phrase in that bill. Let the latter clause be read, showing what the Secretary of the Treasury is to do; I think it is to report to Congress certain amounts. If the Secretary will read it, I should like to move an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clause will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

And to report to Congress, at the earliest practicable day, the result of such examination, and the amount, if anything, which appears to be due to said State on account of the expenditures so made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend by inserting after the word "State"—I think that is the proper place—the words "according to the laws of the United States," so that the investigation shall be confined to what all the other States have been paid, that class of expense which Congress authorized the States to incur. I presume there will be no objection to the amendment. The bill very likely means that now, but I want to make it clear.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 19, after the word "State," it is proposed to insert "according to the laws of the United States;" so as to read:

And to report to Congress, at the earliest practicable day, the result of such examination, and the amount, if anything, which appears to be due to said State, according to the laws of the United States, on account of the expenditures so made.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no objection to that. This bill is in the form of three others which have been already passed by the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I presume it would bear the same construction, but I want to make it sure.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

CLASSIFICATION AND VALUATION OF FOREIGN MERCHANDISE.

The bill (S. 977) to regulate the importation of foreign merchandise and to secure uniformity in the classification and valuation thereof, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BECK. That is too important a bill to be taken up now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill retain its place on the Calendar?

Mr. BECK. That is the undervaluation bill, which will perhaps take some days. Let it take its place on the Calendar.

Mr. PLUMB. Why not take it up now and have it disposed of? If it is an important bill, why should it go over to the latter part of the session?

Mr. BECK. I do not want it to go over to the latter part of the session; but every member of the Finance Committee knows it will take days of discussion.

Mr. PLUMB. Why not have the discussion now?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it ought to be taken up after notice.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the bill will require longer discussion than can be had under the five-minute rule. I hope it will be passed over for the present. I desire to give notice now, however, that at an early day I shall ask the Senate to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky objects to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. There are many bills on the Calendar that we can get through without objection. I trust this bill will go over, as it will lead to discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

SETTLERS ON DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The bill (S. 287) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I take it, although I have no objection to the passage of the bill, that, as a matter of course, it will not be acted on now.

Mr. EVARTS. I object.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I hope the Senator from New York will not object to allowing the bill to retain its place on the Calendar, being passed over informally now.

Mr. EVARTS. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

MARY S. LOGAN.

The bill (S. 257) granting a pension to Mary S. Logan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary S. Logan, widow of the late John A. Logan, a major-general of United States volunteers in the late war for the Union, and paying her a pension for and during her natural life at the rate of $2,000 per annum.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, when a bill similar to this was before the Senate in January last I briefly stated that while I had no hope of defeating its passage, I was opposed to it. I opposed it then, I oppose it now, because I believe that any bill which seeks to give the widow of a major-general $2,000 a year while the widow of a private soldier receives but $12 per month is wrong in principle. I believe that any legislation which selects the widows of two or three major-generals and provides for them a pension of $2,000 a year, while the widows of other major-generals, equally deserving and more destitute, receive but $30 per month, is unjust and can not be defended.

It has long been the boast of our people that in this Republic all are free and equal, that the Government recognizes no classes and enacts no class legislation. All parties have frequently declared that they favored equal and exact justice to all and special privileges to none. Yet it is proposed by this bill, reported favorably by the Committee on Pensions, to pay Mrs. Logan $2,000 a year as a pension, while the widow of a private soldier who fell in battle, leaving his family helpless and dependent, receives $144 a year.

It is true, Mr. President, that there is a vast difference in the amount paid a major-general and a private soldier while they are in the military service, but this distinction and difference is defended and justified upon the theory that it is necessary to pay a large salary in order to secure the ablest men and best military talent that the country affords. But no such reason can be urged to justify a distinction in the amount paid as a pension to the widows of the officer and soldier. Pensions are not given on account of talent or distinguished services rendered. Pensions are not graded, or ought not to be, by the rank of the soldier. They are given for the purpose of preventing the soldier who is disabled in battle, or his widow in case of his death in the service, from suffering for the necessaries of life.

It has frequently been said by those who advocate pensions that there is an implied contract, an implied promise upon the part of the Government at the time of enlistment that in case the soldier should suffer permanent injury or fall in battle that he or his widow, as the case may be, shall not become dependent upon public charity. And it has also been urged that it was not only the duty of the Government to protect and provide for them, but that it was good policy and economy to do so; and the reason given is that if the Government refused to do this that in future wars it would be impossible to obtain a volunteer soldiery, and the Government would be compelled to resort to force or pay large bounties to procure an army.

If these are the true reasons why pensions are given, then, if any difference is made in amount paid, the private soldier or his widow should be preferred rather than the officer. No Government will ever have any difficulty in procuring major-generals or brigadier-generals, or, judging from the number we meet, even colonels. The difficulty is to procure privates. And if the pension is given to prevent the widow from becoming dependent upon the public, then again the widow of the private soldier should be preferred for the reason that the major-general, with his large pay and superior advantages and opportunities, is often enabled in his lifetime to provide and leave for the support of his widow and children a competent estate, while the private soldier, upon whom the chief hardships fall, with his pay of $13 or $15 per month, in almost every instance, necessarily leaves his widow wholly dependent upon the pension given by the Government.

As I view it, Mr. President, there should be no difference; the widow of the officer and private soldier are alike entitled to the protection of the Government, not one more than the other, and in giving pensions there should be equality and each receive the same amount. But if I am wrong in this position, if it can be successfully contended, as I have heard it argued, that the widow of the officer has been accustomed to comforts and luxuries to which the widow of the private soldier is a stranger, and that each should be supported by the Government in a style befitting the rank held by the husband, then, I would ask, upon what theory of right or principle of justice the committee selects the widow of General Logan and gives her a pension of $2,000 a year, while the widows of other major-generals receive under the law, as I am informed, $30 per month?

Even if pensions were graded by the rank of the soldier or the quality of service rendered, it can not be truthfully said that the services of General Logan were so far superior to that of other major-generals as to justify this difference in amount. No one wishes, at least I am sure that I do not, to underrate the services of General Logan, but it seems to me that it is unfair to the widows of other major-generals and gross injustice to the reputation of other officers to select one or two and prefer them to all others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired under the rule.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator will be allowed what time he desires.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Arkansas proceeding? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BERRY. But it was said by the Senator from Illinois when the former bill was presented that the granting of a pension to Mrs. Hancock was a precedent for this and a case precisely in point. It is not directly in point, because General Hancock was in the military service at the time of his death, and General Logan had severed his connection with the Army more than twenty years before he died; but waiving this difference, for I admit there is no difference in principle if General Logan's death was the result of exposure and wounds received in the Army, and admitting that it is a precedent for this, then I say it is a bad precedent and one that should not be followed. Much evil legislation has been secured by following precedents, often made without due deliberation or full knowledge of the facts, and they are frequently claimed as precedents when the facts and circumstances are totally different. In the deficiency bill which passed yesterday there was a clause giving the widows of the late Senators Pike and Logan a full year's salary, $5,000 each. What right has Congress to give the widow of a Senator $5,000 more than the widow of any one else?

I remember reading at the time it was proposed to give Mrs. Lincoln a pension it was objected that it would be wrong as a precedent, but the objection was answered by saying that the circumstances were peculiar, and that it could not be used to induce Congress to grant other pensions; that the President lost his life in time of war, and that as Commander-in-Chief the circumstances were the same as though he had fallen in battle. Yet, but a few years had passed, and it was used as a precedent, and to-day Mrs. Tyler, Mrs. Polk, Mrs. Garfield, and Mrs. Grant are each drawing a pension of $5,000 per year. It is said that Mrs. Hancock's case is a precedent for this, and if this bill becomes a law I presume that in a short time the widow of every major-general will be allowed a pension of $2,000 a year. In fact, I can not see how any Senator who favors this bill can oppose making the law general.

Mr. President, one of the great dangers, as I regard it, which confront us in the future is the building up of classes, creating a class, a favored class, who toil not, but are supported in luxury and idleness by the toil and constant labor of another class. We have already laid the foundation for a civil pension-list by passing laws which authorize judges of the United States courts to draw their salaries after they have ceased to perform the duties. The line that marks the distinction between the office-holder and the people is growing broader, deeper, and more distinct. There is a continual cry for larger salaries and greater privileges, and every man who objects or protests is denounced as narrow and illiberal.

Tax laws which force from the people an amount of money largely in excess of the sum required for an economical administration of public affairs encourage and furnish an excuse for almost every species of extravagance and reckless expenditure. All of this extravagance and this favoring of one class above another is in direct contradiction to that simplicity and that equality which characterized the Republic in the earlier days and which made it strong in the love and affection of the people, and already it is plain to be seen that the confidence of the great mass of the people is greatly diminishing and there is a great want of faith in the power and disposition of public officials to be just to all and to secure to each citizen equal rights and equal privileges.

This tendency to extravagance and the disposition to discriminate in favor of particular individuals has been especially noticeable in the matter of pensions. Year by year and Congress by Congress the pension-list has grown, and now, twenty-three years after the close of the war, the sum to be annually appropriated has reached about $80,000,000, and the end is not yet. It would seem that almost every man who was either directly or remotely connected with the Army is seeking to get his name upon the pension-roll, and those who are already receiving a pension are in many instances seeking to increase the amount.

Senators are almost daily receiving petitions and letters from individuals, and resolutions from Grand Army posts, all seeking to swell the appropriation for pensions. Upon a former occasion I said that I believed that it was bad policy to make so large a body of men dependent upon the Government, rather than depend upon their own energy, their own labor, and skill; that it was demoralizing to those who received the pension, discouraging to their less fortunate neighbors, and contrary to the genius and spirit of free government.

But great as I conceive the evils that flow from this to be, they are small in comparison to those which will follow if we make it the settled policy of this Government to allow the widows of military officers a sum so much in excess of that which is paid to the widow of the private soldier, as this bill proposes to give Mrs. Logan. The injustice to the widow of the private soldier is so great and the policy so different from that professed by all parties, that I can not believe that it will be approved, when fully understood, either by those who were soldiers in the Union Army or by the people of the United States.

Mr. President, I wish to repeat that which I said upon the passage of the bill in the last Congress—that no prejudice against the character of General Logan, or want of appreciation of the services rendered by him, caused me to oppose this bill. No one could have been associated with General Logan without admiring the open, frank, bold, and fearless manner with which he met and discussed all public questions. He was the most distinguished of the volunteer soldiers; he was preeminently the champion and friend of the soldier, and the ablest advocate that they ever had on this floor. Mrs. Logan, his widow, for whose benefit this bill is offered, is admired and honored by all parties and the people of every section of the Union. Few ladies are better known and none more respected; but all this does not change the principle involved in the bill, and I do not believe that General Logan in his lifetime wished for legislation that would secure to his widow rights or privileges that were not given to the widows of other officers, his comrades in arms.

Mr STEWART. Mr. President, no patriotic man would withhold from any widow of a soldier who served in the war for the Union a pension equal to that now proposed for the widow of General Logan, if it were possible to grant that much to all. But it is impossible to reward all as we desire. That is no reason, however, why we may not honor the memory of a few conspicuous examples of the generals who led our armies.

I do not believe there is a widow of a soldier in all the land who would not rejoice to know that the widow of John A. Logan had been remembered by the country he so faithfully served. He was justly the idol of the volunteer soldiers; he was identified with them from the beginning of the war until the day of his death, and never on any occasion, in the halls of Congress or elsewhere, failed to serve them as a gallant leader and a devoted friend. He had no superior among the many brave and gallant volunteers who exposed their lives for the Union.

In recognizing his gallant and faithful services to his country by providing for his widow, we manifest our appreciation and respect for every Union soldier. There is not one of them who would not rejoice at the passage of this bill. They recognize the fact that what we are about to do for Mrs. Logan is impossible to do for all, and they are willing that the conspicuous services of any of their comrades shall be justly rewarded.

It is right that there should be reward and honor in store for those who excel in the service of their country. Conspicuous examples must be recognized to furnish the youth models for emulation. They must be taught that the country is not unmindful of the heroes who have conferred honor upon her flag.

The lives and conduct of our great men are most potential examples for the generations to come. What would this country be without Washington, Lincoln, and Grant? What would have been the condition of free institutions to-day but for the services of such soldiers as Logan? We will recognize that fact and do honor to his memory, and furnish an example to the soldiers who shall hereafter be called upon to fight the battles of the Union, of our appreciation of heroic services.

Nobody will be aggrieved by the passage of this bill. The Senator from Arkansas will certainly be personally gratified, although he feels compelled to vote against the bill. I, for one, am especially pleased to have this opportunity to manifest by my vote the respect which I entertain for the memory of General Logan, and hope, on further reflection, the Senate will be unanimously in favor of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I wish, Mr. President, simply to say in a single sentence or two that I think the Senator from Arkansas overlooks the principle upon which this bill is based. It is true that so far as personal merit goes the same bravery, the same self-devotion, the same patriotism existed in the bosom of many a private soldier as existed in the bosom of the greatest general; and if mere desert were the test we ought to pay the same rate of compensation during the service, we ought to erect the same monuments, utter the same eulogies, have the same statues in public squares and other public places in our chief cities for the soldier as for the general; but it is utterly impossible, as has been said by the Senator from Nevada, to do that.

But it is the interest as much of the private soldier and of those who are concerned in his fame, that these conspicuous public honors should be paid to the military leader in his lifetime and after his death, and that these ample and generous provisions should be made for his widow and orphan children after his death, as it is of the great military chieftain himself.

It has been said that the secret of Napoleon's success as a general was that he persuaded every French soldier that he carried the baton of a marshal in his knapsack; and unquestionably there is nothing more inspiring to the courage and zeal of the private soldier than to feel that by merit he may be promoted to the chief places of military command, and that when so promoted he will occupy the chief place in the gratitude and the affection of his countrymen.

When you confer this pension for life on the widow of this illustrious soldier, the tones of whose voice we seem almost even now to hear in this Capitol, and whose form almost rises before our eyes, it has been so identified for a generation with the civil and military life of this people—when you pay that honor, you are paying an honor to the widow of every private soldier in the land. It is not John A. Logan; it is not the wife of John A. Logan, it is the possibility of the private soldier of this country which you are holding up to public honor and respect.

Many a citizen of the United States is entitled, if mere devotion and public spirit and public benefit are alone concerned, to equal compensation from the Treasury to that which we pay to the President of the United States; but in establishing the salary of that great office, in providing a pension for the President's widow, we mean that this, the most conspicuous position in American civic life, shall be adorned appropriately, that it may be a proper object of attraction and ambition and pride to every citizen of the Republic. There is not a boy in a red school-house on the hills of Vermont, or on a plantation in the State of my friend from Arkansas, who does not feel a greater self-respect when he thinks that the possibility of attaining to the illustrious position of President of the United States as under our form of Government is his; and he likes to contemplate the dignity of the office and the munificence of the salary which the American people attach to it. That is still more true of the relation of the private soldier to a general of the Army.

I believe, Mr. President, that if the policy which is now under discussion, of making a liberal provision for the widows of men like Grant, and McPherson, and Thomas, and Logan, and Hancock, and erecting their statues in conspicuous places in our chief cities were submitted to a vote, the widows and the orphans of the private soldier would be more unanimous in the expression of their approbation than the widows and the orphans of the men belonging to the class who are themselves directly honored.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I wish in the first place to ask that the question may be taken on the amendment reported and that it be rejected. The amendment to the name in the body of the bill and the amendment to change the title were reported under mistaken information. They only change the middle letter of Mrs. Logan's name.

I had not intended to speak upon this measure. I had not supposed that a measure which had commended itself to the last Senate, which had received the approval of the country and the enthusiastic indorsement of that large body of men of whom General Logan was the type, would require any advocacy from me at this time; and it is with extreme regret that I have heard the objections which have been urged to the passage of this bill by the Senator from Arkansas.

In all time, Mr. President, great nations like this have delighted in honoring their transcendent citizens who, like General Logan, have illustrated in many capacities the virtues of the institutions under which they were reared.

I hold in my hand a precedent established by the Congress of the United States which induces me to call the attention of the Senate to the remarkable parallel between two men. One of these men was General Logan, the other was General James Shields. Both had served in the Mexican war; each had been a member of this body; each had rendered distinguished service in the war of the rebellion; each bore down to his grave honorable wounds received in the service of his country. Mrs. Shields was pensioned by the Congress of the United States at the rate of $100 a month, and I do not recollect that any objection was made that she was getting a larger pension than she would have received had she been the widow of a private soldier.

I know of no finer example to the American youth than is afforded by the career of the late General Logan. Commencing a life of comparative obscurity, thrown early into the turbulence of politics, extricating himself from political embarrassments which seemed in the beginning to hamper his efforts to give his entire duty and devotion to the Union, joining the Army in a capacity comparatively subordinate, going from battle to battle until there is inscribed opposite his name a roll of combats prouder than any which adorns the name of any marshal of Napoleon, running a career which if he had run it in foreign lands would have ennobled him and entailed that nobility upon his descendants to the remotest generation, falling with his armor on, almost, in the Senate—his career illustrates in the highest degree the heights to which the American youth in their noblest aspirations may reach. I say I know of no finer example in our history than is afforded by the achievements of General Logan.

But this claim, in addition to its basis upon the transcendent services of this extraordinary man, rests upon other grounds fully displayed in his record.

General Logan, as much as the private who died in the hospital tent, laid down his life for his country and died of wounds and disabilities which he received in its service. The evidence of that fact is plenary from the most distinguished medical authorities who served during the war, and who are known to have attended him during his last sickness and who had knowledge of his infirmities from the time when he left the service.

I speak with some competency on this matter, for I myself saw General Logan during the siege of Vicksburg upon his bed of sickness.

I hope there will be no opposition to the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, as I shall not vote for this bill, I desire to state in a very few words my reasons for the vote I shall cast.

I agree that in the case of General Logan, as in the case of men who have rendered similar service, I am always glad of an opportunity to honor those who have served their country well and faithfully, and to honor their memories when they are no more among us; but we should be careful in doing this not to violate great fundamental principles and endanger the very character of our Government.

The founders of the Government prohibited to Congress the power to grant titles of nobility, and prevented the States from conferring titles of nobility. This rests on the idea that there should be no class in this country preferred above others, and that all should stand alike and be equal before the law; that the public servant, when employed in the discharge of his public duty, should receive the compensation provided for him by law, and that at the end of his service he should be treated as other citizens are.

We have fallen into the habit in later years of creating what seems to me to be the basis of an American aristocracy. We commenced after three-quarters of a century had rolled by since the foundation of the Government to retire the judiciary on pay for life after they had arrived at seventy years of age and had been ten years in service. We then provided for retiring the military officers on pay and for retiring naval officers on pay, and within the last year or two there have been here and in the other House more than a dozen bills providing for retiring on life pay various classes of employés—I need not stop to enumerate them. All this tends to the creation of a privileged class to be supported by the labor and the taxes imposed on other people. All of it is anomalous and not in consonance with our system of government, but is in accord with the system of Great Britain and the other countries where the province of the Government is to create privileged classes by conferring on them titles and revenues derived from the labor of others and not from their own proper resources.

I submit these remarks now because I shall perhaps not have occasion to speak on this question again, and I hope I shall not have occasion to vote upon it. I can vote for no bill which allows any person to receive pay from the Government without rendering service for it. I say this with all proper respect to the memory of General Logan, and with all proper respect for his very excellent wife. I have not voted for any such measure heretofore, and do not expect to do so hereafter. I have opposed all efforts to enlarge the numbers of the privileged class supported out of the public treasury and on the taxes and labor of other people when they are contributing nothing themselves to the support of the Government.

The very classes that we select for these bounties and benefits from the Government are generally those who least need them. We do not seem to select the poor, the helpless, the dependent. If the Government is to go into charity, why select the favored classes, who least need it?

I repeat, that it is un-American; it is not in accord with our system of Government, with the spirit of our institutions, to create a privileged class to be supported off the labor and off the taxes of other people.

I state this briefly as the reason I shall vote against this bill and all other bills of similar character.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. CULLOM. I think there will be no further discussion on the Logan bill, and I hope we shall have a vote upon it.

Mr. BLAIR. Let the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside; and the amendment to the pending bill reported by the Committee on Pensions will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 6 it is proposed to strike out the letter "S" and insert "A," so as to read "Mary A. Logan."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Did the Chair understand the chairman of the committee to say that the amendment should not be agreed to?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir. It was based on a misapprehension. The name in the original bill is correct.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, it is.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BERRY. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I shall vote for this bill and take very great pleasure in doing so, and I desire to put upon record the reasons why I shall vote for it.

If my friend, the Senator from Texas, could make good the objection which he has stated, I should vote against it. If there is any ground for the assertion that to reward distinguished merit is un-American and creates a privileged class, then, however much I might be in favor of rewarding distinguished merit, I should vote against the bill. But there is no ground in reason for these objections. There never was and there never will be and never ought to be a Government in which merit, eminent virtue, and public services from the people and in the poorest class was not rewarded; and there can be no society in which rewards are not given to virtue, in which the people in their representative capacity say to the faithful public servant, "Obscurity, neglect, suffering shall come to your wife and children if you give your life and your best efforts for the public good."

Sir, it is a principle of public policy which the people of a free republic cherish and should cherish more than those of a monarchy, that the humblest citizen who gives his life or renders great public benefaction shall be rewarded with public honors from the state and from the people in their collective capacity.

I recognize in General Logan a man of this description. I recognize in the public opinion of the Northern States that he served gallantly and with great merit an obligation to respect that public opinion, and I for one shall vote a pension to his widow. I shall regret to see the time when the public policy shall be to punish virtue, to say to all men, "You must stand on a dead level in respect to your desire to render public service; virtue, and self-sacrifice, and noble actions shall have no reward, no encouragement, no public recognition."

Several SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the passage of the bill. The Chair understood the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] to desire that the yeas and nays be entered on the Journal.

Mr. BERRY. Yes, sir; I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. As I presume if he were present he would vote on the same side of the question as I should, I vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I transfer the general pair that I have with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 55, nays 7; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The amendment to the title reported by the Committee on Pensions to change the name "Mary S. Logan" to "Mary A. Logan" was rejected.

MRS. APOLLINE A. BLAIR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. VEST. I ask unanimous consent now to take up the next bill on the Calendar, which was reported in connection with the bill just passed.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that request will be granted. It will not take any time.

Mr. VEST. It will not give rise to any debate. It is a bill to place the widow of General Frank P. Blair on the same basis with the widow of General Logan.

Mr. SHERMAN and others. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill referred to by him.

Mr. BLAIR. I suppose the request is that the pending business be temporarily laid aside?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAIR. I object to unanimous consent. If the Senator will make the request to lay the unfinished business aside temporarily, I shall not object.

Mr. VEST. I do not wish to displace the regular business. I simply want the two bills to go to the House together.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is right.

Mr. BLAIR. But the Senator's request is that the pending business be laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 574) to increase the pension of Mrs. Apolline A. Blair.

Mr. BLAIR. With the understanding that it does not displace the unfinished business and will not lead to debate, I shall not object.

Mr. VEST. That is my understanding. I ask that the bill the Senator has in charge be temporarily laid aside until Mrs. Blair's bill can be acted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill (S. 574) to increase the pension of Mrs. Apolline A. Blair is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read at length.

The bill was read. It provides that hereafter Apolline A. Blair, widow of the late Francis P. Blair, jr., a major-general of the United States volunteers in the late war for the Union, shall be paid, for and during her natural life, a pension of $2,000 per annum, in lieu of the pension of $50 per month now paid to her.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BERRY. I recognize the fact that it is useless to ask for a division. I wish to state, however, that the same objections which I had to the other bill I have to this, and I shall vote "no" on its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. EVARTS. I ask that the yeas and nays be called on the passage of the bill. ["No!" "No!"] I desire them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the question of the passage of the bill the Senator from New York desires that the yeas and nays may be entered in the Journal. Are they desired by one-fifth of the Senators present?

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], but with the positive understanding that he would vote "yea," if present, on this bill, I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I announce a pair between the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

The result was announced—yeas 54, nays 6; as follows:

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker pro tempore had signed the enrolled bill (S. 290) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River, at or near Burlington, Iowa; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT DIAMOND SHOAL, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. RANSOM. I reported this morning, from the Committee on Commerce, the bill (S. 1283) making an appropriation for the erection of a light-house on or near Diamond Shoal, off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina, and had permission to submit a written report. I now submit the report, to accompany the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received and printed, under the rule.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. PLUMB to strike out section 2 and in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 2. That such money shall annually be divided among and paid out in the several States and Territories and in the District of Columbia in proportion to their population, respectively, according to the census of 1880: Provided, That all of said money remaining undistributed at the date of the publication of the returns of population as shown by the census of 1890 shall be divided as aforesaid in proportion to the population according to said census of 1890.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, before proceeding further with the introduction of evidence in this case, the duty to which I propose to address myself to-day as I did the last time I had the honor to address the Senate, I wish to answer a question which was propounded by the Senator from Massachusetts not now in the Chamber [Mr. HOAR] touching the relative taxation borne by the city of Charleston and the city of Boston, general taxation and special taxation for the maintenance of schools.

I find by the returns of 1880, the latest authority I have, that the direct school tax on property in Boston is 2.54 mills on the dollar, while the rate of taxation in the city of Charleston for the same purpose was at the same time 3 mills on the dollar. Turning now to general taxation for all purposes, the rate of taxation in the city of Boston was $1.24 upon every $100, while the general taxation at the same time in the city of Charleston upon the valuation was $3.10 per $100.

Mr. BUTLER. In that connection I should like to make a little explanation of what I stated here the other day upon that subject. I stated that the taxation, in round numbers, of the city of Charleston for all purposes was about 3 per cent. I observed the next morning in the RECORD I was put down as having said 2 per cent. I simply desire to correct that at this late day. The taxation in Charleston is about 3 per cent. for all purposes, I understand.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator's statement was substantially the same as that I made. The rate in Charleston is 3.1 per cent., while in the city of Boston the tax is 1½ per cent. for all purposes, while the rate of special taxation for school purposes is also higher in Charleston than in the city of Boston.

I now ask the consent of the Senate to insert some tables for reference as part of my remarks, one being a table containing a computation of the amounts to be received by the various States and Territories and the District of Columbia of the amount specified in this bill, based upon the number of persons who could not write in 1880, as provided in the bill before the Senate. I should like also to introduce a table showing the relative illiteracy, and several others which I will specify to the Reporter.

Preliminary computation of amounts to be received by the States and Territories, excluding the District of Columbia, of $77,000,000 distributed on the basis of the number of persons who could not write in 1880, as per Senate bill 194.

I call now the attention of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] for a moment to some facts bearing upon what seemed to be the principal point in his address to the Senate a few days since, saving the constitutional question which he argued at great length and, it is proper to say, with great power. He seemed to draw the deduction that intelligence and crime ran together, and if any conclusion could be deduced from the tendency of his remarks and of his tables, it was to the effect that intelligence was the source of crime, while ignorance appeared to be the source of virtue.

I have here some facts embodied in an address by Col. Dexter A. Hawkins, of New York City, and declared by him to be extracted from various authorities, and the substance boiled down in this statement, which is as follows:

In France, in 1868, one-half of the inhabitants could not read nor write. From this half came 95 per cent. of the persons arrested for crime. From the other, the educated half, came only 5 per cent. In other words, a given number of children, suffered to grow up illiterate, produced nineteen times as many persons arrested for crime as the same number would if educated, at least to the extent of the elementary branches.

In the Grand Duchy of Baden, from 1854 to 1861—seven years—the government, by a rigorous system of universal compulsory elementary education, reduced the number of prisoners actually arrested 51 per cent., and the number of crimes committed 54 per cent.

In the six New England States, in 1870, 7 per cent. only of the inhabitants above ten years of age were unable to read and write; and yet this 7 per cent. produced 80 per cent. of the criminals. Or, in other words, a given number of children in New England at that time suffered to grow up illiterate produced fifty-three times as many criminals as the same number would if educated to the extent of the curriculum of the public schools. This fact is a complete vindication of the moral effect of the New England system of public education, Cardinal Antonelli to the contrary notwithstanding.

In the State of New York, in 1880, the illiterates produced eight times their pro rata proportion of the criminals in that State; that is, a given number of children brought up illiterate on the average produced eight times as many criminals as the same children would have produced if educated to the extent of the curriculum of the public schools.

In the city of New York, in 1870, among the illiterates, one crime was committed for every 3 persons; while among the literates there was only one crime to every 27 persons. Or, in other words, the ignorant class in that city furnishes nine times the criminals they would if educated in the public schools.

In the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in 1870, the illiterates, according to their numbers, committed seven times as many crimes as the literate class.

In Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Illinois, taken together, the illiterates committed ten times as many crimes, according to their numbers, as the literate class.

Take the whole of the United States together, according to the census of 1870, the illiterates committed ten times their pro rata proportion of crimes.

In Pennsylvania, in the years 1879 and 1880, one-thirtieth of the population above ten years of age could neither read nor write, and this one-thirtieth committed one-sixth part of the crimes, or nearly six times its proper proportion. But if we class with the illiterates the criminals who could barely read and write, but who had no education beyond bare reading and writing, it will then appear that the one-thirtieth of the population of Pennsylvania that is illiterate commits one-third of the crime, or more than fourteen times its legitimate proportion.

A careful examination of the statistics of twenty States shows the following average results:

First. That one-sixth of all the crime in the country is committed by persons wholly illiterate.

Second. That one-third of the crime in the country is committed by persons wholly or substantially illiterate.

Third. That the proportion of criminals among the illiterate class is, on the average, ten times as great as it is among those who have been instructed in the elements of a common-school education or beyond.

Fourth. That the expense imposed upon society to protect itself against a few thousand criminals, most of whom were made such through the neglect of society to take care of their education when young, is one of the heaviest of the public burdens. In the city of New York it is 50 per cent. more than the whole cost of the public schools.

In that city the annual appropriation for police, criminal courts, reformatories, jails, and penitentiaries is over five millions of dollars; while that for the training of the 385,000 school children in the city is only $3,500,000.

The average attendance at the schools in 1880 was 138,329. The "compulsory school age"—that is, the age within which all children are required by law in the State of New York to attend school—is eight to fourteen years. The number of children of this age in the city of New York in June, 1880, was 144,474; while the average attendance on the public schools of children of all ages from five to twenty-one in that year in the city was only 133,095. As a logical consequence of this neglect of education the city jails and almshouses are crammed and taxes are high.

The city, in its meager provision for education, and its enormous taxation for criminals (to use an old but expressive adage) "saves at the spigot but loses at the bung."

What is true of the metropolis of the country is equally true of every city, town, village, and neighborhood.

These facts could be multiplied almost without limit.

The examination of the statistics of criminality and illiteracy in the census of any civilized state or country will give results substantially in harmony with the above.

Carlyle says:

"If the devil were passing through my country, and he applied to me for instruction on any truth or fact of this universe, I should wish to give it to him. He is less a devil knowing that three and three are six than if he didn't know it; a light spark, though of the faintest, is in this fact; if he knew facts enough, continuous light would dawn on him; he would (to his amazement) understand what this universe is, on what principles it conducts itself, and would cease to be a devil."

And in this line I wish to state deductions from the census and also from the inquiries of economists in other lands bearing on the relative value of educated and uneducated labor—educated, I mean to say, in the common rudiments of learning, such as we give to our common people in our common schools. I take this from an address by the Commissioner of Education:

It should be remembered, in addition to the short period in which schools are already taught in the South, that there are 2,702,835 children of age not enrolled for instruction. Take another comparison: Charleston, S. C., now levies a tax of 3 mills on a dollar; but to furnish the children of that State a fair approach to the instruction given those in Massachusetts would require a tax on the property of the State of nearly 3 cents on the dollar. This the friends of education in Massachusetts or any other State would hesitate to propose in their own case.

* * * * * * * *

I must not pause to elaborate these points, but supposing (1) that the labor of an illiterate is increased in value 25 per cent. by teaching him to read and write, 50 per cent. by fairly educating him, and 75 per cent. by giving him a thorough training; and (2) that the average value of the labor of illiterates is the same as the average wages paid employés in manufactories, then the following computations give sound conclusions:

By the census of 1880, the number of persons of twenty-one years and upward in the Southern States who were unable to write was 2,984,387. If 75 per cent. of them should be taught to read and write, it would increase the value of the labor of 2,238,290 persons 25 per cent. The present value of their labor is, approximately, $248 a year each. The increase of value would be $62 a year per capita, a total of $138,773,980. If 15 per cent. of the illiterates should be fairly educated, it would increase the value of the labor of 447,658 persons 50 per cent., or from $248 to $372 a year each. The total of this annual increase would be $55,509,592. If the remaining 10 per cent. of illiterates should have the value of their labor increased 75 per cent. by being thoroughly trained, the industrial value of 298,439 persons would be raised from $248 to $434 a year each, a total of $55,509,654. By adding the three totals just given, it is seen that the increase which would come to the industrial value of illiterates in the Southern States would be, were they educated as indicated, $241,727,220 a year.

Many times the amount that it is proposed in this bill to appropriate to education during the full course of eight years. The difficulty with the calculation of the Senator from Missouri was that he instituted a comparison, not between the illiterate classes in any given community, but upon such data as he had, whether reliable or unreliable; he instituted a comparison between illiterates in one section of country, in rural districts, with other parts of the country thickly populated, where the people were of a different race, different habits, different training, residing largely in large cities and thereby subject to many temptations. There is also to be considered that much of his unfavorable comparison resulted from the fact that where the larger number of arrests were made there was a more stringent effort at the execution of the laws. The comparison, in order to be fair at all, must be between the literates and illiterates, members of the same community. It was by instituting the comparison in this way that the astounding results which I have stated to the Senate were reached.

I wish to call attention now to what is shown by one of the tables which I have submitted. In the Southern States proper, in order to furnish a school three months in length to all the children throughout those States, it is necessary to have aid in the construction of what may be termed the educational plant alone. The building of the necessary houses and the furnishing of the necessary apparatus, and giving the necessary education of not over two or three years' training to teachers in normal schools, requires at least an expenditure of thirty-six millions. That amount will be necessary in order to bring the average condition of the means of education throughout the Southern States up to anything like an inferior comparison with what they are in the Northern States; and I have already shown that even in the North illiteracy is overgrown, and in many cases it is more than overgrown, in comparison with the progress of common-school education.

The tables I have submitted also show the comparative ability of the two sections of the country to endure taxation, and I respectfully call the attention of the Senate to a careful examination of these tables.

I wish here to read a short extract from the report of the superintendent of schools of the State of New York. I read the other day something from a recent message of the governor of the State of Connecticut. This is the latest report from New York that is bound, so far as I know. There is another report made to the Legislature by the superintendent of the State of New York. This is the report of last year; but I will say that from the newspaper abstract of the report of the present year the facts stated in the report of the preceding year are again emphasized as not only being true, but as being unquestioned. The State of New York has one of the best school systems to be found anywhere in the country, with an enormous fund and a wealthy people, giving with great willingness, as a general rule, the necessary taxation for the support of schools. He says:

From the data in our possession it seems that 59 per cent. of the school population attended the public schools at some time during the year.

That was the year 1886, this being the report of 1887. The report is dated January 4, 1887.

In 1880 it was 62 per cent., and in 1870 it was 69 per cent.

So that from 1870 to 1880 the proportion of the school population who attended school at all decreased from 69 to 62 per cent., and from 1880 to 1886 it fell off from 62 to 59 per cent.

The average attendance, taking the entire year together, was 36 per cent. of the children of school age; in 1880 it was 35 per cent., and in 1870, 32 per cent. The average time each child attended school during the last year was twenty-two and one-tenth weeks; in 1880, it was twenty and four-tenth weeks; and in 1870, it was seventeen and six-tenths weeks. From these figures, it is apparent that while the children who do attend the schools come with greater regularity than formerly, still the whole number who attend the schools for some period of the year, in proportion to the whole number of school age, has been growing smaller since 1870, notwithstanding the "compulsory education act" enacted in 1874.

The figures showing the percentage of school population which actually attends the schools will be misleading, and indicate the non-attending class to be larger than it really is, unless it be borne in mind that the private schools and academies are not taken into account, and that the "school age" is made to cover a period commencing before most children are sent to school and extending several years beyond the time when most have commenced work. The number in the public schools and the private schools and academies at some time during the year was 68 per cent. of the school population.

It is believed that these figures are reliable with perhaps this exception. There has been no census since 1880, and the number of children of "school age" reported since that time has, undoubtedly, in some cases, been estimated. The estimates can not, however, be far out of the way. Again, it would be strange if many of the private schools had not failed of being reported by local school officers.

It then suggests some further legislation by the State.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] desires a short executive session, and I give way to him to make a motion for that purpose.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is highly necessary for the public interest that there should be a brief executive session, not with a view of the Senate adjourning afterwards, but a very brief executive session; and I accordingly move it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PUGH in the chair). The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. PLUMB.

Mr. BLAIR. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who was not present when it was referred to awhile ago, that the rate of taxation in the city of Charleston is 3.10 mills on the dollar for school purposes, while in the city of Boston it is 1.54 mills for school purposes.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator said the other day "for all purposes."

Mr. BLAIR. For all purposes the taxation in the city of Charleston is 3.10 cents on the dollar, while in Boston it is 1.24 cents; that is to say, it is 1¼ per cent. in Boston and it is 3.10 per cent. in Charleston, being very much higher for both school and general purposes in the latter than the former.

I have here a table in which the States of the country are arranged in groups. The New England States have an average valuation per capita of $661. The Southern States have an average valuation per capita of $155. The Western States have an average valuation per capita of $334; the Middle States of $473; the Territories of $211; while the average valuation of the entire country is $327 for purposes of taxation. It will be seen that the Southern States, with reference to the entire country, including themselves, have a capacity to bear taxation which is represented by the relation of 155 to 327, and by examining the statement which I have submitted, their capacity to bear taxation as compared with other sections of the Union can be easily ascertained.

I have stated that to give a good school of three months' length in the Southern States to all the children requires an expenditure for schoolhouses, and for the qualification of teachers, and the furnishing of the necessary apparatus of upwards of $36,000,000. That amount would be necessary to bring them to the point of offering facilities to be educated to meet all the children of school age. Of course that item is already supplied at the North, and taxation at the North is largely applied to the running expenses of the schools themselves.

If $15,000,000, which is the highest sum that under the provisions of this bill is to be distributed in any one year—more than twice the sum which is to be distributed the first year—if $15,000,000 are divided upon the basis of illiteracy, the individual child will receive for his education—in California, $15.12; in Colorado, $14.34; in Connecticut, $10.71; in Nevada, $14.40; in New Hampshire, $10.07; in Rhode Island, $11.36; in the District of Columbia, $13.61; and in Massachusetts, $19.21; while in Alabama, after this division is made, mind you, more than twice what they get the first year, added to their own, what is already raised—in Alabama the individual child will receive $3.64; in Arkansas, $3.13; in Florida, $3.75; in Georgia, $4.30; in Kentucky, $3.67; in Louisiana, $4.96; in Mississippi, $4.90; in Virginia, $3.94; in West Virginia, $4.31; in North Carolina, $3.26, and in South Carolina, $5.05.

Since the census there has been in some States and some localities an increase of taxation, so that these amounts will be in some localities decreased. The extension of the school system to all parts of the States is not so apparent, but the increase in any event would be but slight, and as compared with the present expenditure it will be noted that this is a division of $15,000,000, the calculation for which is given, so that actually the increase next year, if this fund should be made available in these States, would not be sufficient to bring them up, even with their present contribution, to the amount which is stated in what I have read to the Senate.

I have already placed in the possession of the Senate some recent statements from the State of Virginia. Since I did so I have received from Mr. YOST, a member of the other House from Virginia, some additional letters from school authorities, which I will read to the Senate. I look upon these as of special value, because they are from men whose official duty compels them to know, or in fact makes it unavoidable that they should know, the actual condition of the schools within their jurisdiction; and there is no reason to doubt that what they say is fairly applicable to the entire State.

I read first a letter from William C. Corson, county superintendent of the public schools of Cumberland County, Virginia, dated January 16, 1888, addressed to Hon. J. YOST, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C. He says:

DEAR SIR: Your communication of the 5th January to hand. With much pleasure I now proceed to answer the interrogatories therein contained in reference to the public schools of my county.

First. Total school population, according to the census of 1880, 4,121; white, 1,053; colored, 3,068.

Second. Total enrollment, session of 1886-'87, 1,889; white, 685; colored, 1,204.

Third. Total average daily attendance, 1051; white, 456; colored, 595.

Fourth. Length of school session, 5.02 months.

Fifth. Cost per pupil enrolled, $4.68 per session.

Sixth. Cost per pupil in average attendance, $8.41 per session.

Thus it will be seen that out of a total school population as far back as 1880—and during the six years this sort of population has undoubtedly rapidly increased—out of what was then a total of 4,121 there were 1,889 enrolled, which is less than one-half, and 685 whites, a little more than half the whites, and 1,204 colored, which is much less than half the colored population that should be attending school, while the average daily attendance is 1,000 as compared with the 4,000 who should attend the schools. Mr. Corson goes on:

Seventh. The condition of school-houses.

I call the attention of the Senate to this matter especially, as there seems to be an inclination to consider this expenditure wholly with reference to the necessity of the tuition of the child, the payment of the teacher. The money, with the exception of the $2,000,000 which goes to assist in the construction of school-houses in sparsely-settled localities, among poor populations, is to be expended in the actual running of the schools, so that the local taxation which is now available for teachers and school-houses, and the like, must hereafter, if school-houses are to be provided, be very much more largely expended in the direction of providing the plant. That has got to be done from some source, and it is believed a much smaller amount would be expended hereafter from the local taxation for the payment of teachers.

Seventh. Condition of school-houses: About one-half of our school-houses are comfortable and well furnished; the others, cheap log buildings, poorly lighted, and in every way unsuited for the purpose. We greatly need more and better houses, but are unable to build with our present means.

Eighth. Salaries of teachers: Teachers are paid from $20 to $30, according to the grade of superintendent's certificates held by the teacher. It is difficult to secure competent, efficient teachers for the meager pay we can offer. The short five months' session I regard the most objectionable feature of our public-school system.

Ninth. Improvements demanded: More and better school-houses, with good furniture, longer sessions, an increase of teachers' pay, and means to furnish indigent pupils with text-books. The Blair bill would give us the money to remedy all these defects and enable us to make our public schools what they should be—the pride and glory of our land. I rejoice to know that you are among the friends of the bill, and you may rest assured that your constituents in this county will, to a man, help to hold up your hands whilst battling to gain this great boon for your State and your country. The public schools are the only hope for the education of the children of the people, and an earnest zeal in behalf of this great cause is, to my mind, the strongest evidence of true patriotism. Virginia is doing all she can to educate her children, but it would require double the amount annually appropriated to meet the pressing needs of her public schools.

A very small per cent. of our white people are able to educate their children in private schools, and such schools are entirely out of the question among the colored race. The education of the negroes is greatly retarded on account of the extreme poverty of this race; the parents are too poor to buy the necessary text-books for their children. Often in visiting the colored schools I find from three to half a dozen pupils trying to prepare their lessons from one book. The public funds are so limited that the district boards do not feel warranted to expend more than a few dollars each year to furnish books to indigent pupils. The name of every member of the Fiftieth Congress who works and votes for the Blair educational bill will be honored in Virginia and his memory will be cherished and revered to the latest generations. Allow me to thank you in behalf of the people of Cumberland for the interest which you manifest in the cause of public education.

Very respectfully,

WM. C. CORSON.

That is addressed to Mr. YOST, a member of the other House. Mr. YOST has also furnished me the following letter, signed by C. T. Jordan, superintendent of schools for Augusta County, Virginia:

STAUNTON, VA., January 13, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Owing to my absence your favor of 5th instant has just been received, and I hasten to reply.

First. The school population of Augusta County is 10,947.

Second. The enrollment for 1886-'87 was 7,149.

Third. The average daily attendance was 4,629.

Fourth. Length of session, five months.

Fifth. The cost of tuition per pupil enrolled was 79 cents.

Sixth. The cost of tuition per pupil, in daily average attendance was $1.20.

Seventh. The school-houses are in a fairly good condition, but are in most cases destitute of good blackboards, wall maps, globes, and other aids to teaching as are needful to secure the best results with the least cost.

Eighth. Average salaries: White males, $27.79 per month; white females, $26.30; colored males, $25.44; colored females, $24.70.

Ninth. We need trained teachers, skilled teachers. Skilled labor is always expensive; it has a high value; to secure these trained teachers we must offer such compensation as will enable them to qualify themselves for the work. We can never have professional teachers until we can pay salaries large enough to induce professional teachers to teach in our public schools.

It will be seen that at an average they get only five months' work, and that at these low rates per month there is no encouragement for any intelligent person to engage in teaching. Mr. Jordan proceeds:

Hence the first thing we need is more money. It should be borne in mind that our public schools have superseded a great many good private schools, and unless as good instruction is given in the public schools as was given in these private schools, the adoption of the public-school system will be a great sin.

The efficiency of our present system of public education could be greatly increased by paying the district trustees an amount equivalent to the work required of them. At present they receive no pay; consequently much important work is neglected by them.

What we need is money. We have the material; we can utilize it if we can pay a reasonable sum to get what we must have to do good work.

I have written hastily, but will be glad to give you any further information when called upon.

With kind regards, I am, very respectfully, etc.,

C. T. JORDAN,
Superintendent Schools, Augusta County.

Hon. JACOB YOST, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

Another superintendent, G. E. McCarkle, superintendent of Alleghany County, writes:

ALLEGHANY COUNTY, VIRGINIA.

School population: White, 2,153; colored, 602; total, 2,755.
Enrollment: White, 1,234; colored, 247; total, 1,481.
Average daily attendance: White, 864; colored, 140; total, 1,004.
Average length of session, 4.97 months.
Cost per pupil enrolled: White, 82 cents; colored, 63 cents.
Cost per pupil in average daily attendance: White, 62 cents; colored, 53 cents.
Average salaries of teachers: Male, $27.37; female, $26.07.
Condition of school-houses: Very bad and no money to improve them. Our school system is in a very bad condition and is very unpopular, all because we have not the funds to improve it.

I have a statement from G. E. Caskie, superintendent of public schools for Nelson County, Virginia, addressed to Mr. YOST. Mr. Caskie writes as follows:

LOVINGSTON, VA., January 9, 1888.

SIR: Yours of the 5th instant received. In answering the interrogatories therein propounded I will use the figures shown by my annual report for the school year ending July 31, 1887. I do this because I suppose it would be fairer than to take any one month of the present session as the basis of my answers.

First. The school population of this county is, according to the last census, 1885: White, 3,594; colored, 3,185; total, 6,779.

Second. The enrollment for last session was: White, 2,151; colored, 1,660; total, 3,811.

Third. The average daily attendance during the same period was: Whites, 1,157; colored, 704; total, 1,861.

Fourth. The length of the school session is five months. There are three schools in the county which run six months; all the others run only five months, except such as are closed sooner because of failure to make the required average, or some reason of that sort. The average last year was just five months.

Fifth. The cost of the whole system (including all expenses—my salary and everything) last year was 59 cents per month per pupil enrolled, or $2.95 for the session per pupil enrolled.

Sixth. The cost for last session, including everything, was $1.21 per month per pupil in average daily attendance, or $6.05 for the session per pupil enrolled.

Seventh. There are now in this county ninety schools, of which about twenty-five houses belong to the school board; the residue are cabins, log houses, etc., which the people let us have. Of the twenty-five which we own, about eight are good houses; the others are mostly log, about two-thirds of which are hewed logs and the others just built of round poles. Of those furnished by the patrons about the same proportion of hewed and round log buildings exists. With the exception of the eight mentioned above, all of these houses are in bad repair, some much more so than others. Some are hardly fit to be occupied at all. Last year I was forced to condemn some, and if I did my duty I would condemn others now. Some of them have board roofs, held on with logs or rocks; some others have sliding windows—i. e., plank windows without any glass—and when you open the window to let in the light you leave a hole. In many of these houses the chinking is knocked out and the teacher has to daub it up with mud as best he can.

I think I may safely say that all the furniture we have, including desks, benches, tables, chairs, etc., for the ninety schools, is not worth over $40. The benches usually, in fact with very few exceptions, have no backs, and in many instances are made by splitting a log in two and boring holes in which legs are put, thus making two benches. With the exception of a very few schools, a few of these benches, a small blackboard, and a plank nailed to the side of a house for a writing desk, constitute the furniture. There is not a map, globe, chart, or anything of that sort in a single school in the county.

Eighth. Our teachers are paid according to the grade of certificate they hold—first grade, $30 per month; second grade, $25; third grade, $20. The average salary last year was $23.74. Owing to the lack of funds, the trustees often prefer a third to a first grade teacher, because they are cheaper. Of course this injures the schools very much.

Ninth. To cover the county and provide school facilities to all of the people we need about fifteen or sixteen more schools. The country is so broken and mountainous that it requires a larger number of schools than if it were more level. Our aim now is to so locate the schools that no person will be over 2 miles from a school. Yet in many cases they are 3 miles, and in some instances 3½ or 4 miles. In bad weather these latter persons are practically debarred of all school privileges, and irregular attendance makes the school but little benefit to the scholar, and the scholar a disadvantage to the school. We need houses fearfully, and where we have them we need to repair them. We need school apparatus, maps, globes, charts, etc. We should run the schools for at least two months longer each year, and in the small towns and villages, where the children are not compelled to work, the schools should be run for nine months.

Owing to scarcity of funds we are unable to pay the school trustees any salary. Hence they can not give the time and attention to the duties of their office which are necessary for the proper performance of those duties; and of course the county superintendents are badly paid. They should be able to give their whole time to the schools.

Hoping that your efforts in behalf of the "Blair bill" may be successful,

I remain, yours respectfully,

G. E. CASKIE.

Hon. J. YOST, Washington, D. C.

I turn now to a communication I have just received from the State of Tennessee, a letter from Col. William J. Sykes, under date of January 15, 1888, addressed to myself. He says:

MEMPHIS, TENN., January 15, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I send you my speech on Federal aid. I have taken great interest in this question, although I am no school teacher, nor school director, nor school superintendent. I have no children nor grand-children to go to public schools. I sent for the pamphlet issued by the New York Evening Post on "The bill to promote mendicancy." It is anything but conclusive, and is very easily answered. I intend to write them a private letter on the subject. Federal aid is essential if we ever wish an efficient system of public schools in the Southern States. I consider you one of the best friends the Southern States have.

I wish you would let me know where the Christian Union, to which the Evening Post so often alludes, is published, and where Mr. Mayo lives. Whenever the subject is fully discussed in the Southern States the people without regard to party will be in favor of it. I have written a letter to the Nashville American showing that we never can have an efficient system in Tennessee without Federal aid. If it comes before I send this letter, I will inclose it. I will be glad to hear from you.

Yours, truly,

WM. J. SYKES,
19 West Court Street, Memphis, Tenn.

I presume the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] knows Mr. Sykes well, and that he is a responsible gentleman. At all events his address, which he sends to me, indicates that. The address is on the subject of "Federal aid to education, its constitutionality, its justice, and its necessity." It was delivered August 9, 1886. He goes over the question from the standpoint of a Democrat. He says:

I am for it because it is Democratic. The national convention which nominated Grover Cleveland for President and Thomas A. Hendricks for Vice-President adopted as a part of its platform the following:

"We favor the diffusion of free education by common schools, so that every child in the land may be taught the rights and duties of citizenship."

This must have referred to national aid to education. The Federal Government has nothing to do with purely local matters—

How true that is! We hear that corroborated every day in the Senate—and a national convention would not say anything in reference to them. The great body of our laws are purely local, therefore the national convention had nothing to say about these laws, because the Federal Government had nothing to do with them. The fact that the national convention did speak out on this question showed that they considered it a national question. Whether the States as States should encourage education—public-school education—if it had been merely a local question, could not have been interfered with by a national convention, which looked only to matters requiring Federal legislation. This is conclusive as to the Democratic party in convention assembled.

I am glad that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is here to catch the idea of his Democratic friend from Tennessee. He goes on:

NO FEDERAL CONTROL.

It is sometimes said we should not permit the Federal Government to control our State schools. To this I agree in the fullest manner and to the largest extent. But aiding our State schools and permitting us to control them in every particular is anything but control of our State schools.

He goes on to discuss the subject fully and cites some authorities. He seems to appreciate the efforts made by Northern Senators. He says:

I am glad that so many Northern Senators have been liberal and wise enough to adopt the basis of illiteracy for the distribution of this fund. Illiteracy is not only injurious to the State in which it exists, but it is injurious to the country as a whole, and well did Mr. Jefferson characterize education as one of "the great foundations of prosperity and union." Let us be fully agreed upon the principle of national aid to education, and then the details of the measure can be arranged with satisfaction to all parts of the Union.

I can not, of course, introduce much of this address, but there are some other points in it which I should like to notice. I will read another short extract from the same address upon the inefficiency of our present system. Mr. Sykes says:

Our present public-school system is a failure, notwithstanding the earnest, energetic efforts that have been put forth to render it efficient. Only 192,463 of our scholastic population, which is 609,028, are in daily attendance upon the schools, and only 373,877 enrolled pupils. There are only 25,569 enrolled pupils at private schools, and 20,503 in daily attendance. Wherever funds are sufficient more children are in school. In Obion County 7,563 out of 10,450 are enrolled, and in Williamson County only 5,200 are enrolled out of a scholastic population of 10,200. Obion County has a school fund of $26,477.50, and Williamson County a school fund of $20,382.63.

With the money we would get under the educational bill we could establish more industrial colleges, where all kinds of industry could be taught, and we could so improve our free-school system as to make it efficient.

Every species of labor and of mechanical employment might be taught in these industrial schools. Young men and young women might leave them prepared to make an honest living by labor. Labor would be rendered in the highest degree honorable, and all would be taught to respect not only the labor but the laborer. Statistics show that wherever there is the most education there labor is the most profitable as well as the most honored. Education—profitable, valuable education—is now not confined to boys, but extends to their sisters, until now they are becoming self-sustaining and independent. A glorious consummation!

You can not reasonably expect much immigration into Tennessee until you establish and sustain good public schools, since laboring people, who constitute our most valuable immigrants, will not go into any State where there are not good public schools. These you can not get without Federal aid; therefore it is essential to the development and improvement of the State. If this measure should be defeated and the people deprived of good public schools, they will hold the men who defeat it responsible, and fearful will be the responsibility.

From the State of Kentucky I have received several communications which I will read. The first is a communication from the president of the Teachers' Association of the State, R. W. Roark, and is as follows:

GLASGOW, KY., December 28, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I want to help by setting forth a few facts which possibly may be of some value. I find them true not only of Kentucky, but of many of the other Southern States.

It will be borne in mind that this is a communication from the presiding officer of the State Association of Teachers for the State of Kentucky. It is hardly possible that there could be a communication from higher authority upon this subject. He proceeds:

First, then, the large towns and cities in Kentucky illustrate what might be in the country districts—i. e., the establishment of good graded schools, with good buildings, furniture, and well-paid teachers, is strongly opposed; but when once established these schools receive a warmer support than in the North. The people are always ready to tax themselves to support them.

He says that before the schools are established the people strongly oppose them, and after they are established they are always ready to support them, even more so than the people of the North. I read this because it is applicable from his observations to the other parts of the South. He proceeds:

In the light of this fact let us look at two points:

First, conditions of education in Kentucky; second, needs (or need) of education in Kentucky.

First, conditions:

1. Teachers. Teaching does not offer money enough to tempt competent men and women; therefore the work falls largely into the hands of inefficient boys and girls who want to make a little "spending money." Such teachers—and the older ones who are in the work—consequently teach for the small amount of money involved, and for that only. They must, then, make out a living by doing something else at least half the time. There is very little professional spirit, of course, manifested by such a body. The teachers are shifting constantly from one school to another, and from teaching to other business. These teachers will gladly teach for the beggarly sum of $1.65 per capita which the State pays, and have been known to "throw in" a month in order to outbid a competitor! The people are not pleased, and the whole educational system falls into disrepute. Local taxation for helping such malpractice as the pupils suffer from will not be entertained without much educating of the people themselves.

2. Buildings. Such teachers will, of course, be content to teach in any sort of house, and do do so, although the law grants them to dismiss until "things are fixed." The buildings in the country are inferior to barns in very many cases; they have no furniture (worth the name), no blackboards, no apparatus. Here, in this town, claiming 3,000, and where three districts "cornered," we have had no school-house until this year! The teachers have been accustomed to supply their own furniture and to rent a house at their own expense. Glasgow supports two private schools very well.

3. County superintendents get beggarly pay, for the most part; and, like the teachers, have no professional spirit. Many of them can not, and few try to, give any tone to the schools. These officers have to eke out a living by some other work, and many of them are farmers, more yet are broken-down lawyers or patientless doctors, etc. They are careless of the kind of teachers they grind out through the examination mill. They hold institutes, and, so far as can be seen, pocket the fees themselves, etc.

4. Trustees (directors) are cut by same pattern. Few want the place; those who take it are often guilty of the most shameful neglect of duty or of the grossest nepotism—the bane of so many of our schools. No honor or dignity attaches to the place, and so it falls into all sorts of hands. The question these officers ask an applicant is—so often—not "What work can you do?" but "What is your price?" They try to secure the cheapest teacher, let him board himself and do his own janitoring.

5. Public opinion of the common schools is necessarily at a low ebb in such a state of affairs—must be to permit them. The schools are so worthless that many refuse to send to them. The people have no confidence in or respect for the profession of teaching in common schools. Then the old Southern aristocratic idea that the "common schools" are "poor folks'" schools prevails so largely. The rich man sends his children to good private schools, and does not feel like paying tax to keep up schools for his poor neighbor.

A point I always try to drive home is that although the South is Democratic politically it neglects the most democratic of all institutions, the public school. One very baneful result of such indifference is the springing up here and there, at almost every cross-roads, of catch-penny "seminaries," "colleges," "academies," etc., which are wholly irresponsible, wholly mercenary, and wholly unfit.

Second. Needs: There is one fundamental need; that is, more money. Growth of public sentiment would follow inevitably. We need money. To illustrate generally, the present work of the Kentucky State Teachers' Association must be educative, educative of the teachers, the people; educative rather than technical or professional. But lack of money prevents teachers from attending either annual meetings or State district meetings, or even county meetings, keeps them out of the reading circle, keeps them away from everything that might help to educate. The same applies to county superintendents. It is easy to see money is needed to help stir up public appreciation of our educational condition. Take the points as before:

1. Pay the teachers more, and we can get better ones; better ones will be in the market. Our own good ones will stay in the State and other good ones will come in. The work will become professional, and that means permanency of workers and growth of spirit.

2. While Federal money may not give us buildings, yet a better class of teachers, secured by increased pay, will insist upon better buildings, better furniture, better apparatus, etc., and will be able to so interest the public in their work and to so demonstrate the value of good work and good tools that better houses, furniture, etc., will come as a matter of course by subscription and local taxation.

3. If county superintendents had more money to handle the people would surely be more careful, at least in small towns and in the country, to place better men than now in the office. And if there were a living in the office, worthy and competent men would offer themselves as candidates, or be called out. In this State the county superintendent can exert a vast influence for good, if he be of the right sort. Our schools would be greatly improved by simply putting the right men in the office of county superintendent.

4. It is plain the same cause (more money) would operate to secure better trustees (directors) in the districts, for the people would elect, or the superintendents appoint, at least outside of city politics, worthier men than now to supervise the school, and select the teacher to whom this increase of money should be paid. Give these local officials relief on the money question and they would soon learn to ask, "Who is fitted?" not, as now, "Who is cheapest?" Experience with our city schools proves that when considerable money is involved the office of trustee grows in dignity, and worthy men are willing to serve, sometimes desire strongly to serve, though there is no salary or chance for nepotism.

5. As a natural result of all the facts above set forth, the people would have more confidence and interest in the public schools and would give them their influence and patronage. Whenever it is made plain that as good or better an education can be secured for a trifling tax as can be had by payment of large sums for private tuition, it is easy to see what will follow.

Then good public schools mean the death from inanition of the worthless, harmful cross-roads private schools, "academies," "seminaries," etc., with which the South is literally cursed. The demand would be for well-equipped colleges, whether private or State, and that they should do collegiate work, not primary and intermediate, as now. A State normal would surely be one result of this demand. Let me emphasize the peculiar fact, though it be irrelevant, that Kentucky sustains a good normal for the negroes, but none for whites, who must get professional instruction where they can.

I have written in this way because I know you were already in possession of the general facts of illiteracy, attendance, etc., and I wanted you to see some things as we do who work near them. I have tried to be suggestive and to state some salient difficulties.

I have stated the general rule. I am glad there are many gratifying and noteworthy exceptions to the conditions above given.

I shall be glad to be of service to you in any way.

Cordially,

R. N. ROARK,
President Glasgow Normal School,
President Kentucky State Teachers' Association.

Senator H. W. BLAIR,

I have just received, under postmark of January 20, a letter from Mrs. Margaret Anderson Watts, of Louisville, Ky., dated January 20, 1888, addressed to myself. She goes on to say that she will give me some facts concerning her own city, and proceeds:

I have attended several State teachers' associations, and out of about one hundred and fifty counties in the State there were not over fifty counties represented. Great stress was laid upon the fact that many of the counties were destitute of schools, and in some of the counties where they had schools they were not kept open but for a short time during the year. It does not matter what the newspapers and politicians say concerning the need of Federal aid for school purposes in the South, let any one who is true to himself and his country travel through Kentucky where the railroads have not penetrated, and the ignorance of the people is appalling.

The Courier-Journal, the leading paper of this city, is doing its best to deceive the people, trying to build up the sickly Democrats by flattery, saying that Kentucky has done all that was asked or expected to be done by the State.

For several winters past we women have made application to our Legislature for an appropriation to build a home for friendless women. We could not secure one dollar from the State. The cry was that the State was not in a financial condition to render such aid. The purpose of the home for friendless women was to educate them, of course, for many of the inmates were from fifteen to twenty years of ago, and more than half of them could not read and write. If the State of Kentucky is so able to educate all of her youth, why was the aid withheld from us who plead so earnestly for the small and insignificant amount of $5,000? I do not wish to intrude upon your valuable time, but would be glad to have you read my report at our last convention. I cut it out of the pamphlet and inclose it.

Respectfully,

MARGARET ANDERSON WATTS.

This lady is one of the leading members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and from her report I read a few extracts. She says:

It is too late in the day to argue about the expediency of land grants, or to what other purposes this heap of gold and silver could be applied. Money is what is needed now to lift the weight of illiteracy and ignorance off of the people.

It is too late now to discuss State rights. The seceding States have been reconstructed some years ago. The restoration of the Union proves the power of the National Government. As much harmony exists now as can exist while the discord of ignorance grates so harshly upon the ears of the educated.

It is too late now for the women of so great an organization as the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union to be silenced. Every subject connected with the welfare of humanity is a part of its existence. The women are pressing forward earnestly for the removal of illiteracy and ignorance, using whatever means God appoints to accomplish it.

It is too late now to say that women are too pure to touch politics. If this be true, then they are too pure for this world! A large proportion of the inhabitants of this world are women. They breathe the same atmosphere; they live under the same laws; they suffer the same annoyances, and feel keenly the same unjust oppression that partisan political voters do. How can they avoid being touched by politics, however unclean such may be?

She signs the report "M. A. Watts." Other matters she discusses ably, but I will not take the liberty to read them now.

I have here an address by Judge Beckner, an eminent citizen of Kentucky. In inclosing the address he writes me a personal letter under date December 3, 1887. This letter, with the consent of the Senate, as there are six or seven pages, I will ask to have printed in the RECORD with the other matter.

The letter is as follows:

WINCHESTER, KY., December 3, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I know of no measure likely to engage the attention of Congress of so much importance to the people of Kentucky as the Blair bill. We need its aid. Our pro rata, or per capita, for school purposes is $1.90. This gives to each school of forty pupils the sum of $76 with which to conduct a school for an entire year. Under our State constitution, the districts can not be compelled to supplement this per caput with local taxation. In the cities and larger towns of course there are graded schools, but even in a large majority of the county seats there are no free schools save those carried on from the proceeds of the per capita distribution. In the country districts the situation is deplorable. In richer sections of the State subscription schools are carried on for several months in each year, but even these are, as a general thing, under the control of a cheap class of teachers. Our people take a deeper interest in education now than they did a few years ago, but the apathy is still distressing. Under the census of 1880 nearly 30 per cent. of our population over ten years of age could not read or write, and the same could be said of 22 per cent. of our white population. Since then I doubt if the percentage has improved.

If we could be awakened to a proper interest in the education of the masses, there are difficulties to be encountered which those raised in the Eastern States can not easily understand. Compare Kentucky, for instance, with Massachusetts. Here we have over 40,000 square miles of territory; there they have only 7,000. Here we had only three hundred and fifty millions of taxable valuation under the census of 1880. There it was about sixteen hundred millions. Here the per caput is $1.90. There it is five times as much. How shall we on less than one-fourth the valuation raise enough school revenue to scatter over six times as much territory four times as much to each child? It is impossible; and yet the schools of Massachusetts are none too good, and we need the best even more than does that enlightened State with its two and a half centuries of common schools and its abundant colleges, to say nothing of its intelligent founders and its homogeneous population.

And then, again, we have the problem of two races that will not mingle in the schools. This is a question which many in the North do not understand, but it is a most serious and troublesome one with us. The negroes came out of slavery with habits and conditions that made them unfit for the association that mixed schools would bring. The greatest trouble that common schools meet with in the South is the demagogical cry of their enemies that they will lead to mixed schools. An eminent citizen who ought to know better condescended in the State canvass last summer to urge this as an objection to Federal aid. Had he taken the trouble to read the Blair bill he would have seen that there is nothing in its provisions to prevent the States from controlling, in every respect, the schools to which its aid would go.

And then, again, in Kentucky we have the prejudice against common schools which has come to us from Virginia. In all the Southern States the idea of pauper schools found early lodgment, but when Jefferson indicated that a system based on this idea would be a failure he was not understood. The ruling elements south of Mason and Dixon's line under the old régime were not much in favor of the education of the masses, and the traditions of the elders are obstacles to progress not easily overcome. The close of the war found the seceded States conquered provinces. They had to begin anew, and accepted conditions that would most readily enable them to rise. Kentucky was not subjugated, and her people are more stubborn about changes. There is a large element here (and in high places, too) who are willing to see pauper schools conducted, but who are not in sympathy with the idea of the common school, which means educational facilities for all that are good enough for the best. We will not have adequate provision for popular education for generations to come if your beneficent scheme fails. If we could have the efficiency of our system increased, which can not be done without more money, the people would see the value of the improvement and would not consent to return to the old conditions. Population and wealth would speedily increase, and the Constitution would be so changed as to give the Legislature power to pass laws sufficient to compel local aid in every district. The sentiment in favor of Federal aid is rapidly gaining ground in Kentucky. I am a Jeffersonian Democrat in politics, but take more interest in school questions than in those of any other nation. The feeling in favor of the Blair bill elected three Republicans to Congress from Kentucky in 1886. It will increase the number in 1888 if the Democratic leaders do not learn wisdom before their conventions are held.

I see no reasonable hope for schools for the children of this State sufficient for their proper education within the next generation or two unless Federal aid comes right speedily. It is more than a blunder for any Southern man to oppose it. He ought to be anathema maranatha in every household where there is a child. I do most ardently hope that you and the other good men of Congress may suceed in accomplishing what will be entitled to rank third in the great achievements of American statesmanship in the interests of humanity—first, the Declaration of Independence; second, the abolition of slavery, and, third, provision for the education of the masses, to whom must be intrusted the preservation of our liberties. They who oppose Federal aid in the South are of a class who insisted that slavery was a Divine institution, and would no doubt have been opposed to the revolutionary and unconstitutional course of those who severed the ties that bound America to Great Britain. I inclose a copy of an address which I prepared in the summer of 1886, and which, through the zeal of friends of the cause, was scattered throughout Kentucky to the extent of 50,000 copies. If I had the means and ability, I would canvass the State and stir the people until no public man would dare to stand out against the light and knowledge which the passage of your bill would certainly bring.

Yours, sincerely,

W. M. BECKNER.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR,
Washington City, D. C.

From Georgia I have communications which should be placed before the Senate. First, I will read an extract from a letter from Mr. R. R. Wright, who is a prominent colored citizen, and the same gentleman whom the honorable Senator who now is presiding [Mr. PUGH in the chair] will remember as a witness before the Committee on Education and Labor some four years ago. He was the last witness who was examined by the committee, and is a gentleman of great intelligence, a teacher himself, and now editor of what I should judge to be one of the leading colored papers in the country. He says:

AUGUSTA, GA., January 4, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: I have just returned from a pretty thorough tour of the State. During my absence I have taken occasion to ascertain whether the demand for national aid for education were as urgent now as ever. I have it to say to you that it is, in the opinion of hundreds of people with whom I have conversed, even more urgent. You of course know that there are but few places in the State where schools are in session more than sixty-five days. In many places, even in the large cities, children by the hundreds can not enjoy these few days for the lack of teachers and school room. I sincerely hope, not only for the sake of Richmond County's illiterates, but for the sake of the illiterates throughout Georgia and the South, that you will not hold up until the bill becomes a law. With their eyes upon the crying need for this aid, the Southern white and black man care nothing for the technical opposition urged by some gentlemen.

You are aware of the fact that we held a most enthusiastic meeting here last year, urging the passage of the bill. The meeting was presided over by the mayor and addressed by the most prominent white and colored citizens in the city.

At the last meeting of our State Teachers' Association, to which the governor, General John B. Gordon, delivered the welcome address, the following resolution was passed and a telegram sent you:

"Be it resolved by the State Teachers' Association, assembled in the capitol of Georgia, That this body telegraph to Senator BLAIR our hearty approval of his godly effort to relieve the illiterates of the South by the passage of the educational bill.

"Resolved further, That we request and urge our Senators and Representatives to use every honorable endeavor in their power to secure the adoption of said bill, commonly called the Blair educational bill."

This body was made up of teachers from all over the State, and of both white and colored teachers, earnestly engaged in the work of educating the people.

The people are with you; God is with you; and we believe that you will finally succeed.

Yours, sincerely,

RICHARD R. WRIGHT,
Principal Ware High School.

Senator H. W BLAIR.

From Dodge County, in the State of Georgia, I have this communication:

Henry Coleman, dealer in general merchandise—

But who, it seems, is county school commissioner of Dodge County—

EASTMAN, GA., December 20, 1887.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the county school commissioners, in the city of Atlanta, during the month of July, a resolution, which I had the honor to introduce, was unanimously adopted requesting the Senators and Representatives to encourage the passage of your educational bill. Public sentiment in Georgia is for it. In this county the number of white children attending public schools is 1,221; colored, 610; an increase from last year of 38 per cent. whites and 23 per cent. of colored. The fund that is appropriated by the State does not meet the requirements, and unless national aid is given the public-school system is in danger.

Pardon for the liberty I take in writing, but I feel it a sense of duty to give you this information.

I remain, your obedient servant,

HENRY COLEMAN,
County School Commissioner, Dodge County, Georgia.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR.

Mr. DAWES. Why does not the State pay more? It is a rich State.

Mr. BLAIR. If you examine the valuation of the State and compare it with that of other States, you will find that they are paying as high taxes for all purposes as most other States. They are rich, but it is in the ground mainly, and it has got to be dug out. Most of the capital that is going to the South is, as you know, being invested in a way that does not help the schools. People first construct houses; they develop their mines; they erect their manufactories; they do not go to educating their children. Northern people do not go down there with Northern capital for that purpose.

Another thing: I imagine that Northern people going down there, many of them, the capitalists, are perfectly willing that the average condition of the people should remain pretty much as it is; that they are not anxious to educate them. Labor is cheap, and it will always remain cheap until it is educated. On the other hand, it never will consume much until it is educated, and the development of the South will make a market at the South for all her increased productions.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator has any evidence upon which he founds the statement which he has just made, that Northern people go down into Georgia and such States as Georgia to invest their capital, with a desire that the people there shall continue, if they are now, in ignorance in order that labor shall be cheap—if he has any evidence upon which he makes that remark, I should like to have it put on the record with his statement.

Mr. BLAIR. The statement has not been made. I do not propose that the Senator shall make a statement for me to go on the record. He has misapprehended me entirely. I said this——

Mr. DAWES. I should like to have the Senator make it so clear that other Northern people as well as myself will understand it. I am afraid they will mistake him as I have done myself.

Mr. BLAIR. I will endeavor to do so. I made no such statement. I say this, that I believe the primary purpose of the investment of capital from the North or from any other country in the South is the development of her wealth for the purpose of self-appropriation. I say that that is the rule throughout the universe, so far as I know the universe. Men do not go there to educate the people; they go there to build factories, to develop mines, to establish diversified industries, on account of the money that they hope to make thereby. They understand, many of them, of course, that intelligence is an improvement of any community. They do not object to the increase of intelligence; but they are not interested especially in the increase of intelligence to the extent of going there with their capital with that view. That is not their purpose; it is not their primary design; they go for the investment of capital. But I say in regard to cheap labor that I believe as a rule the capitalistic elements of the country are willing that labor should continue cheap because it lessens the price of commodities, whether at the North or at the South.

Mr. DAWES. Did not the Senator say he believed that Northern capitalists went down there perfectly willing, if not desirous, that labor should remain cheap and in ignorance?

Mr. BLAIR. I did not say "if not desirous." If I did say it, I certainly did not design to do so. I believe that the object of the investment of capital in the South is the development of industries and the making of money, and that is why the surplus of Northern capital overflows and goes to the South; and I think that unless along with this there be a development, an elevation, an evolution, and a betterment of the condition of the common people of the South, the laboring people of the North and the fixed capital of the North will feel——

Mr. DAWES rose.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will please not interrupt me. The fixed capital of the North and the labor of the North will soon find in competition with their home production a cheaper commodity visiting every Northern market, competition with which will be infinitely more troublesome to Northern industries than that which we provide against by our protective tariff. It is absolutely indispensable to the safety of the capital, of the labor, of the industrial condition of the masses of Northern people, owing to the free trade which exists between the States, and which must always exist between the States, that the competition arising from the development and diversification of the industries of the South, based as it is upon their cheaper labor, should in some way be met. Otherwise it is inevitable that the prices of Northern labor must fall to the prices of Southern labor.

One of the great objects which I, as an individual, have in this bill, so far as my own people are concerned, is to do them good by providing for the general development of the Southern people, by the elevation of the masses, so that they shall comprehend their rights; that by the attainment of intelligence and skill and consequent knowledge of those wants which go to make up civilized life, they shall be able to ask and to receive as wages for their labor that increased compensation which is indispensable in order to have a proper purchasing power. When that is done the result will be that the South will herself become the great market for all that she produces. That will be the result of a general elevation of the people of the South and a homogeneous condition of all the people throughout the country. It will relieve the North from that free-trade competition which is inevitable in the near future, for many of the industries of the South are to-day meeting with the productions of the North in the markets of the North, and taking them away from the North.

That must inevitably result in a competition when everything is produced at the South that is produced at the North, for it is unrestricted; there is no tariff; it is free trade between the States; and it must inevitably result in a competition ruinous to the existing rate of wages and the existing condition of civilization, which is simply the existence and the satisfaction of wants on the part of the common people of the North; and so of the capital of the North, which is fixed there, and can not make its transit and invest itself in the Southern portion of the country, and thus take advantage of the cheap condition of labor which now exists in the South.

On the other hand, it might be said that the operation of a bill of this kind in developing and elevating and improving the condition of the masses of the people at the South, by making labor more expensive, would be injurious to the development of the industries of the South. But that is not true at all, for as you develop the masses of the people at the South, as you give them intelligence to comprehend what belongs to a more highly civilized condition of life, and increase their wages, they become a consuming power, precisely as at the North. The people of the North, the producers of the North, the manufacturers, find in the North itself the principal market wherein they dispose of their productions.

Mr. DAWES. Now, will the Senator yield? I ask him if he does not think that the capitalist of the North understands that question just as well as he does, and that the more intelligent the laborer is the greater the reward? Does he not think that the intelligent capitalist of the North who takes his capital down into the Southern country understands that just as well as he does, and that the more intelligent the laborer, the employé, is the greater his return will be? Why then does the Senator say that capitalists in the North seek to invest their capital in Southern States and at the same time are perfectly willing, if not desirous, that the employés shall remain ignorant?

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator again uses a phrase which I have already repudiated. I said simply that the primary purpose of the Northern capitalist in going to the South is a business motive. He goes there because there are resources, there is cheaper labor, and for the time being he can manufacture with his surplus capital at a cheaper rate than at the North and reach markets which he otherwise could not reach.

Mr. DAWES. If it is for remuneration, and the Senator goes on to argue that remuneration is greater where there is a greater intelligence, then if the Northern capitalist is intelligent and understands what is his interest, it is just as much for his interest when he gets down in the Southern States to see to it that his employé is an intelligent man as it is when he is in the North.

Mr. BLAIR. That is a good argument; it is a legitimate conclusion. I did not say it was not a good argument; it is the argument I am making. I was talking of the primary motive which always leads capital from one section to another section, or from one country to another, and I was pointing to a class of people who are the masses of our people at the North, the laboring, working element of the North, and to a coming competition from the South, based on the free trade between a cheaper form of labor, a cheaper form of production at the South than at the North; and I point to it, too, as something for the consideration of Northern capital, the great mass of which must continue, as it is now fixed, in the Northern States.

As to the intelligence of the Northern capitalist, of course he has intelligence. I am not so tender-footed about saying something that may possibly affect the feelings of Northern capitalists. I have no purpose in advocating this bill but the general good of the whole country, and I am thinking something of the good of my own section of the country as well as of the South in reckoning from an industrial standpoint. I say to-day, under the solemnity of my convictions and my responsibility here in this seat, that I believe the North is as much interested in the passage of this bill as is the South. We are spending life and are ready to endure death to prevent a reduction of the tariff. We consider it absolutely indispensable for the continuance of the prosperity of Northern industry, and why? Because we fear that if the tariff is reduced the productions of the Old World will come in here and swamp our industries, break them down, and turn our people loose upon some other occupation or turn them loose in simple idleness and want and destitution. We therefore keep up our tariff and fence out foreign productions, and fence out foreign industry—at least we propose to do it, and have already done it in the case of Chinamen.

Everybody knows that all kinds of labor at the South average scarcely anything more in actual cash than 50 per cent. of what we pay to the Northern laborer. I have seen the Southern laborer in the factory, the white laborer, as skillful, and I believe even more skillful than the average white laborer at the North employed in the factory. The same Anglo-Saxon blood, the same sort of blood that was in the factories of Lowell and elsewhere in New England forty years ago is in the factories of the South to-day, not so well educated as it ought to be and as it gladly would be. The fire in the eyes, the deftness of the fingers, the handiness of the work in the mills is, I think, in excess of that which is developed in the mills of the North to-day, coming as the operatives do, not from the loins of New England, but from other countries as well; and I believe that man for man, operative for operative, in the Southern mills they will produce as much to-day as they do in the North. Yet they do not consume as much; production does not cost as much.

We have no tariff against the South. We want no tariff against the South. We are politically joined and must continue so; but unless there be a homogeneous condition produced throughout the whole country it is inevitable that the labor where it is the highest must sink to the cost of the labor where it is lowest, and there is no way to change the price of labor among the masses of the people of the South but by educating them and developing them. They will see then their wants. They will read the newspapers, and there is another want. They will desire that which goes to make up a higher civilization. They will demand proper pay. They know what compensation the Northern laborer gets, and they will increase their own wages accordingly. If necessary, they will combine, as workmen do at the North, and sustain themselves in these great conflicts with capital. What is the result? The cost of production will become uniform with the cost of production at the North.

But our country is increasing immensely at the South as well as at the North, and with this multiplication of wants among the common people of the South will come added to it the purchasing power of which I spoke. From their increased wages will come the power to consume at home, and there is the market for all the increased productions of the South, no matter to what extent it may be carried.

That is my theory so far as the Northern people are concerned in advocating a distribution of this money in such a way as to give the South, so far as her schools are concerned, the benefit of the great mass of it; and I think the South will get along and feel the pinch less than will the North unless something of this kind is done. I say the South will feel the pinch less, because that which a man has had and enjoyed it is difficult for him to surrender. If he has had a better house, a better garment, a better education, if in the thousand respects which appertain to the higher enjoyments of life he has had his wants satisfied, when he is deprived of them, when his purchasing power disappears by the reduction of his wages, he inevitably suffers; but the man who never enjoyed these things, or the family which never possessed them, gets along in the same old way.

I have here a letter from Mobile, Ala., on the same subject, from Philip Joseph, which I will submit:

MOBILE, ALA., January 4, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Herewith please find copy of thirty-second annual report of superintendent of education of the State of Alabama. It is for 1886, six years since the census. It is the latest report. The State superintendent of education in this State and all of the county superintendents are Democrats, so that presumably the figures furnished are not unfavorable to their side. I have thought you would prefer drawing your own inferences from these tables; but I beg to invite attention to page 89, wherein you will find the white scholars taught per teacher are an average of 39, while the average colored is 48—in favor of the whites nearly 30 per cent.

In cities (pages 96-97) the annual school terms range from 140 to 200 days, the latter term existing in Birmingham only, where there has been a great influx of energy and capital. In all other places in country districts, from 40 to 75 days, an average of about three months. Fifty-nine days' schooling in Walker County, where the boasted coal deposits exist (see pages 92, 93, 94, 95). You will observe that tuition to colored children is almost wholly confined to orthography, reading, writing, and arithmetic; and even in these elements the number of colored children taught is very much less than the whites.

Only 12,157 colored children are taught grammar, 3,742 history, and 348 algebra (see page 95). Average length of school term, including the cities, 87.25 days (see page 98). Outside of the cities, no comfortable school-house or furniture is provided at all for the colored children or the poorer whites; churches or rude cabins are used for this purpose. Pages 84, 85, 86 show the comparative salaries paid, but you will see that the compensation to colored teachers is less than that paid to white teachers. In a number of districts throughout this State no colored schools exist.

My personal knowledge and observation of the condition of education among the children of both races in the States of Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, and Louisiana would warrant me in saying that the need of national aid to schools is as great now as when "the Blair educational bill" was first introduced by you, eight years ago.

I inclose letter from an old teacher and ex-secretary of the Mobile County school board, referring to the schools in this city and county.

Very truly, yours,

PHILIP JOSEPH.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR, United States Senate.

Here is a telegram showing the action of the Teachers' Association of Georgia:

ATLANTA, GA., May 13, 1887.

SIR: By a unanimous vote of the Georgia State Teachers' Association, I am directed to express its hearty sympathy for you in your struggle for popular education.

G. A. GOODWIN,
Recording Secretary.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR.

I have a letter from Rev. A. G. Haygood, which I am very desirous of reading. He is the agent of the Slater fund. His position is analogous to that of the superintendent of the Peabody fund. He says:

DECATUR, GA., November 24, 1887.

DEAR SIR: Go on with the bill for national aid. It is more needed in the South with each year; illiteracy outgrows wealth. The South is not able to carry its double burden of ignorance and poverty. The nation put on the negro the burden of citizenship before he was ready, and the nation owes it to him; the nation owes it to the South, that more than any other section feels the danger of an illiterate vote strong enough to control elections; the nation owes it to itself. The South is not prosperous outside a few cities. Where the burden pinches most, in the rural districts, the people are poor and unable to carry their burden. The nation has a vast surplus. Teach these people it made free before they were ready.

The census states the facts and makes the argument.

My work carries me through the South from Washington to Texas. I see the things of which I write.

Respectfully,

A. G. HAYGOOD,
General Agent of the John F. Slater Fund.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR, Washington City.

I have here a letter from West Virginia, which is as follows:

BEVERLY, RANDOLPH COUNTY, WEST VIRGINIA, April 27, 1887.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 21st instant at hand requesting me to give you certain information and opinion as to national aid to public schools. West Virginia is not as needy as some of her Southern sisters, but when her present sources of taxation are considered and her needs for present necessities summed up, the absolute necessities are apparent. It is unnecessary to argue the matter. Our Senators and Representatives are favorable to the measure. I am convinced that four-fifths of our people would sign a petition for national aid, and an equal portion would vote for it were it submitted to them.

Yours, truly,

B. L. BUTCHER.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR,
Washington, D. C.

I have received the following letter from Mississippi:

WALNUT GROVE, MISS., January 2, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of late date asking for information on the state of education is at hand.

There is so much that ought to be said that I do not know where to begin, but if there is any section of country that needs Federal aid to education more than any other, it is Central Mississippi. The public-school system of this State is worse than a mockery. Under the law we can only have four months of free school during the year. The maximum salary is $55 per month and the minimum $15, but there are few who get more than $35 per month. This salary is paid in three to twelve months after it is due—oftener the latter than the former. The effects of such a system are apparent. The best teachers, as a rule, seek more lucrative positions in other States, and the second and third grade schools are kept—not taught—by those who are not equal to the task in education and, in many cases, in natural endowment.

There are a few leaders who are laboring earnestly for the great cause of education, but the great mass of the people lie dormant. The awakening has not come to them yet, and I fear it never will unless we can get more money with which to back the school system. The people as a body do not yet see the importance of universal education. We need more active men and women, more true teachers, in the field, and in order to get them we must have more money. Those who know anything of the state of affairs, as a rule, are favorable toward your bill, though many never heard of its existence. I have been doing all in my power to enlighten them, but it is a very difficult process. I send you herewith a copy of my paper, from which you will see that I am an advocate of "Federal aid."

Hoping that you may be successful in your efforts in behalf of popular education, I am, with best wishes,

Yours, truly,

W. C. ROATEN.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR,
Washington, D. C.

I have here the proceedings of the State Teachers' Association of the State of Arkansas, in 1887. It resolved as follows:

Whereas existing conditions are such as to render it impossible to turn back the tide of illiteracy that is bearing down upon us without long years of labor, much expenditure of local revenue; and

Whereas this Government reaps the benefit of whatever is or has been expended by any portion of it for the promotion of intelligence:

Be it resolved, That the Arkansas State Teachers' Association, in convention assembled, recognizing the wisdom that prompts immediate and systematic steps being taken towards the removal of illiteracy from all portions of our land, does hereby express its sentiments in favor of such national aid as shall supplement State school funds, the expenditure of which we firmly believe to be necessary to our contentment and well-being.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished our Representatives in Congress and the various State papers.

On motion of Mr. Sampson the resolutions were adopted by a rising vote.

The work of the association having reached its closing, the retiring president presented the incoming president the gavel, and no further business appearing, the Arkansas State Teachers' Association was declared adjourned sine die.

J. J. DOYNE, Secretary.

I have here what perhaps should be read in this connection, a letter from Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, for many years, as is well known, the president of the board of trustees of the Peabody fund. Since his connection with that board he has always been a strong advocate of Federal aid to common-school education, exclusively, perhaps, or primarily, in the South, and he has been a strong advocate of this bill. Time after time he has so expressed himself to me and to many others. He writes a letter under date of January 25, 1887, addressed to Rev. Dr. Stearns, chancellor of the New York University:

BOSTON, January 25, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR: I was glad to learn by your kind letter of the 11th instant that you were proposing to make Mr. Peabody's great gift for the schools of the South the subject of special commemoration at the normal college on the 7th of February next.

Twenty years will then have been completed since his letter of trust was placed in my hands. The original letter is before me at this moment, dated "Washington, February 7, 1867," with the autograph signature of George Peabody. You have just called it "one of the most remarkable and important letters ever written in this country." The munificent endowment which it announced was the first practical manifestation on a grand scale of that spirit of conciliation by which alone the wounds of the civil war could be healed and peace restored to our land. That letter gave also the earliest impulse to that cause of common-school education which was vital to the regeneration of the States impoverished and devastated by the war. And still further, it afforded the grand example, which has been so happily followed in later years, of a rich man pouring out millions during his lifetime for the relief and welfare of his fellow-countrymen in their distress. In all these ways Mr. Peabody's letter of the 7th of February, 1867, was indeed most remarkable and most important, and one of these days it will find a place among the most precious manuscripts of our country, perhaps in the new Congressional Library at Washington.

Congress, as you may remember, awarded a costly gold medal to Mr. Peabody in grateful recognition of his patriotic philanthropy, and his letter of trust may well be ultimately assigned to the archives of the Government.

Meantime that letter has already accomplished great results. Every expectation and hope of the writer has been fulfilled. Excellent school laws in all the Southern States, thriving common schools in many of the cities and towns, and a deep pervading interest in the work of education animating the whole people, all unite in attesting the influence and inspiration of Mr. Peabody's letter. Your own normal college, with its more than one hundred Peabody scholarships, is a noble illustration of what, I trust, it is destined to accomplish in still larger measure in future years.

Of those to whom the letter was addressed, sixteen in all, five only are living, and only four are still members of the board of trustees. I can not be too grateful to a kind Providence that I have been privileged to preside over this distinguished board from the first, agreeably to the appointment of Mr. Peabody himself. He had taken me into his confidence six or seven months before his letter was signed, and I had promised to watch over his great trust so long as health and strength should permit me. It has been one of the greatest satisfactions of my life to do so, and will be to the end.

Education is the great necessity of our country. Free government can rest securely on no other basis than free schools. Increasing millions of people, with votes in their hands which they can neither write nor read, are a standing menace to the safety of our institutions and the purity of our elections. With a surplus revenue in our Treasury which Congress seems incapable either to reduce or squander, it is lamentable that all national aid for the children of the schools should continue to be denied or evaded. But I dare not dwell on this topic. Believe me, dear Dr. Stearns, with the warmest wishes for the prosperity and welfare of the normal college at Nashville,

Your friend and servant,

ROBERT C. WINTHROP.

Rev. Dr. STEARNS,
Chancellor of Nashville University.

I have observed, introduced by some Senator in the debate, a statement that General Armstrong, of the Virginia Normal Institute, has lately developed into an opponent of national aid to education. I can not believe it. He was early one of the active agents in initiating these movements, and always supported them. I have here a report of his as late as 1886, in which he strongly advocates the employment of additional aid for the benefit of common-school education. If he has changed his mind since that time I can only say that it is against the universal testimony of educators in the South as far as I know. The great mass of educators North and South, the great educational bodies, the religious bodies, the intelligent gentlemen, the observers, and all who seem to have actual knowledge of the facts, as far as I know, with scarce an exception, testify uniformly in this same direction.

The school itself is a charity, and it has been extraordinary that a man living in a State which is going behind in the matter of literacy, and himself supported by the charity of that State and of the National Government in his institution—that he of all men should come out against the existing order of development of things and protest against anything like national aid. I have understood it to be stated that this is the case with General Armstrong. I do not believe in the story of his having ceased to be an advocate of national aid. I will read what he said in his report of 1886:

The movement in this State is active. * * *

The nation which freed and enfranchised four million of slaves, thereby creating most serious and dangerous political conditions, has felt its responsibility, and has from time to time attempted to do something towards cultivating intelligence and moral sense of its new-made citizens. The "Blair bill" is the last expression of this feeling, and has failed.

Undeniably, a better measure might have been prepared. Too much was asked for in too short a time, and this mistake gave some justification to the cry of "pauperizing the South."

That, allow me to observe, is a matter of opinion. The whole amount which this bill would give in the first year is only $7,000,000 for the entire country, and the amount expended in the entire South would be less than is expended in many a single Northern State, and such a statement as that must be made in very comprehensive ignorance of the facts.

Undeniably a better measure might have been prepared. Too much was asked for in too short a time, and this mistake gave some justification to the cry of "pauperizing the South." The fifteen millions given by Northern charity for Southern (chiefly negro) education have had a tremendous mental and moral result.

Just so. It has not belittled the people; it has not taken away their self-dependence and reliance. It is said to have been a good thing coming from private charity. It is difficult to see how it would make any difference to the child if the money that educates him comes from the nation, from the State, from the parent, or from a charity. If there is a self-reliant and intelligent gentleman here on this floor he has received his education not from himself, but from an outside source; and to supply education in this country has cost millions and millions beyond the amount with which this bill undertakes to supplement the efforts of the States themselves. As to its producing a bad effect upon the people who are now subject to taxation and who are too poor to suffer additional taxation, I will say that they are now, with all their poverty, bearing greater percentages of burden in many cases than are the rich and wealthy States of the North.

The three and a half millions of Government money issued by the educational department of the Freedmen's Bureau between 1865 and 1870 was the means of teaching a million black children to read and write. It did broad foundation work for the institutions that were to follow it, and, in my opinion, wise and legitimate means can be found for using national aid against that worst enemy of republics, an ignorant population. The need of it for the enormous mass of illiterate blacks and whites is unquestionable.

The need of national aid he is speaking of again:

There is danger in neglect of them, and we who know what the trouble of the past has been, see the trouble ahead and feel that the worst is yet to come.

This is found in the Virginia school report of 1886, the sixteenth annual report of the superintendent of public instruction, for the year ending July 31, 1886. It is absolutely incomprehensible that since then, there having been no change of facts or circumstances, General Armstrong has pronounced any well-considered opinion to the contrary.

I have here the Progressive Teacher, published at New Orleans, which seems to be a paper published in the school teachers' interest. It is dated "New Orleans, January 15, 1887." That is a misprint in the date. It should be 1888. Speaking of Alabama, it says:

No State in the Union possibly is at this time making such gigantic strides towards material development as is the State of Alabama.

Numerous railroads are being surveyed and built through the territory. Towns are springing into existence as if by magic. New and better residences are being built in town and village. Manufacturing enterprises of gigantic proportions are going up in many sections. Her great iron furnaces outnumber those of any other State. Capital is pouring into her lap. Her population is rapidly increasing. The present is probably the most important period in the history of this great State.

With all this material prosperity, what of her public schools? What of her school-houses? Three months in the year, and often in a miserable hut or an open, barn-like church. Not enough money spent on them to arouse an interest in the public school. Salaries so meager for teacher and superintendent that no man can live by this work. Half-paid, and therefore half-prepared, teachers. Fifty per cent. of illiteracy, and that on the increase. What is the remedy? More money, more money! This is the only remedy. Can our legislators not see that the amount spent does not accomplish the purpose for which it is intended? Can they not see that the force is lost by being scattered? That twice the amount will do four times the good? No system can accomplish anything without support. Nothing can run itself, and to half-way do a thing is not wise. Give the schools a chance. Give the children a chance. Ignorance is dangerous. The safety of a republic lies in the intelligence of its citizens. We must educate or suffer for our negligence. But what can a public-school system do with only 50 cents per capita for its educatable children? Not much. Would not Alabama better double her appropriation or double her endeavors to have the Blair bill passed by the Congress?

Now in regard——

Mr. HAWLEY. Before the Senator passes from that I should like to make an inquiry.

Mr. BLAIR. Allow me to make one observation while it is in my mind. In regard to the allegation that in all instances States fail to tax themselves according to their capacity to endure taxation, I think, from the facts I have submitted, that is shown not to be so; but even if that were so, with whom are we dealing? We are not dealing alone with the interests of the States; we are not dealing with those too old to attend school and who have on themselves the burden of life, who must live and who must die under substantially the conditions which now surround them.

We are dealing with the children, not of the State alone, but of the whole country. The question is whether they shall be educated. The child can not wait while we are dawdling here as to whether we shall compel the States to pay it all or will give our aid; and if the States fail to realize the necessity of educating their children, if the States or municipalities in the States by reason of the fact that they are unaccustomed to the common schools, by reason of the conditions which formerly existed but are passing away—if, by reason of these former conditions, they have failed to appreciate the necessity of education (for it is an indispensable necessity with reference to the future), are we to permit this to go on, having the means, having the constitutional power—I speak now to those who believe in that constitutional power—simply because even the people do not want it? Are we to fail to give it, and, by such means as are in our power, see as to its proper distribution and judicious use? On the principle contended for, you should have refused the $15,000,000 of Northern charity and over that which has found its way South.

How would the Peabody fund have accomplished the great good which it has accomplished if this idea were to be followed? That was an impulse from a remote corner of the Republic, from a single individual, and the same principle which carries benevolence wherever it will do good, and which is invited from the locality where it is expended and where it must locate itself, requires that this great nation apprehending the want shall relieve that want; and when once it has been relieved, when once people understand the necessity of this institution, how it will promote their interests and the interests of their children, morally, mentally, materially, in every way, they will stand by the common school, as they do in our Northern States, until the death, for they will feel that its destruction would be death.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wished, while the Senator was talking about Northern capital going South, and about Alabama, to measurably correct what I think is a mistaken impression which he has imbibed. Florida, for example, judging by his own reports, has shown a great deal of public spirit and energy about the matter of education. I have been in the habit of attributing that, to a considerable extent, to the Northern people who go down there, most of them with some means, and some of them quite well off, as the world goes, and who carry with them their early traditional impressions in regard to popular education.

One thing more as to the importation of Northern capital into the South. The Senator's remarks about Alabama remind me of the fact that two very large and flourishing towns, in one case a new town and another growing to be such, were established by capital from Connecticut. I refer for one to Anniston, and for the other to the Shelby Iron Works. I happen to know in regard to one of them particularly, and the other by inquiry, that there is nobody in the South more favorable to religious and intellectual education than those two concerns that went down there according to the Senator's idea simply to carry away the dollars from the locality. There are to be found churches and school-houses in Anniston, I think, entirely built up by the corporation, and in Shelby they have assisted public education and are generous and public-spirited people who carried not only their capital, but their traditions with them.

Mr. BLAIR. I dislike that Senators should attempt to place me in a false attitude. I have said nothing, I have thought nothing that justifies the conclusion to which the Senator from Connecticut seems to have arrived in his own mind that I was complaining.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me explain now. I do not mean that the Senator said anything more than this, that they went down there with their capital honestly and in the ordinary mercantile way, but that their purpose was to go there to make money. I say they carried with them higher purposes than mere money-making.

Mr. BLAIR. I said that capital seeking the South went there to improve its chances. I did not say that citizens from the North going South, locating themselves permanently there, and becoming a part of the community, knowing what was necessary for the benefit of their own families, which by reflex action would affect the happiness of the community, and their children in time to come—I did not say that those people did not carry Northern institutions with them. They do that, and from undoubtedly as high motive as anybody does good to others while doing good to himself. That is all true and all right. I was speaking of the necessity of some attention to this matter on the part of the people of the North who are to remain in the North, the capital and the industry in the North, that it was important to them that the development of the masses of the Southern people should go on with equal step with the development of their industries, in order that the South might not become the great competing producing country under the operation of the protective-tariff idea, which is the great source of danger to our Northern industries and our institutions. The mass of the people of the North get the great proportion of that which is produced there—they get it in wages—but no man can get anything that he has not the ability to pay for.

All admit that the purchasing power of the Northern laborer is better because he has in his wages greater purchasing power than the laborer at the South; but when you give the laborer at the South corresponding intelligence he will know then what belongs to him; he will ask high wages, and he will get his pay, and it becomes part of the component cost of production, and with these wages he consumes at home and he will buy at home, and the South becomes then like the most advanced communities at the North.

In this same paper there is a short editorial upon national aid. I had perhaps better not take the time of the Senate to read it. It is largely devoted to the advocacy of this measure, or something which has a prospect of the results contemplated by this measure.

I desire to have read, which I ask the Secretary to read for me, a letter from Dr. A. D. Mayo, which I find in the Springfield Daily Republican. I suppose the Senate will understand that Dr. Mayo, a Northern gentleman, a citizen of Massachusetts, has for the last thirty or more years devoted himself, I think wholly, to a peripatetic acquaintance with the condition of Southern education, keeping up his connection with Northern educators and carrying from the North all that he could to the South, and devoting himself with ability and zeal and success to the general good of the Southern as well as the Northern people, and to the course of education, that has made him one of the great benefactors of his time. He has been assailed, as all men are assailed who amount to anything, and he has written this letter, which I think will be instructive to the Senate, and I ask to have it read from the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

NATIONAL AID TO EDUCATION.

To the Editor of the Republican:

The enemies of the Blair educational bill, who flatter themselves that national aid to education is a lost cause, will probably be enlightened by the immediate passage of a similar measure through the Senate. Then for the third time within five years this important legislative act will appear at the bar of the House, claiming the ordinary right of a fair discussion on its merits. We believe it will not be a wholesome or safe exercise of the powers vested in a few leaders to prevent such consideration again as in the past.

The main ground of open opposition to the measure has already been outlined in the opposition press. But it is evident that the most obstinate opponents and most vital reasons for this persistent opposition are behind the scenes. One thing is demonstrated already—that every man, North or South, opposed to the present tendency and importance of the public-school system, and who desires for any reason to curtail its power, will be found in his own place with a decided negative. It is not necessary to disparage the motives of this formidable host arrayed in opposition to the American public school; but the fact remains, and the friends of national aid will be compelled to meet and overcome every form of this hostility. Of course there are friends of the public school now and then influential, who will act on the same line; but the "old guard" of the opposition, North and South, remains.

It only needs a glance at the ostensible grounds of opposition to dispose of some that have been vigorously worked. The attempt to disparage national aid by painting Senator BLAIR as a crank, and fastening its authorship and chief advocacy upon unreliable and visionary schoolmen, disappears with the fact that the Blair bill is simply the Senate bill wrought into its present form after five years of the most searching criticism by the leaders of both parties and sections, assisted by the most eminent public-school men of the North and South. Any bill that passes the Senate will be of the same sort.

The great debate of three years ago in the Senate, one of the ablest, broadest, and most vital in all ways since the war, effectually disposed not only of the "constitutional" objection, but of the pretense that this is a new question sprung upon the country. The bill has passed muster before almost every great lawyer in the Senate, and is demonstrated to be in the direct line of the national policy from the beginning. Nothing would please its friends better than that the ex-governor of South Carolina, Lawyer Chamberlain, should execute his threat of carrying it before the Supreme Court.

The grounds of opposition this winter will be, first, that public interest in the bill has died; second, that the South is getting on well enough now without it; third, that it would paralyze home effort if passed.

The question must turn finally on the attitude of the South. The opinions and theories of educational philosophers, politicians, and even important journals in the North will finally be tested by the deliberate and growing conviction of the competent class of the Southern people, with the grounds of their faith. It is not understood, as it should be, that this bill is neither a theory of a few schoolmen, a political bribe offered to the South, or anything but a legitimate cause that has grown in a natural way from a growing public necessity, and was never so powerful when clearly understood as to-day. When Mr. HOAR pushed through the House his original bill, he represented the most advanced and reliable estimate of Southern needs by the best-informed common-school public of the South. The measure originated in this quarter, and from the first almost every eminent public-school man of the South has been its determined advocate.

The growth of public Southern opinion in the ex-Confederate States has been irresistible, overcoming every form of opposition, till only five of the twenty-two Senators of that section have opposed it in the Senate, and three of them misrepresent Tennessee, Alabama, and South Carolina. Each of these eleven States, if polled to-day, would cast a heavy majority of the white with the solid column of the colored vote in the affirmative. If Texas is excepted, even there the common-school public is practically unanimous, as shown by repeated demonstration of its representative teachers. The Southern opposition is most powerful in Maryland, Kentucky, and Missouri. But in each of those States the leading public-school men are almost unanimous in its favor, and the general public less informed because not pressed by such imperative need. With one or two exceptions every leading Southern journal is its advocate. Within the past year Southern public opinion has rapidly developed, as shown in the adoption of the measure by the Democratic leaders of Virginia, the revolt of the Democratic governor of Tennessee from the Harris plank in the State platform, and by the growing impatience with every Congressman in open opposition. It is as easy to deny this and to keep exclusively among the opposition as to live for a year in Boston in eminent families who have lost faith in republican institutions or to walk on the shady side of the street; but the fact remains.

The grounds of this conviction, by that portion of the Southern people who look to universal education through the common school for the only permanent relief of the ills that worry and the perils that threaten Southern society, are easy to be seen. All assertions, doctoring of statistics, optimistic expectations, and oratorical buncomb, North and South, to the contrary notwithstanding, these cold facts remain:

First. That of 6,000,000 children and youth in need of a good country district school in the sixteen Southern States, not 3,000,000 are to-day in constant and effective attendance on any school four months in the year, to say nothing of the brief term of school years possible for the Southern girl and boy.

Second. That to achieve this the common school public of the South has lashed the Southern people very near to the dead-line of taxation for education, many of their towns now exceeding, and the whole South falling but little below, the North in its expenditure, according to valuation.

Third. While the valuation of New England equals, and of Massachusetts and New York largely excels, the whole South, and the savings banks of Massachusetts could pocket the State of Georgia, it is idle to talk of the possibility of meeting this emergency by home effort for years to come. There is no such general boom down South as justifies any reasonable expectation of large immediate increase in the school funds. To-day, Massachusetts expends half as much on her 500,000 school children as the whole South on its 6,000,000. Meanwhile, the barbarism we call illiteracy broods, a threatening cloud, over the abyss of the lower side of Southern life.

Turn and twist and declaim as we may, this is the situation as reported by men like Drs. Haygood and Curry, President Johnston, Governor Thompson—indeed everybody who has looked this thing through to the end. If there is any better cause than this which the common-school Southern public now present to the country we are not informed of it.

The fear that the Southern school public will be "demoralized" by a yearly gift of some $8,000,000, which would afford less than $2 per capita for each school child, leaving then the expenditure less than one-fourth per capita of Massachusetts, is not well grounded. National aid for education, in every possible form, has been showered upon the fourteen Northern States west of the Alleghanies for more than a generation; and to-day these States lead the world in the zeal of home effort for the common school. The Southern people are no exceptional race, and the voting of moderate national aid to encourage, stimulate, and finally help to establish a good six-months' country district and an eight-months' graded town school of the American type, is one of the most imperative duties of Congress. It required years of work, with two Presidential vetoes, to secure the agricultural and mechanical college land grant to all the States in 1862. It will not require half the time to carry a judicious measure for national aid in the present emergency of Southern educational affairs.

A. D. MAYO.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I have a letter of three pages from a colored clergyman at Mobile, Ala.:

MOBILE, ALA., January 2, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I have kindly been asked by Hon. Philip Joseph, of this city, to write you a letter concerning the colored schools or colored school system of the State of Georgia. I am a native of Georgia and in my earlier life was engaged in the public schools. I am now a preacher in the Methodist itinerancy in the State of Alabama. Now, so far as the schools in the State of Georgia are concerned, I will say I believe we have only one large school in the State that gets any public fund; that is the Atlanta University, that gets $8,000 annually; there are other graded schools that get smaller amounts. Most all of the larger towns in the State have public schools, I mean the cities, that run from six to nine months during the year. The teachers are paid according to the grade of their certificate, and in all cases the white teachers through the State get the largest amount of salary. Now, as to what we call the country schools, in the more rural districts, I must say that in most places those poor people have only the advantage of about three months' school. There may be in some localities a little longer session, but no country school in the State of Georgia ever runs nine months and very few of them run longer than three months in the year, and most places the colored teachers get very poor pay. I have given you a synopsis of the colored schools of the State of Georgia which is simply true. I hope this may do the good for which it is intended, and ere long that grand old Blair educational bill shall take the lead of education for the colored.

I am sincerely, yours for the bill,

M. L. BLALOCK.

Mr. H. W. BLAIR, Washington, D. C.

The Florida School Journal, published at Lake City, Fla., in its issue of November, 1887, contains a letter from A. J. Russell, State superintendent of public instruction, from which I extract the following paragraph:

There are many teachers who have managed to barely scrape through, and obtained a third-class certificate and are content to rest upon that. Some I know of, who have held just such a certificate for five, six, and even ten years, sometimes re-examined, sometimes the certificate is hastily renewed by the county superintendent by writing the word "renewed" across the face of the old certificate for the coming year.

From Columbia, S. C., I have this letter:

OFFICE OF THE CAROLINA TEACHER,
Columbia, S. C., December 23, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR: Since the receipt of yours of the 14th I have done such work in the line it proposed as my limited time would allow, and have started your letter on the rounds in order that each may have the benefit of your timely suggestions without subjecting you to so much writing.

The inclosed letters will show something of the sentiment among Southern editors, and the same feeling is gaining favor among the people. They begin to realize, as they never have before, the necessity of education for all, and when they get to this point the provisions of the "Blair bill" are not objectionable at all.

Inclosed you will also find editorials clipped from the Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier, which I am sure will interest you, if they have not already come to your notice. I shall send you all such that come to me.

Please accept my thanks for the "educational bill," as well as for your kind letter, and believe me,

Very respectfully, yours,

W. L. BELL.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

THE BLAIR BILL.

It is often easier to procure the passage of a bad law, or one of doubtful utility, than one that promises the greatest good to the greatest number. When men's passions are excited they are quick enough to put their will into shape if they have the power, and in legislative bodies the majority has the power. Laws for the general welfare, however, are everybody's business alike, and the rule is, in most cases, that these wait for consideration until others of particular interest are out of the way.

The history of the Blair educational bill illustrates this rule. It is one of the most important measures to the whole country that has been introduced into Congress in the last twenty years. It looks to the education of the people to qualify them to be good citizens, and provides for the education of a class of persons who are numbered by the million, and who will not be educated if the bill fails to become a law. Yet it has been held back and suffered to remain inoperative, while hundreds of measures of little or no concern, except to politicians or limited private interests, have been hurried through Congress without difficulty.

We believe that the Blair bill will pass sooner or later. Every day shows more and more the need of some such law. Every year that is lost means so many more ignorant and dangerous voters who have passed beyond hope of redemption or improvement. The bill ought to pass this session, since it has been delayed too long already. The Senate Committee on Education are unanimous in favor of its passage in the shape in which it passed the Senate in the last Congress, and it will probably be sent to the House at an early day.

No more important measure will demand the attention of that body, even at this most important session, and the Congressmen from the South particularly, who know how urgently help is needed here in the cause of popular education, should see to it that the Blair bill has a fair and full hearing.

* * * * * * *

Southern Congressmen who have opposed the Blair bill heretofore would do well to study closely the educational situation in the South and satisfy themselves whether there has been any such material progress in that direction in the past year as to warrant them in continuing their opposition. The Southern States might do a vast deal more than they are now doing for the cause of popular education and still make but little impression on the number of illiterates. And there is no prospect of their doing very much more with their own means for many years to come.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has left the Chamber, but with regard to his reference to the State of Florida, I wish to say that I hope it is correct. I do not desire to disparage anything he says, but I put against it what I have just read from there.

The late Mr. Taft, in his report to the Commissioner of Education this year, occupies five or six pages. The States are brought into comparison by the relation of actual attendance to the number of school children of the ages between six and fourteen, that is, within the years during which the common schools generally give education, and it seems by that test that Florida has only some 50 per cent. of children who attend school, while in New Hampshire by the same test 88.1 per cent. attend, and in Vermont almost 100 per cent., and so generally throughout the North the average attendance is nearly, if not quite, double what it is in the Southern States of those who are of the educatable age.

If therefore the schools were of the same quality, attendance for the same number of days would carry instruction to only about one-half the number of pupils in the one case, and in the other case the entire number would be receiving instruction.

Then, further, the character of the schools has quite as much to do with the benefit received from them as the length of time of attendance. This description of the condition, inevitable from the circumstances surrounding them of a great number of the Southern schools which must be the case in Florida, as well as elsewhere, shows that the attendance for one hundred days on one of their schools would not probably be 50 per cent. of the like benefit there would be in attendance on Northern schools, which have competent teachers, suitable plant, and everything necessary for instruction.

I will not trouble the Senate further at the present time with the general discussion of the question; but as various points may come up I shall take part in the debate only as I am compelled to do so incidentally while others are speaking. Having confined myself to a presentation of the testimony in this case brought down to the present time by competent witnesses from all parts of the country, I submit to the Senate that if there ever was any need of national aid to education that need continues and is increasing and not diminishing.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 26, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting statement of receipts and expenditures of that Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1885; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

MARRIAGE BETWEEN WHITE MEN AND INDIAN WOMEN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 928) in relation to the marriage of white men and Indian women, recalled by resolution of the Senate on the 25th instant; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A communication from the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact in the French spoliation claim "Ship Joanna," was erroneously referred to the Committee on War Claims. Without objection, that committee will be discharged from its further consideration, and the same will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. HOPKINS, of Virginia, for four days.

DIRECT TAX.

Mr. ELLIOTT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 5996) to settle claims arising out of the execution of the direct-tax act of Congress, in Beaufort district, South Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS REFERRED UNDER THE RULE.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JACKSON. Within the last ten days I have, in accordance with the rules of this House, sent to the desk and had deposited in the petition-box, for reference, certain petitions addressed to the Congress, asking for legislation, that have not appeared in the RECORD at the proper time. One of these petitions was from the citizens of my district against the admission of the Territory of Utah as a State, another was a petition asking Congress to increase the compensation of fourth-class postmasters, and a third was a numerously-signed petition by citizens of Pennsylvania asking the passage of a law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors within the District of Columbia.

In the case of neither petition did there appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the following morning any notice of its presentation. Under the rule lists of these petitions are made up in the Clerk's office and sent for publication in the RECORD. I made inquiry, and in one case the petition clerk made search and found one of the petitions some time after among other papers, and on the following day it appeared noted in the RECORD. The others have not as yet been noticed in the RECORD, so far as I have been able to learn. One of these was presented yesterday, and another on Friday last, and the other on the Thursday preceding.

I desire, therefore, to call the attention of the proper officers of the House to some apparent oversight or clog in the machinery regulating this part of the proceedings of the House.

I need not say that this is a matter of considerable importance, not only to members of Congress themselves but to the people whom they represent, who desire to know that their petitions are duly presented and referred, as the right of petition is one of the highest privileges of the citizen, and one that should in no manner be abridged. A notice in the RECORD at the time is the only way our constituents have of knowing that their petitions have been properly presented to Congress. The officers of the House are usually so accurate and careful in their duties that I know they will prefer to have their attention called to the matters I have stated. I am aware that the new rules make it very difficult to properly refer petitions promptly, and it may be that the Clerk is not furnished with sufficient help for the purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that as this is operating under a new rule, it is possible some friction arises at first; but the Chair hopes and believes that time will remove the trouble of which the gentleman complains.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD the memorial of the Society of Friends of the United States, England, Canada, and Ireland, asking the establishment of an international tribunal to secure peace on earth and good-will amongst men.

There was no objection.

The memorial is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The memorial of members of the Society of Friends assembled in a conference at Richmond, Ind., the 28th, 29th, and 30th of 9th month, 1887, respectfully showeth: That we have met in conference as delegates from the religious Society of Friends in America, with the presence and concurrence of delegates from England and Ireland, to consider the great question of peace and good-will among nations. The people of the world are now happily at peace with each other. Let us seize this opportunity to prepare for a perpetual peace. Surely the sword has devoured enough, and the time has come for Christian nations to heed the message from heaven to the shepherds of Judea on the advent of the Messiah, "On earth peace, good-will towards men."

We rejoice to observe that successive administrations during the last twenty years have been seeking to introduce arbitration as a means of settling international disputes. We especially rejoice that during the last Congress the United States Senate unanimously approved a bill designed to promote an agreement between all independent American nations to submit any future differences to arbitration.

We hail as an evidence of advanced Christian civilization and of true national fraternity the memorial in favor of international arbitration presented to our President by 233 members of the British House of Commons, who pledge themselves to urge their government to accept a treaty with the United States containing provisions by which any dispute which may arise between the two nations shall be peaceably adjusted by this means.

It is time that the two great English-speaking nations, having the blood of a common ancestry and making Christianity their common law, should add to their constitutional guaranties of civil liberty a united pledge of perpetual peace.

We desire that our beloved country may respond to the aforementioned memorial, and that our President may be authorized to propose to the Queen of Great Britain and to arrange with her government that arbitration shall in future be used as the means of settling any disputes between the two countries which can not be adjusted by diplomatic agency.

Desiring that our heavenly Father, who can raise up nations to honor Him, or chastise them for disobedience, may give you wisdom and willingness to do what is right, in His love and fear, we are, with great respect, your friends.

Signed on behalf and by authority of the aforesaid conference.

AUGUSTINE JONES,
Chairman.

WM. G. HUBBARD,
HANNAH W. BLACKBURN,
Secretaries.

Timothy B. Hussey, for New England Yearly Meeting; Mary J. Weaver, for New York Yearly Meeting; Joseph Sholl, for Philadelphia Yearly Meeting; Mary W. Thomas, for Baltimore Yearly Meeting; Abigail F. Mendenhall, for North Carolina Yearly Meeting; Edward G. Wood, for Ohio Yearly Meeting; Daniel Hill, for Indiana Yearly Meeting; Barnabas C. Hobbs, for Western Yearly Meeting; John T. COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Speaker, soon after the announcement of the committees of the House I requested the Speaker to excuse me from service on the Committee on Claims, but I presume that in consequence of his sickness no action has been taken upon the request. I now renew it, and respectfully ask to be excused from service on that committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Indiana will be granted.

There was no objection.

SECTION 683, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. CASWELL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1860) to amend section 683 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CITIZENS OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. CASWELL also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. 1809) to authorize United States courts to take cognizance of cases in which a citizen of the District of Columbia is a party, the same as if he were a citizen of a State; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN NEWARK, N. J.

Mr. PARKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 1648) providing for the holding of United States courts in the city of Newark, N. J.; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the amendment and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN J. COUGHLIN.

Mr. SHAW, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5539) for the relief of John J. Coughlin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM GRAY.

Mr. SHAW also, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 750) for the relief of William Gray; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 4271) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

FORFEITURE OF LANDS GRANTED TO MINNESOTA.

Mr. LIND, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 5997) to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted to the State of Minnesota; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of committees for reports has been completed.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask the attention of the Chair for a moment. When the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries was called in the morning hour the other morning, a bill they desired to have considered had not been printed, and that committee was passed over. I ask unanimous consent that that committee be called after the business now pending in the morning hour is disposed of. The bill makes some slight amendments to the shipping act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. PERKINS. If I understood the gentleman from Maine correctly, I do not desire to interpose any objection to his request. I understood him to ask that the bill he indicates be taken up in addition to the morning hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. At the expiration of the morning hour. The Chair hears no objection to the gentleman's request. The call of committees for the consideration of bills in the morning hour rests with the Committee on Indian Affairs. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PERKINS. Before the gentleman from Arkansas proceeds I would like to ask if we can not come to some understanding with regard to the time to be consumed by the pending bill. I will say to the Chair there are a number of gentlemen who would like to speak five or six or seven minutes; and I ask unanimous consent that the time of the morning hour be extended twenty minutes, so that we may have thirty minutes for debate on each side and then twenty minutes for the consideration of amendments. If there be no objection that arrangement will give thirty minutes to those in opposition and thirty minutes to the friends of the bill.

Mr. MCADOO. If that request is granted, I wish to claim the time in opposition.

Mr. PERKINS. I am not particular who controls the time in opposition. We propose to give thirty minutes to those against the bill, and I am quite willing the gentleman from New Jersey should control that time.

Mr. WEAVER. And there will be no objection to amendments being offered?

Mr. PERKINS. The amendments can be offered during the twenty minutes we have provided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to extending the morning hour twenty minutes, as requested by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS]?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

COINAGE OF THREE-CENT PIECES.

Mr. BLAND. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas to yield to me that I may make a report.

Mr. PEEL. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BLAND, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4342) to discontinue the coinage of the three-cent piece; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EXEMPLIFICATIONS OF LAND PATENTS.

Mr. MCRAE. The gentleman from Arkansas yields to me to make a report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not in order in the morning hour to entertain requests to submit reports. Hereafter such requests will not be entertained.

Mr. MCRAE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend section 451 of the Revised Statutes, regulating fees for the exemplifications of land patents, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NEW YORK INDIAN LANDS, KANSAS.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1406) to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that all who listened to the discussion of this bill yesterday discovered that the only question in dispute, or that ever has been in dispute, is as to the price to be paid for these lands. That, I think, was clearly shown yesterday. Notwithstanding the argument made here in opposition to this bill, in reference to the title to these lands, the case narrowed itself down to that one proposition; and while upon this subject I desire to call the attention of my friend from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] to the fact that he, unintentionally of course, to some extent misled the House with regard to the title held by the Indians, the allottees of these lands. I understood him to say repeatedly that they owned the fee title in the property. If that was true, then Congress would have no right to interfere with the lands one way or the other. If they owned the fee—in other words, if the patent had issued from the Government to these allottees, or to any other individuals—the question would be beyond Congressional action, and would be a matter entirely for the courts. In order that the House may correctly and fully understand the real title, the real rights, which these allottees acquired under these allotments, I ask to have the Clerk read the portion which I have marked of the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs accompanying his report made to the Forty-seventh Congress, which was alluded to yesterday by my friend from Louisiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Under these provisions, thirty-two New York Indians removed to and remained in the territory now embraced in the State of Kansas prior to June 16, 1860, at which time the honorable Secretary of the Interior approved to them selections of 320 acres, for which, on the 14th of September, 1860, certificates of allotment were issued to each of said reservees, the certificates specifying that the allotments were for the exclusive use and benefit of the reservees, and were not subject to be alienated in fee, leased, or otherwise disposed of, except to the United States.

Mr. PEEL. The House will observe from the statement made by the Commissioner that the allottees received certificates of allotment only, in which it was particularly specified that the lands allotted were inalienable, and that the allottees were not allowed to lease, assign, or transfer those lands to any one except the Government of the United States. That was the real character of the title, and the only title which these allottees acquired under that allotment.

Now, the question for the House is, how much is that worth? It has been said, and not controverted, that these allottees can not acquire possession of this property. Notwithstanding any wrongs that may have been done to them originally in this matter, I think it is not profitable to stop to recount those wrongs at this late day, and the only question for this House to determine is whether $2.50 per acre, as provided in this bill, is sufficient consideration for the character of title which these allottees hold under the certificates of allotment. That is simply a question of opinion, and I for one have no objection to any gentleman offering an amendment to increase the compensation to what his judgment may dictate as right and proper. Let any gentleman who thinks fit offer such amendment, and let the House vote upon the question. In my judgment, when you take into consideration the flimsy title which the allottees acquired under these allotments, which title really amounts to nothing when you consider that possession of the lands is beyond their control or right, $2.50 or $3 an acre, or some such price, would be ample for these settlers to pay. This, Mr. Speaker, is all that I desire to say on this occasion. I only took the floor for the purpose of informing the House, by the extract which I have had read, of the real character of the title in question and the point really at issue in this controversy. I now yield the floor to my colleague [Mr. PERKINS], the gentleman who has charge of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. RYAN], of Kansas.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill proceeds upon the theory that thirty-two of these New York Indians have at least some color of right to the lands in controversy. In view of our relations as a nation to the Indians this may, perhaps, be proper. We ought rather to err on the side of justice toward those who are wards of the nation than otherwise.

But the fact is, Mr. Speaker, that those Indians have not in law even a color of right to these lands. Under the original treaty they had a right to a tribal occupation of these lands. It was provided by that treaty that a patent might be issued to them under the provisions of the law of 1830. The law of 1830 provided that a fee-simple title could only be granted to the tribe, to Indians only in their tribal capacity, and then only to hold the same so long as they occupied them. The law expressly provided that when occupation ceased the lands should revert to the United States.

Now, it is not pretended here by anybody that there ever was any tribal occupation of those lands by the New York Indians. Undoubtedly the object of that treaty was to get those tribes of New York Indians out of the State of New York and upon this Western territory; but they did not choose to go. They did not go, and the $400,000 provided by that treaty for their removal was never used, because the Indians never went. It is claimed that a few individual members of these New York tribes did go out there and did live for a time upon these lands in common; and in 1860 the Department, without any more authority than I have, issued allotment certificates to those thirty-two Indians for these lands.

Now, it will not be pretended that there was any authority of law for that. The Secretary had no more right in law to issue a certificate to them than to me. It was provided by the treaty itself that if these several tribes or any of these tribes should occupy these lands they might use the lands among themselves either in common or in severalty; but all authority for that purpose was confined strictly to the Indians themselves and left to their own discretion. There never was any tribal authority whatever for the severalty occupation of these thirty-two Indians; and they subsequently abandoned absolutely these lands. If they ever occupied them in 1860 at all, there is no evidence that they ever occupied them since that time; but I am assured by men who have been well acquainted with the oldest settlers there for many years—the United States attorney for the district of Kansas told me this morning—that since that time certainly these Indians had never occupied these lands; they had voluntarily gone back to their tribe, the place where their ancestors were buried, as all Indians usually do who for a time go roaming over the country.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Have these lands been held subject to entry at the local land office in Kansas since 1860?

Mr. RYAN. Certainly not.

Mr. CUTCHEON. They have been segregated from the public domain?

Mr. RYAN. Certainly; because of the unlawful action of the Department in allotting them to these Indians.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the residue of time remaining to the friends of this bill, and will hereafter yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON]. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] on the other side can proceed now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas has sixteen minutes remaining.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to yield six minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PAYSON. I will reserve that time until the gentleman from New Jersey shall have been heard.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, I can best present my objections to this bill by stating the story of these Indians as I understand the case. In 1838 there was in the State of New York a remnant of the once powerful Six Nations of Indians, probably the greatest confederation of the aborigines of this continent, whose savage valor is conspicuous in our history. The State of New York was being rapidly settled. The irrepressible tide of white immigration made it apparent to the Indians that they must go with their red brethren to the West. The United States Government selected as a western reservation for these Indians about 1,800,000 acres in the then Territory of Kansas. By a solemn treaty with the Indians this land was set apart for the New York tribes of Indians, whether in that State or in the State of Wisconsin, and a removal fund of some $400,000 was provided, which, however, was never paid out. After this treaty had been made between the Indians and the Government, two hundred and fifty of these semi-civilized Indians, under the leadership of one Dr. Hogeboom, removed to the State of Kansas and located upon this reservation. From that time up to the year 1860 these lands were not public lands, but were the Indian reservation of the New York Indians and known as such to all persons. One provision of the treaty was that the Government would allot to each individual member of these Indian tribes 320 acres.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman permit me a moment?

Mr. MCADOO. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not wish to trespass on the gentleman's time, but I know he desires to state the facts accurately.

Mr. MCADOO. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish, therefore, to call the gentleman's attention to a mistake into which he is falling. The treaty provides that a patent shall issue to the tribe, and confers upon the tribe the right to make individual selections and allotments; but there is no authority of that kind reserved to the Government of the United States.

Mr. MCADOO. But the Government of the United States sent out commissioners for the purpose of making allotments; and they did make allotments in 1860. Now, right here is a question between the gentleman from Kansas and myself. Yesterday I asked him whether these lands had been allotted to these thirty-two individual Indians who resided on the reservation, before the land had been opened to public settlement or afterward. He said it was afterward.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me explain——

Mr. MCADOO. At least I so understood him.

Mr. PERKINS. If the gentleman will permit me, I will repeat what I said. I said that in 1858, when the then Secretary of the Interior decided that these lands were public lands, some of the Indians called his attention to the fact that they had acquired rights under these treaties; and commissioners were sent out who investigated the facts, and found that there were thirty-two Indians upon the reservation. Then, in 1860, the Secretary issued his proclamation opening these lands to settlement. But the allotments were made before.

Mr. McADOO. As to that I will in a few moments read the report of the Indian Commissioner. In 1858 or 1860 the United States Government sent out a commission to find out what had become of these two hundred and fifty Indians who had removed from the State of New York. The commissioner took a great deal of evidence as to the history of this settlement in Kansas. He found that there were thirty-two Indians remaining on this reservation. And, Mr. Speaker, the evidence taken by this commissioner as to the treatment of these comparatively civilized, peaceful red men, the real pioneers in that settlement, would, if these men were anything but Indians, if they had white, black, or yellow skins, excite the universal sympathy of all mankind. The sworn evidence presents a sad story, and not overcreditable to us in our dealing with this strange race.

Mr. Speaker, I will read a few extracts to this House from the evidence presented on the part of the settlers upon these lands as to what these semi-civilized, helpless people endured at the hands—it may not be of the men who now occupy the lands—but at the hands of the men who were then surrounding them and pouring into this the most fertile portion of the then Territory of Kansas.

Dr. Block swears he went onto the New York Indian lands in 1853, and remained there until 1858, when he was kicked about, and had his house torn down one night by a man named Keller, when he left.

Sally Abner swears she went onto the New York Indian lands in 1853, on Indian Creek, and that about three months afterwards their house was burned down, with all her furniture.

Sally Littleman swears she came to Kansas twenty-one years ago (that is, in 1838). One year ago she was threatened by a man named Perry, when she and her husband left and went to the house of C. Seth. Soon after the death of her husband she returned to her place and found Bassmore Hutton in possession, who told her she should not live there nor cultivate the land. Last spring Mike Hadrick, from Missouri, borrowed her two-horse wagon and did not return it. In 1856 Riply borrowed her husband's oxen to break, and then drove them to Missouri and kept them. Five years ago three ponies were stolen, and her husband found them in possession of one Thompson and brought them home, and soon after three men, armed with guns, came and took them.

Daniel Martin swears he came to Kansas in 1854, and went onto the New York Indian tract in 1855, and was driven off by a white man, who threatened to shoot him if he did not leave, and he went and settled on land near the Osage River, where he now resides.

Angelina Charters swears she came to Kansas fourteen years ago (1845), and went directly onto the New York Indian lands near the Little Osage River, and built a house, but "there was so much disturbance and threatening made by the whites, and such hard times, that she left, and a white man named Atkins took the house and claim and sold it to another man."

Mutah Gideon Williams swears she came to Kansas in 1839; that her husband was murdered by two white men, Jack Miller and Tom Morrow, who cut his throat a year ago last fall.

Now, sir, a great deal has been said, and can truthfully be said, and a great deal will be said on behalf of the white settlers on these lands, and we are following our usual course in dealing with Indians when the House draws away from the side of these unfortunate and wronged red men and gives its entire sympathy to the white pioneers of the West. Civilization, busy and complacent, has little time for the case of these children of Hagar. Now these simple and poor people from New York, who were in many cases as much civilized as their white neighbors, were as much entitled to justice as any white men on these Kansas lands.

In my judgment it is not a matter to excite laughter, this story of one of these humble women who was induced by the solemn treaty of our Government to leave her native State of New York, leave the forests and hills, the valleys and the lakes to which she and her people had been accustomed from a time unknown to history, and go to the then wild, unwooded plains of Kansas, where she was so maltreated, subjected to indignity, robbed, cheated, and ruthlessly driven from her new home, and where her people were treated as though they had no rights under our Government or claims on our common humanity.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] disputes as to the time these allotments were made, and as to whether these were public lands at the time they were made. I will read to the House from the statement of Mr. Hayt, the former Indian Commissioner. Here is a statement in a nutshell so far as the right and title of these red men to these lands are concerned:

Under the treaty of 1838 the New York Indians were entitled to 1,824,000 acres of land in Kansas, and a removal fund of $400,000, which the United States never provided. Notwithstanding the failure of the United States in this regard, portions of the Indians removed to Kansas subsequent to the treaty, with a view to making that country their permanent home, but on account of their rapid depletion in number from sickness a majority afterwards returned to New York.

By decision of April 19, 1858, the honorable Secretary of the Interior held that those of the New York Indians who had not removed had thereby forfeited their title to the reserve, and that the same should be opened to settlement; but in the execution of said decision, and prior to the proclamation of December, 1860, opening the lands to settlement, the allotments under consideration were made to the thirty-two Indians who were then in Kansas, and certificates were issued to them therefor.

It follows, therefore, that an equitable interest in fee in the lands vested in these Indians, by virtue of the grant contained in the treaty at the date of their removal and long prior to the settlement of Kansas, although the evidence of title did not issue until 1860.

The first link in the chain of this title is the treaty made with this tribe of Indians. Under that treaty the tribe became the possessor of this tract of 1,824,000 acres upon a condition-subsequent; that is, that they should avail themselves, or any number of them should avail themselves, of the treaty within a limited time. Two hundred and fifty of these people, accepting the solemn pledge of the Government, went on these lands and settled there. But, sir, when the Government came to make these allotments they found from the hard treatment they had endured, from the change of climate to which they had been subjected, but thirty-two of these poor people remained upon the lands, and to them allotment was made. Now, the first individual members of that tribe having gone there before the period mentioned in the treaty had expired, they acquired a title, and now have an individual title to these lands. Why, Mr. Speaker, the very fact that this bill is before Congress, the fact that it has been in many preceding Congresses, is the best argument as to the right and title of these red men to the land claimed in Kansas; for if this was a part of the public domain, if these white men went on it and settled under the ordinary rules established by the Government and made their settlements, then they are the legal owners, and can so claim before a court of law or in the Department of the Interior.

I wish to call the attention of the House to one or two features of this bill which to me are somewhat suspicious.

I notice in the first section of the bill not alone are the men who actually occupy these lands to buy them at $1.25, as first provided, and now amended and increased to $2.50 per acre, but tenants are also to be permitted to purchase them. What is the meaning of that word "tenant" in this bill? We are asked as a Congress to do justice to innocent white settlers who did not know their title was clouded by this Indian treaty when they settled upon these lands and went on to cultivate them. But who are these tenants? Why are they to be protected and cared for? To whom are they the tenants? Who is their landlord? They are the tenants of speculators in Western lands, tenants it may be of those who, with savage ferocity, lacking common honesty and genuine civilization, drove off at the muzzle of the shotgun or the point of the knife these Indians from the claims which had been allotted to them and installed in their place their own tenants. They and their kind will be beneficiaries under this bill as it now reads.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the late able Commissioner of Indian Affairs who made this terse and vigorous statement in opposition to this bill when it was before Congress on a former occasion suggested what to my mind is the proper course to be pursued in regard to this measure, that it be recommitted, and that these lands be sold for something akin to their market value for the benefit of these Indians. I have little doubt, sir, and I call the attention of the House to the fact, that as these lands are located in Bourbon County, Kansas, a most fertile portion of the State, they are worth to-day, if sold in open market, not less than $5 an acre.

A MEMBER. Not less than twenty.

Mr. McADOO. A gentleman suggests $20 an acre; but if they are sold by the Government to these people now occupying them for $3.75, or $4, or $5 an acre, the margin between that sum and the actual open market value of the lands will do more than compensate these settlers for any improvements they might have put upon them.

Before yielding the floor I wish to give notice to gentlemen advocating this bill that I will move its recommittal to the Committee on Indian Affairs with instructions, and I enter that motion now.

I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has eight minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. McADOO. I yield four minutes of that to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

SPECIAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

On motion of Mr. BURNES, the bill (H. R. 4271) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes, returned from the Senate with amendments, was taken from the Speaker's table, the amendments ordered to be printed and numbered, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

NEW YORK INDIAN LANDS, KANSAS.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say but a word in reference to the bill which has been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, upon the question raised by the gentlemen making or favoring that report as to whether the fee-simple title to the lands in question was in the United States or in the Indians themselves.

It seems to me, sir, that the report of the Secretary of the Interior at that time and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs settles that question beyond all dispute, and I ask particular attention to the following extracts from the report of E. A. Hayt, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, bearing date March 29, 1878.

Under these provisions [the treaty in question] thirty-two New York Indians removed to and remained in the territory now embraced in the State of Kansas prior to June 16, 1860, at which time the honorable Secretary of the Interior approved to them selections of 320 acres each, for which, on the 14th of September, 1860, certificates of allotment were issued to each of said reservees, the certificates specifying that the selections were for the exclusive use and benefit of the reservees, and were not subject to be alienated in fee, leased, or otherwise disposed of, except to the United States.

* * * * * * *

Under the treaty of 1838 the New York Indians were entitled to 1,824,000 acres of land in Kansas, and a removal fund of $400,000, which the United States never provided. Notwithstanding the failure of the United States in this regard, portions of the Indians removed to Kansas subsequent to the treaty, with a view to making that country their permanent home, but on account of their rapid depletion in number from sickness, a majority afterwards returned to New York.

By decision of April 19, 1858, the honorable Secretary of the Interior held that those of the New York Indians who had not removed had thereby forfeited their title to the reserve, and that the same should be opened to settlement; but in the execution of said decision, and prior to the proclamation of December, 1860, opening the lands to settlement, the allotments under consideration were made to the thirty-two Indians who were then in Kansas, and certificates were issued to them therefor.

It follows, therefore, that an equitable interest in fee in the lands vested in these Indians, by virtue of the grant contained in the treaty, at the date of their removal and long prior to the settlement of Kansas, although the evidence of title did not issue until 1860.

* * * * * * *

The lands are in Bourbon County, one of the richest and most fertile counties in the State. They are within a few miles of Fort Scott, and near the line of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad—the Missouri River, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad running nearly through the center of the body of the lands, which lie in close proximity to the corner of townships 23 and 24 in ranges 24 and 25 east. The records of the General Land Office show that there is scarcely a vacant forty-acre tract of land in or near the townships named. With these facts in view, it is safe to assume that the several tracts were, in 1873, worth the full amount at which they were appraised, and that, in view of the rapid development of the country, and the present price of uncultivated lands in that vicinity, there has, at least, been no depreciation in their value.

The settlers have been in possession of these lands for years, to the exclusion of the Indians, and have had every advantage and opportunity to pay for the lands from the products of the same.

The title of the Indians is, under treaty stipulations, similar to those with the Shawnee, Miami, and other Indians in Kansas, whose lands have been held by the Supreme Court of the United States (5 Wall., 737) to be excluded from the jurisdiction of the State, and not subject to taxation, and it is fairly presumable that the settlers have availed themselves of the benefit arising under this decision.

Also, I ask your attention to the following extract from a communication of Secretary Schurz of date April 6, 1878:

In accordance with the request of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, based upon the report of the commissioners, the Department approved of the selections of the thirty-two Indians in question, and, on the 14th of September following, certificates of allotment were issued to each of said reservees.

In 1858 petitions from settlers in Kansas were presented to the Department asking that the lands be opened to settlement, and in December, 1860, the lands known as the New York Indian lands in Kansas, excepting those allotted, were accordingly opened to settlement.

But a short time elapsed, however, before troubles between the settlers and the Indians were of constant occurrence, and in 1873, when the act of February 19, 1873 (17 Stat., 466), was passed, the commissioners appointed thereunder to appraise the lands of the thirty-two New York Indians stated in their report that none of the allottees were to be found upon the lands. The files of the Indian Office show abundant proof that they did not voluntarily relinquish their occupation.

Be this question as it may, the act of February 19, 1873, fully recognized the right of the Indians or of their heirs to the proceeds of the lands; and applications are now before the Department, which when perfected will call by legal representation for nearly all of the proceeds of the allotments of lands in question.

By the act of February 19, 1873, provision was made for the benefit of certain settlers upon and occupants of certain Indian lands in Kansas, permitting such settlers to enter and purchase at the proper land office said lands so occupied by them, in tracts not exceeding 160 acres, according to the Government surveys, on paying therefor in lawful money of the United States the appraised value of said lands respectively, to be ascertained by three disinterested and competent appraisers, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, who shall examine in person each tract and report under oath its value, exclusive of all improvements; and patents shall issue therefor as in other cases, but no sale shall be made under this act for less than $3.75 per acre.

From these extracts it is evident that the Department of the Interior took the same view that I take in reference to this question, namely, that under the terms of the treaty in question these Indians were entitled to that land; and that the thirty-two persons who made their settlements and to whom allotments were made by the Department under the terms of the treaty, were vested with an equitable fee-simple title in the lands because of the considerations which operated upon them to execute the treaty which was supposed at the time to be equally beneficial both to the United States Government and to the Indians.

Mr. PAYSON. Let me interrupt the gentleman to ask, if that be true, how can Congress divest them of their fee?

Mr. HOOKER. Congress has not the power to divest them of their fee at all. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as I have shown, says that the Indians have an equitable title; in other words, that they have an equitable interest in fee in the lands. Congress, therefore, can not divest them of that equitable interest, but it can do this: it can and ought to carry out, in terms, the purpose and intent of the treaty by which the Indians acquired this equitable title in the lands; and whether the fee-simple has been divested out of the United States, and vested in the Indians absolutely or not, can there be any reason, I ask gentlemen, for the proposition here suggested, that the land shall be sold at an arbitrary price? The report of a commission which went out to investigate this question under the act of 1873 decided these lands to be worth $4 an acre. That was some twelve or fifteen years ago; and if the lands were worth $4 an acre at that time, I ask if it is reasonable to suppose that they have been diminishing in value since, and are less valuable to-day than they were then?

And if there be a disposition to divest the Indians of their equitable title and give it to actual settlers upon this part of the public domain, let it be done by a commission on appraisement, which is provided for in the proposition I had the honor to submit when I was a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Forty-seventh Congress, in connection with my friend, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], who was the chairman of the subcommittee. In that Congress—the Forty-seventh—we recommended that the bill then pending upon this subject, if passed, should be amended by striking out from the fifteenth and sixteenth lines of section 1 the words "at not less than $3 per acre," and inserting in lieu of it "the appraised value of the said tracts, as heretofore ascertained by the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with the provisions of the act of February 19, 1873, entitled 'An act to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas.'"

We proposed that this amendment should be made a part of that act, and that the lands should be sold to the actual settlers at the appraised value. That became a law, but the settlers afterwards applied for an extension of the time allowed them for payment. That was granted to the actual settlers. So, Mr. Speaker, whether there has been or has not been an absolute divestiture of title from the United States and the vesting of title in the Indians themselves, they are entitled to the equitable fee, and ought to be paid and are entitled to be paid for the lands, if at all, what they are worth according to an appraisement made in this manner and not according to an arbitrary sum to be fixed by Congress, which has no power to do this, whether it be with reference to the property of an Indian or a white man.

I append as a part of my remarks the second article of the treaty referred to:

ARTICLE 2. In consideration of the above cession and relinquishment on the part of the tribes of the New York Indians, and in order to manifest the deep interest of the United States in the future peace and prosperity of the New York Indians, the United States agree to set apart the following tract of country, situated directly west of the State of Missouri, as a permanent home for all the New York Indians now residing in the State of New York, or in Wisconsin, or elsewhere in the United States, who have no permanent homes, which said country is described as follows, to wit: Beginning on the west line of the State of Missouri, at the northeast corner of the Cherokee tract, and running thence north along the west line of the State of Missouri 27 miles to the southerly line of the Miami lands; thence west so far as shall be necessary, by running a line at right angles and parallel to the west line aforesaid to the Osage lands, and thence easterly along the Osage and Cherokee lands to the place of beginning, to include 1,824,000 acres of land, being 320 acres for each soul of said Indians as their numbers are at present computed. To have and to hold the same in fee-simple to the said tribes or nations of Indians, by patent from the President of the United States, issued in conformity with the provisions of the third section of the act entitled "An act to provide for an exchange of lands with the Indians residing in any of the States or Territories, and for their removal west of the Mississippi," approved on the 28th day of May, 1830, with full power and authority in the said Indians to divide said lands among the different tribes, nations, or bands in severalty, with the right to sell and convey to and from each other, under such laws and regulations as may be adopted by the respective tribes, acting by themselves or by a general council of the said New York Indians, acting for all the tribes collectively. It is understood and agreed that the above-described country is intended as a future home for the following tribes, to wit: the Senecas, Onondagas, Cayugas, Tuscaroras, Oneidas, St. Regis, Stockbridges, Munsees, and Brothertowns, residing in the State of New York, and the same is to be divided equally among them according to their respective numbers, as mentioned in a schedule hereunto annexed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey has four minutes more than the Chair formerly stated. He has now eight minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. MCADOO. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. BLANCHARD. Perhaps I stated the question a little too broadly on yesterday, when I said that the legal fee in these lands was in the Indians. I find upon a re-examination of the report of the then Commissioner of Indian Affairs that the status of the Indians with reference to these lands before his bureau was that they had an equitable interest in fee in these lands.

The bill under consideration, Mr. Speaker, permits these lands to be sold at a dollar and a quarter an acre. The Committee on Indian Affairs have recommended that those words, "a dollar and a quarter an acre," be stricken out, and the words "two dollars and a half an acre" be inserted. Two dollars and a half an acre is not one-third of the actual cash value at this time of those lands. There should be legislation on this subject as well to protect the Indians as the settlers, but that legislation should be in accordance with the recommendations of the Indian Bureau. I therefore send up an amendment, which I offer as a substitute for the amendment recommended by the committee. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for the amendment offered by the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Strike out in lines 15 and 16 of section 1 the words "at $1.25 per acre," and insert in lieu thereof "the appraised value of said tract as heretofore ascertained by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with the provisions of the act of February 19, 1873, entitled 'An act to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas.'"

Also, strike out in line 4 of section 2 the words "$3 per acre" and insert "the appraised value."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands this amendment is pending.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If that amendment be adopted it will make this bill exactly conform to the recommendations of the Indian Bureau, and it will then be doing substantial justice alike to these Indians and these settlers. I hold in my hand a statement of the appraised value of these lands as made under the act of Congress of 1873; and that appraisement shows that not one acre of these lands was appraised for less than $3.75 an acre, and it went from that up to $10 an acre.

Mr. LONG. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONG. Does this matter as to appraisement provide for deducting the value derived from improvements?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the instructions to these appraisers when they were sent out by the Interior Department was to appraise the actual value of the lands exclusive of the improvements.

Mr. LONG. That would be the appraised value provided for by your amendment.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes; the appraised value provided for by my amendment is without regard to the improvements.

Mr. LONG. Has the gentleman any idea what the value would be after deducting the improvements?

Mr. BLANCHARD. The value after deducting the improvements is exactly the value placed upon the lands by these appraisers from $3.75 to $10 an acre. The improvements belong to the settlers. The lands belong to these Indians to the extent they have an equitable interest in fee in them.

Mr. McADOO. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. PAYSON. I think the differences of opinion which have been expressed with reference to this bill grow out of what I regard to be an entire misapprehension on the part of the gentlemen who have spoken on the other side of the Chamber as to the legal status of this land. I undertake to say here at the outset that it is susceptible of the very easiest demonstration that notwithstanding the opinion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whose report has been referred to so frequently here, these Indians, the beneficiaries of this bill, have no interest whatever in these lands and never had an interest in them beyond the bare right of occupancy. That expression may be as well understood by gentlemen who are laymen as by lawyers; and to the demonstration of that proposition I now address myself.

First, the Government, at that time, did not deal with Indians as Indians, and this treaty which was made with the Six Nations dealt with them as a nation and as an entirety. The treaty provided in terms that if they should remove from the lands which they then occupied in New York and Wisconsin to the then Territory of Kansas, a reservation containing 1,800,000 acres of land should be set apart for them, and also provided that when they should remove, as a tribe, the Indians themselves might make the allotment of this land to the individual members, not exceeding 320 acres to each individual; and provided for an evidence of title, which was that a patent should issue to the tribe under the provision of the act of 1830, which is this:

> That the United States will cause a patent or grant to be made and executed to them for the same, provided that such land shall revert to the United States if the Indians shall become extinct or cease to occupy the same.

There is the provision of the act of Congress providing for the patent which was to issue to these Indians as a tribe, allotments to be made by the Indians themselves among themselves; and whatever rights passed by reason of the treaty, by reason of the act of Congress, and by reason of the patent, were to cease and determine if the Indians should become extinct or should cease to occupy the lands. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is undisputed as to the history of this transaction, that the Six Nations never attempted to remove to Kansas. As a tribe they never accepted any of the provisions of this treaty. No steps ever were taken by them, as a tribe, with reference to it in any way whatever. That is undisputed. A few scattered Indians—no estimate makes the number exceed 300—went off one by one, to the promised land. They got there and went upon these lands; but, as is stated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, by reason of sickness in consequence of their not being used to the climate, the blizzards sweeping across the prairies of Kansas—by reason of sickness, discontent, and dislike to the locality, nearly all of them returned to New York. But in 1860, thirty-two of those Indians were still found there.

At that time the land was declared to be public land, but because these few Indians were still remaining, the Secretary of the Interior, without warrant of law—and I ask the special attention to this point of gentlemen who are insisting here that there was a fee, or any interest in the fee, or any legal right whatever on the part of these Indians to those lands, I ask the attention of those gentlemen to this point—the Secretary of the Interior, without any authority of law whatever, did appoint a commission and did make these allotments. Now, what right attached by reason of that action, even assuming that the Secretary had the power to appoint the commission? It simply gave the Indians the right of occupancy of a half section of land each, and that alone. Nobody will pretend anything else from the treaty, from the statute, or from the action of the Department under it; and even if a patent had gone from the Government to the tribe, as a tribe, as soon as the occupancy of the land ceased the right of the Indians to it would be determined.

Nobody disputes or will dispute that proposition. I agree that the then Commissioner of Indian Affairs says that an equitable interest in the fee attached. That was his opinion. It might have been good for him, but I do not believe that any lawyer who looks at the language of the treaty and of the statute will indorse that opinion. But the Indians abandoned these lands. Where is there anything tending to show that they were driven off by people who went out there? Where is there anything tending to show that the right of occupancy which they had was taken from them by force? There is nothing of the kind in the record; and I appeal to the authority of the gentleman from Kansas that the fact is as I have stated, that there was an abandonment by the Indians of their right of occupancy.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the gentleman yield for a correction—the reading of two lines from the official record?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I read from the letter of Secretary Schurz:

> The files of the Indian Office show abundant proof that they did not voluntarily relinquish their occupation.

Mr. PAYSON. Well, Mr. Speaker, nothing has appeared in this debate as to that. At all events, the occupancy has ceased, and here are left these twenty-four half sections.

Mr. LONG. Thirty-two.

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman from Massachusetts corrects me by saying thirty-two, but I am accurate in saying twenty-four, because eight of these tracts have been already provided for by legislation. The Indians abandoned their occupancy, and settlers went upon these lands.

Some gentleman on the other side asked the question, why the rights of those settlers were not recognized by the Interior Department. For the plain reason, as has been stated time and again in this House, that when any public land is placed in a state of reservation by the Interior Department no settlement rights are ever recognized by any local land office. This land was placed in a state of reservation by the then Secretary of the Interior, so that to-day it stands as public land, free and clear from any claim of title save the record evidence of its reservation in behalf of these Indians, which reservation, until removed by competent authority, prevents the settlers from acquiring any right. So the question here is, how much shall these men be compelled to pay? I do not sympathize, Mr. Speaker, with the sentimentality which runs out in favor of an Indian who can not be found or heard of as against a white man who is in possession of Government lands.

In the race that has been going on, and that is going on to-day in the Southwest between the cattle-men and the settlers, I have always insisted that I preferred babies to calves on the public lands. So I am in favor of protecting the men who went out in the early day upon the frontiers of Western Kansas. I know something of the privations which they endured, because I was a pioneer myself in the early days in Illinois. I went there when the smoke was still rising from the tepees of the Indians in Northern Illinois. I know something, I say, of the hardships of pioneer life, and I am not in favor now and here of compelling men who endured what those men endured to pay more for the little homes they have built up for themselves there than their neighbors round about them were compelled to pay, a dollar and a quarter an acre.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman has stated that these Indians could not be found. Perhaps he is not aware that in the files of the Interior Department is a list of the names of these Indians, which list I hold in my hands.

Mr. PAYSON. I know all about that. I have made my statement because the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS], whom I do not now see in his seat, stated, when advocating this bill yesterday, that the committee was not advised of the whereabouts of any of these Indians, except some two or three; that the rest of them could not be found.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Here is a list of their names.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes; but that document was issued years ago.

Mr. HOOKER. I would like to ask the gentleman what title the Government of the United States acquired to the lands on Green Bay, which the Indians ceded? Was it simply a title of occupancy?

Mr. PAYSON. No, sir. The Government acquired because the lands ceded in Wisconsin had passed by patent, as these lands never did.

Mr. HOOKER. Did they not pass by the treaty?

Mr. PAYSON. Nothing of that kind passed by the treaty. Let me ask my friend from Mississippi whether the treaty does not provide that the evidence of title shall be a patent issued under the provisions of the statute of 1830?

Mr. HOOKER. Unquestionably. But the point of my inquiry is whether the Government ceded these lands to the Indians in Kansas on account of their relinquishing to the Government of the United States all their right, title, and interest in the lands on Green Bay?

Mr. PAYSON. Why, Mr. Speaker, that question does not arise here in any way.

This bill is sufficiently liberal for any rights of the Indians, and in my judgment imposes all the burdens on the settlers which should be borne by them, and I hope it may pass as reported by the committee.

Mr. McADOO. I desire to ask how much of my time remains.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr.

McADOO] has four minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Kansas ten.

Mr. McADOO. I reserve my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This time runs into the twenty minutes' extension.

Mr. PERKINS. I have, as I understand, ten minutes for debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. WEAVER. I reserve my time. I simply wish to offer an amendment when the proper occasion arrives.

Mr. PERKINS. Then I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB], a member of the committee.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, it can not be pressed upon the attention of this House with too much emphasis that these Indians, about whom we are talking to-day, never acquired any right, legal or equitable, under the treaty stipulations of 1838. The provisions of that treaty were never carried into effect; and if they were, there was by the stipulations of that treaty an express reservation of the rights of the United States to this land as provided by the treaty of 1830; and by reference to the provisions of the latter treaty it is perfectly clear that no provision was ever made under the operation of which these Indians, either as a tribe or as individuals, could acquire a legal, fee-simple, absolute title to these lands; they could only acquire the right of occupancy.

But I have no time to press this point. I allude to it simply for the purpose of showing that even if these thirty-two Indians held these lands under the treaty stipulations of 1838, they as individuals never had a legal title to them. But inasmuch as the stipulations of the treaty of 1838 were never executed, these separate thirty-two Indians never acquired any right whatever under that treaty.

It is true that the Interior Department did undertake at a particular time to set apart to these thirty-two Indians a certain quantity of land for each; but this was done without any authority of law whatever, and the act of the Interior Department in that behalf was wholly and entirely void. It is true that under the act of 1873 the action of the Interior Department was so far recognized that these lands which, under the direction of the Interior Department, had been assigned to these thirty-two Indians were reserved from the entry then provided as to other lands.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARE].

Mr. COBB. I would like one minute to answer a question just asked me.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield a moment more to the gentleman.

Mr. COBB. It was my purpose, Mr. Speaker, if I had the time, to assail directly this report of the Indian Commissioner, and to show that any concessions therein made are not based upon law and can not be accepted as the ground of any action on our part. The whole argument here in opposition to the report of the committee is based upon that report of the Indian Commissioner; and if I had opportunity I could show beyond question that the conclusions of this officer as to fact and law are erroneous; so that any argument founded upon that report must mislead this House.

Mr. PARKER. Why, then, do you propose to pay the Indians anything?

Mr. COBB. Simply because I want to do abundant justice to them; that is all.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, these Indians never did have a perfect legal or equitable title to these lands. It may be admitted that they had a colorable equitable title in this, that the Government, in its action in reference to these Indians, gave them the right of occupancy; but in case of alienation these lands were to be sold to no other party than the Government of the United States. Simple occupancy, then, with power to alienate to the Government, is their title, a title which could not, so far as title is concerned, have any marketable value. The settler comes in and by purchase extinguishes the title of the Government. Thus we have the colorable equity of the Indian and the title by purchase of the settler.

Mr. McADOO. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him where there is evidence that any of these white settlers ever purchased any of these lands?

Mr. HARE. I so understood.

Mr. McADOO. No, sir; they never made any purchase whatever.

Mr. HARE. I understood that to be the case.

Mr McADOO. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. HARE. I may be mistaken about that, but they settled on them with a view to purchase. The Indian title is what is under consideration. The Indian holds a bare equity by reason of occupancy of these lands, and in case of alienation can only sell to the United States. They can not have title which will be equal to its marketable value. Therefore, in adjusting the value of the title the Indians hold, it should be measured with that of the settler.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HOOKER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas, before he closes, if the Indians got no title to the lands under the treaty of 1838, did the Government of the United States get any title to the Green Bay lands which the Indians conceded to the United States as consideration?

Mr. PERKINS. I believe I am entitled to the floor, and will yield for a moment to the gentleman from Iowa to make his motion.

Mr. WEAVER. I move to strike out the words "cash at the time of purchase," in lines 16 and 17, and insert in lieu thereof "four annual installments, with interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum from the date of the first payment." I also move to amend by striking out section 2 of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I will reserve the remaining portion of my time, yielding to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McADOO], who has a few moments remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas has four minutes of his time remaining, and the gentleman from New Jersey also has four minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. McADOO. There are pending, Mr. Speaker, two or three motions, one from myself, to recommit, one from the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], and one from the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

While I have the floor I now propose a substitute for the one proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana, which is substantially the same as that offered by him, except it provides these settlers shall pay for these lands by installments. But I wish before doing that to take notice of the remark made by the gentleman from Illinois.

The gentleman from Illinois has said with a great deal of enthusiasm that he is in favor of babes instead of steers on the public domain. I agree with him. I am also an advocate of babies instead of steers, but I do not wish these fathers to get play-grounds for their progeny by driving away the red men at the muzzle of the gun and the point of the bowie-knife from their own lands.

I agree as to the sentimentality surrounding this bill. I have often witnessed a torrent of mingled indignation and sympathy poured out on questions of racial sentiment in this House. I have seen this House stirred from its lowest depths to its highest altitude in behalf of the Chinese murdered in Wyoming Territory; and I would like to see an occasional ebullition of like feeling on the part of the House for the poor Indians massacred in Kansas, from whom their lands were taken by force.

Now I ask the Clerk to read the amendment which I have offered as a substitute to the one proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], which is the one suggested by the former Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out and insert as follows:

"At any time within one year from the passage of this act said lands so occupied by them in tracts not exceeding 160 acres, according to the Government surveys, at not less than the appraised value of the said tracts, as heretofore ascertained by the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with the provisions of the act of February 19, 1873, entitled 'An act to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas,' payment to be made in three annual installments, one-third at date of entry, one-third at the end of one year from date of entry, and the balance in two years from date of entry, with interest on said amounts, respectively, from date of entry, at 6 per cent. per annum; and the moneys arising from such sales shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States in trust for, and to be paid to, said Indians, respectively, to whom said certificates were issued, or to their heirs, upon satisfactory proof of their identity to the Secretary of the Interior, at any time within three years from the passage of this act; and in case such proof is not made within the time specified, then the proceeds of such sale, or so much thereof as shall not have been paid under the provisions of this act, shall become a part of the public moneys of the United States.

"SEC. 2. That any lands not entered by such settlers at the expiration of one year from the passage of this act shall be offered at public sale, in the usual manner, at not less than the appraised value, notice of said sale to be given by public advertisement of not less than thirty days; and any tract or tracts not then sold, together with such tracts as have heretofore been or may hereafter be entered, and wherein default has been made in the payment of any portion of the purchase-money, or the interest thereon, as herein or heretofore provided, shall be thereafter subject to private entry at the appraised value of said tracts."

Mr. McADOO. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Louisiana to that substitute.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will accept it at the proper time.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield now one minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. WEAVER. A word in explanation of the amendment I have offered. The bill as reported from the committee compels the settlers to pay $2.50 per acre, or $400 for each quarter-section, and to do that within twelve months, or, under the second section of the bill, the lands must be offered at public sale and they will be sold out.

The effect of that section is to run the settler directly into the trap of the loan agent and compel him to borrow money to meet that payment inside of twelve months. Hence I offer the amendment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, in conclusion of this debate I desire to ask the House simply whether it will do justice to these men who for thirty years have occupied these lands in good faith, who have improved them and cultivated them, and sustained themselves and those dependent upon them by their labor upon them, or whether it will run wild with the sentiment that ignores justice to everybody and does justice to none.

There is not a beneficiary of these allottees, or any one of the allottees, who can be found to oppose this bill. In fact, in the Forty-seventh Congress the beneficiaries had an attorney to represent them before the Committee on Indian Affairs, asking legislation giving the right to sell the lands to the settlers at $2.50 an acre, and no protest against such action has ever come up or been made by any one of them in opposition to such legislation.

It is not shown by any evidence on file, nor is it claimed by any one conversant with the facts, that any of the Indians in question have occupied any one of these thirty-two pieces of land allotted to them.

There has never been, so far as the evidence shows, any actual occupancy by the Indians. The thirty-two Indians were simply within the borders of that great reservation, embracing 1,824,000 acres; but it is not claimed or shown in any manner that they ever occupied a single acre of the thirty-two pieces allowed to them. The settlers were there upon the lands, and the Indians selected lands already occupied in good faith by actual settlers because of the fact that two years before the Secretary of the Interior had decided that these lands had not been secured by the Indians and were public lands. These settlers went upon them in pursuance of that decision, and have held possession continuously.

Now, the treaty in question was made in 1838, and was promulgated and approved in 1840, and by its terms these Indians were to go upon the lands within five years. If you observed the reading of the dates and figures given by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] you saw that not one of the Indians went there within the five years as required by the treaty.

As was shown by the arguments of my colleague [Mr. RYAN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], there was to be a tribal occupation of the lands in obedience to the terms of the treaty. The treaty was made with them as a tribe, and they were to occupy the lands as a tribe, and it was not reserved under the treaty that the Government should allot in severalty land to any of the individual Indians who chose to go upon them. But the committee, over-anxious to do justice to the allottees, have been willing to do more than justice to the Indians, and provide in this manner that they shall be the actual beneficiaries under the treaty, allowing at the same time these settlers who have been working and starving there for years an opportunity to protect and secure their homes.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time allowed for debate has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. I now demand the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill and pending amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question will be taken upon the committee's amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee propose to amend the bill by striking out "$1.25," where it occurs in the first section, and inserting "$2.50."

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I offered a substitute for that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the text of the bill must first be perfected before the substitute is in order.

The amendment of the committee was adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now upon the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to accept the substitute proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey for mine, which is the recommendation of the Indian Bureau.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that will be done.

Mr. WEAVER. I believe the vote should first be taken upon my amendment, which was offered before the substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman from Louisiana to accept the substitute of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. WEAVER. But my amendment is to the text of the bill. It perfects the bill, and I am satisfied the House desires that amendment to be adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the Chair understands the gentleman from Louisiana to accept the substitute of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. WEAVER. That is a very different question. I never consented to that substitute and the House has never consented. The gentleman from Louisiana may accept it, but it is for the House to act upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the Chair will put the question to the House again. Is there objection to the substitute?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I would inquire whether the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa should not first be voted upon before action is taken on the substitute?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the Chair will cause the several amendments to be reported and voted upon in the order in which they were presented.

The first amendment has been adopted.

The question now is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa, which has been read.

Mr. WEAVER. My amendment also provides for striking out the second section of the bill, which is the penalty section.

Mr. BLANCHARD. My acceptance of the substitute of the gentleman from New Jersey places his substitute where mine was. Are we not entitled to a vote upon that substitute before we are called upon to vote upon the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman has no power to accept a substitute for the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair put that question to the House, and objection was made.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER], which is in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. WEAVER. It is not a substitute, but simply an amendment to perfect the bill.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. WEAVER; and on a division there were—ayes 49, noes 79.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey, which has been read.

Mr. WEAVER. I offered two amendments. There is another amendment pending, to strike out the second section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We have not yet come to the second section. The question is on the substitute of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let it be read.

The proposed substitute was again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was not advised that the substitute of the gentleman from New Jersey applied to the second section as well as the first; so that, properly, the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa will take precedence. The vote will therefore be on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the second section of the bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Do we take the vote now on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly. We perfect the text before taking the vote on the substitute.

Mr. WEAVER. Let the second section, proposed to be stricken out, be read.

The Clerk read the second section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That any lands not entered by such settlers at the expiration of twelve months from the passage of this act shall be offered at public sale, in the usual manner, at not less than $3 per acre, notice of said sale to be given by public advertisement of not less than thirty days; and any tract or tracts not then sold shall be thereafter subject to private entry at $3 per acre.

Mr. WEAVER. If that section remains, the settlers will be sold out in less than twelve months or be compelled to borrow money from a loan agent.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Was it not that amendment that the House voted down awhile ago?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was not. The extension of twenty minutes for the consideration of this bill has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended ten minutes for the purpose of completing the bill.

Mr. MCADOO. I object.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey to the fact that I think it was not understood we were consuming any part of the twenty minutes in debate, and it certainly is not ten minutes since the debate closed. It was my understanding that we had reserved twenty minutes to dispose of the amendments.

Mr. MCADOO. If I withdraw my objection, shall we have a vote on my substitute?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly. I do not limit my request to the extension of ten minutes, but until we complete the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the time will be extended ten minutes.

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. WEAVER, there were—ayes 21, noes 109.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 81, noes 83.

Mr. MCADOO. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 37 members voting therefor.

Mr. COBB. Let the proposed substitute be read.

The substitute was again read.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 99, nays 151, not voting 73; as follows:

So the proposed substitute was not agreed to.

Mr. RYAN. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. GLOVER. I desire my name to be called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in his seat when his name was called?

Mr. GLOVER. I was in the lobby, but not in the Hall.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's vote cannot be received.

Mr. GLOVER. I should have voted "ay."

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. CARLTON with Mr. WEST.

Mr. STOCKDALE with Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio.

Mr. COCKRAN with Mr. HAYDEN.

Mr. TRACEY with Mr. DE LANO.

Mr. SPINOLA with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. MANSUR with Mr. MCCULLOGH.

Mr. MCCORMICK with Mr. PENINGTON, until the 28th.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Virginia, with Mr. HITT, for this day.

Mr. BIGGS with Mr. BAYNE.

Mr. SHIVELY with Mr. WILBER.

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts, with Mr. LONG.

Mr. KILGORE with Mr. THOMAS H. B. BROWNE.

Mr. WISE with Mr. BUCHANAN, on this vote.

Mr. BELMONT with Mr. BINGHAM, on this vote.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I am paired with Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, on all political questions. There is no political question with reference to this matter in regard to Indians, and I have voted.

The Clerk read the pair, as follows.

Mr. STOCKDALE and Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, are paired on all political questions, not to break a quorum.

Mr. SOWDEN. I was paired with Mr. DARLINGTON, of Pennsylvania, who tells me he voted "no;" I desire to vote "ay."

Mr. PENINGTON. I am paired with Mr. MCCORMICK, but only on political questions, and I have voted.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. MCADOO. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MCADOO. Is my motion to recommit pending?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. MCADOO. And has the time allowed by the House for the consideration of this bill expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. Perhaps the Chair did not understand, but when the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] asked whether I would permit a vote upon his amendment, I suggested that I would do so if it could be understood that we were to complete the bill, and I think that was agreed to by the other side and by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey had an amendment to recommit the bill——

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly. I said to him that I would permit a vote upon that amendment with the understanding that we were to complete the bill to-day, and that was understood.

Mr. SPRINGER. The difficulty can be removed in this way: Let the gentleman move to proceed to business on the House Calendar. That motion is in order, I believe, and this bill is the first on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will put the proposition to the House. Is there objection to the completion of this bill now?

Mr. MCADOO. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] objects. The hour has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. I move now to proceed to the consideration of business upon the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order at this time until the unfinished business on the Calendar has been disposed of. The unfinished business is the bank bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to postpone the further consideration of the unfinished business for this day. The gentleman in charge of the bill is sick and absent.

Mr. WEAVER. What is the reason assigned for the motion?

Mr. SPRINGER. That the gentleman in charge of the bill is sick.

Mr. WEAVER. That is all right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to postpone the further consideration of the unfinished business for this day.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to proceed to the consideration of business upon the House Calendar.

Mr. MASON. Is not that the regular order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes, that would be the regular order. The motion is not necessary. The Clerk will call the bills in their order upon the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1477) to subdivide the western judicial district of Louisiana.

Mr. SPRINGER. That bill is not on this Calendar. It has been disposed of, I think.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has not been disposed of.

Mr. SPRINGER. That bill is with the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk states that it is on the House Calendar.

Mr. PERKINS. Then, if it is in order, I move that that bill be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill can be considered and disposed of in a very few minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the postponement of the bill the title of which has just been read?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all processes from the circuit and district courts of the United States for the western district of Louisiana against defendants residing in the parishes of St. Landry, St. Martin, Cameron, Calcasieu, La Fayette, and Vermillion, in the State of Louisiana, shall be returned to said courts at Opelousas; all processes against defendants residing in the parishes of Rapides, Vernon, Avoyelles, Catahoula, Grant, and Winn shall be returned to Alexandria; all processes against defendants residing in the parishes of Caddo, De Soto, Bossier, Webster, Claiborne, Bienville, Natchitoches, Red River, Sabine, Lincoln, and Jackson shall be returned to Shreveport; and all processes against defendants residing in the parishes of Ouachita, Franklin, Richland, Morehouse, East Carroll, West Carroll, Madison, Tensas, Concordia, Union, and Caldwell shall be returned to Monroe.

SEC. 2. That if there be more than one defendant and they reside in different divisions of the district, the plaintiff may sue in either division, and send duplicate writ or writs to the other defendants; and the said writs, when executed and returned into the court from which they issued, shall constitute one suit and be proceeded in accordingly. Where the defendant is a non-resident of the district, suit may be brought in any division where property or the defendant is found.

SEC. 3. That all issues of fact triable in either of said courts shall be tried in the division where the defendant or one of the defendants resides, unless by consent of all parties the case shall be removed to some other division.

SEC. 4. That all prosecutions for crimes or offenses hereafter committed in either of the divisions shall be cognizable within such division.

SEC. 5. That all grand and petit jurors summoned for service in each division shall be residents of such division.

SEC. 6. That a deputy clerk of the district court shall be appointed at each place in the four divisions of said western district where said court is required to be held, each of whom, in the absence of the clerk, may exercise all the official powers of clerk at the place and within the division for which he is appointed.

SEC. 7. That all crimes and offenses heretofore committed within the divisions created by this act shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 8. That causes removed from any court of the State of Louisiana into the circuit court of the United States within said western district shall be removed to the circuit in the division in which such State court is held.

Amendments of the Committee on the Judiciary:

Insert the word "and" before the word "Sabine;" strike out the words "Lincoln and Jackson" in line 13 of section 1; strike out the word "and" in line 16; insert after the word "Caldwell," in line 17 of said section, the words "Jackson and Lincoln." Further amend by striking out of the second section the words "where the defendant is a non-resident of the district, suit may be brought in any division where property or the defendant is found." Also amend by striking out the third section and inserting the following, to wit: "That all causes triable in either of said courts shall be tried in the division to which the process is returnable under the provisions of this act, unless by consent of all parties the cause be removed to some other division in said district." Also amend by striking out section 7, and placing it as a proviso to section 4, and numbering section 8 as section 7.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill and amendments meet the approval of the entire delegation from Louisiana, and I now ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken on the amendments in gross.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CULBERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state——

Mr. PERKINS. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the unfinished business.

Mr. PAYSON. Which is what?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is some mistake in the Calendar, which the Chair will have corrected. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows, from Rule XXIV, clause 6:

After the hour under the preceding clause shall have been occupied it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may have been engaged at an adjournment, and at the same time each day thereafter, other than the first and third Mondays, until disposed of; and it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of all other unfinished business whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In pursuance of the ruling made by the Chair the other day, upon the bill from the Committee on Banking and Currency, the Chair would hold that the regular order now is the unfinished business.

NEW YORK INDIAN LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. MCADOO. I ask unanimous consent to make an explanation. I have received from the Reporter the notes as to what occurred between the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] and myself relative to the extension of time for the consideration of the bill for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas. In order that it may be determined whether the extension of time was for ten minutes or until the consideration of the bill was completed, I desire to have the notes read. I wish to do what is fair and honorable in this matter; and if it was the understanding that the time should be extended until the bill should be completed, of course I desire that understanding should be carried out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to make a statement. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MCADOO. I ask the Clerk to read what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey to the fact that I think it was not understood we were consuming any part of the twenty minutes in debate, and it certainly is not more than ten minutes since the debate closed. It was my understanding that we had reserved twenty minutes to dispose of the amendments.

Mr. MCADOO. If I withdraw my objection, shall we have a vote on my substitute?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly. I do not limit my request to the extension of ten minutes, but until we complete the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the time will be extended ten minutes.

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. WEAVER, there were—ayes 21, noes 109.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MCADOO. It will be observed that the request of the gentleman from Kansas for an extension of time was not limited to ten minutes, but until the bill should be completed. The Chair, however, put the question to the House as a request for an extension of ten minutes. I think there has been a misunderstanding; and as I wish to do what is right and fair in this matter, I, regardless of my opposition to the bill, ask unanimous consent to withdraw the objection I made a few minutes ago to continuing the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the objection of the gentleman from New Jersey is withdrawn.

Mr. PERKINS. I now demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas calls up the unfinished business, being the bill (H. R. 1406) to provide for the selling of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas, and demands the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading.

Mr. MCADOO. My motion to recommit the bill was pending after the vote had been taken on the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question has already been ordered upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill, which is the pending question.

Mr. MCADOO. I now renew my motion to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order at this time. The pending question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MCADOO. I now renew my motion to recommit the bill.

The motion of Mr. MCADOO was not agreed to, there being—ayes 35, noes 114.

Mr. PERKINS. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The question having been taken,

The SPEAKER pro tempore said: In the opinion of the Chair the ayes have it.

Mr. MCADOO. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being—ayes 22, noes 156; less than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. PERKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY, OF NICARAGUA.

On motion of Mr. NORWOOD, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Foreign Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5615) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, and the same was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT OF NAVIGATION LAWS.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 5728) to amend the laws relating to navigation, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. ROGERS in the chair, and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5728) to amend the laws relating to navigation, and for other purposes; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of an act to abolish certain fees for official services to American vessels, and to amend the laws relating to shipping commissioners, seamen, and owners of vessels, and for other purposes, approved June 19, 1886, be amended by striking out of the sixth and seventh lines of the subproviso of said section the words "of the country in which such port is situated, or on the cargoes of such vessels," and substituting in lieu thereof the words "of such country, or on the cargoes of such vessels; but this proviso shall not be held to be inconsistent with the special regulation by foreign countries of duties and other charges on their own vessels, and the cargoes thereof, engaged in their coasting trade, or with the existence between such countries and other states of reciprocal stipulations founded on special conditions and equivalents, and thus not within the treatment of American vessels under the most-favored nation clause in treaties between the United States and such countries."

SEC. 2. That section 1 of the act hereinbefore mentioned be amended, in the third line from the end of the section, by inserting after the words "shipping commissioners" the words "and clerks of steam-boat inspectors, and such allowances for fees of United States marshals and witnesses for services under the steam-boat-inspection laws, and for expenses of steam-boat inspectors provided for by section 4461 of the Revised Statutes."

SEC. 3. That section 4581 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by section 7 of chapter 121 of the public laws passed by the Forty-eighth Congress, is amended by striking out all after the word "thereof," in the fifth line, and inserting in lieu thereof as follows: "If any seaman, after his discharge, shall have incurred any expense for board or other necessaries, or for reasonable charges for medical care and nursing, at the place of his discharge, before shipping again, or for transportation to the United States, such expense shall be paid out of the arrears of wages and extra wages received by the consular officer, which shall be retained for that purpose, and the balance only paid over to such seaman; and if such arrears and extra wages are not sufficient to defray such expense, the deficiency shall be paid from the fund in the Treasury for the maintenance and transportation of destitute American seamen."

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will explain the provisions of the bill briefly. It is reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and amends the shipping acts of 1884 and 1886 so as to carry out their original intention.

Section 1 of this act amends section 11 of the shipping act of 1886, in reference to tonnage tax; and the amendment I may add is suggested by the Secretary of State in view of certain questions which have arisen under the act of 1886. Sections 11 and 12 of the shipping act of 1886 tendered to foreign countries which would remove from American vessels all tonnage taxes, light-house dues, and other equivalent charges, a similar reciprocal treatment of their vessels on the part of the United States, and authorized the President to issue his proclamation suspending the collection of tonnage tax on vessels of such foreign countries as reciprocated with us.

Under that provision of the shipping act of 1886 the President has issued his proclamation in certain cases where certain countries have abolished charges on American vessels. But having done this in the case of certain Spanish-American countries, certain European countries have made claim that they, under what is known as the "most-favored-nation" clause in treaties with this country, are entitled to have their vessels exempted from tonnage tax and light-house dues. The Secretary of State has very properly responded to such a claim that the exemptions which we have given to vessels of certain foreign countries have been in consequence of certain considerations given by them; that if these other foreign countries will give the same compensation we will give the same exemption to them; and that the "most-favored-nation" clause in our treaties does not authorize them to make a claim to similar favors unless they give equal compensation.

In order to make this clear, according to the original intention of the shipping act of 1886, and to carry out the construction which the Secretary of State and the Attorney-General have put on the shipping act of 1886, it has been thought advisable to embody in this amendment to that act of 1886 this interpretation and this limitation, and this is simply the effect of the first section of this bill.

The second section of the bill supplies certain omissions which were made in the shipping act of 1886, when the fees for certain services to American vessels were abolished, and a provision adopted that officers receiving payment in whole or in part from fees should be paid thereafter from the general Treasury, instead of from the fund which previously accumulated from these fees. In making that transfer it was discovered subsequently that two classes of expenditures had been omitted, namely, the compensation of clerks of inspectors of steam-vessels and the fees of witnesses in certain cases of collision. This omission is now supplied.

The third section of the bill amends the shipping act of 1884 in that section which relates to the care of distressed and sick American seamen in foreign ports. By the act of 1884 seamen could be discharged under the provisions of law in foreign ports on payment to the United States consul by the vessel of arrears of wages and one month's extra wages. And further provision was made that the consul, in ports where these seamen were discharged, should from that fund of arrears of wages and extra wages pay the board and necessaries required by the seaman and the expense of his transportation from the foreign port in which he then was to some port in the United States. The district court of the southern district of New York has held that the words "board" and "necessaries" used in the act of 1884 do not cover medical care and nursing, notwithstanding it was the intention in the use of these words to cover all necessary expenses to which the destitute American seaman was exposed in a foreign port until his return to this country. The amendment proposed by the bill inserts the words "medical attendance and nursing," in order to make the original intent of the bill clear, and provides distinctly, as was provided inferentially by the original act, that whatever expense there may be shall be paid from the arrears of wages and wages of such destitute seaman, and the balances from the fund appropriated annually by Congress for the relief of distressed American seamen in foreign ports and for their transportation to a port in the United States.

This, Mr. Chairman, covers all the propositions contained in the bill, which is unanimously recommended by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. It simply carries out the intent of Congress in enacting the shipping acts of 1884 and 1886.

Mr. COX. What nations made claim under the "most-favored-nation" clause?

Mr. DINGLEY. The Netherlands and Germany, I believe.

Mr. COX. The Secretary of State denied their claim.

Mr. DINGLEY. He did. The legal question involved was submitted to the Attorney-General, and his opinion fully sustains the Secretary of State in his construction of the "most-favored-nation" clause.

Mr. COX. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Will this first section of his bill have the effect of preventing similar claims from being made by any other foreign nations hereafter?

Mr. DINGLEY. They will to this extent: the Secretary of State in his negotiations with these claimants will be able to point distinctly to the fact that this was the intention of Congress in tendering to foreign countries exemption from tonnage tax.

Mr. COX. That would be the moral effect.

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes, sir. I may add for the information of the House that the claimants point to the technical words of the act to which this is an amendment to sustain their claim, and this amendment sets at rest all controversy as to the intention of Congress.

Mr. COX. This is to give, then, the moral effect of a construction by Congress to the Department of State?
